The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO member States. The annual report of the Committee of Experts covers numerous matters related to the application of ILO standards. The structure of the report, as modified in 2003, is divided into the following parts:

(a) The Reader's note provides indications on the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (their mandate, functioning and the institutional context in which they operate) (Part A, pages 37–41).

(b) Part I: the General Report describes the manner in which the Committee of Experts undertakes its work and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards, and it draws the attention to issues of general interest arising out of the Committee's work (Part A, pages 43–91).

(c) Part II: Observations concerning particular countries cover the sending of reports, the application of ratified Conventions (see section I), and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities (see section II) (Part A, pages 93–1099).

(d) Part III: General Survey, in which the Committee of Experts examines the state of the legislation and practice regarding a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations. This examination covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the given Conventions. The General Survey is published as a separate volume (Report III (Part B)) and this year it concerns the Workmen's Compensation (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 12); the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19); the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Recommendation, 1925 (No. 25);the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (Part VI); the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121); and the Employment Injury Benefits Recommendation, 1964 (No. 121) (Part B).

Overview of the ILO supervisory mechanisms

Since its creation in 1919, the mandate of the International Labour Organization (ILO) has included adopting international labour standards (comprising Conventions and Recommendations), promoting their application, encouraging ratification of Conventions, and the supervision of the application of international labour standards as a fundamental means of achieving the Organization's objectives. In order to monitor the progress of Member States in the application of international labour standards, the ILO has developed supervisory mechanisms which are unique at the international level. [1]

Under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, a number of obligations arise for Member States upon the adoption of international labour standards, including the requirement to submit newly adopted standards to national competent authorities and the obligation to report periodically on the measures taken to give effect to the provisions of unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

The ILO has a number of supervisory mechanisms through which the Organization examines the standards-related obligations of Member States that flow from ratified Conventions. This supervision occurs both in the context of a regular procedure through periodic reports (article 22 of the ILO Constitution), [2] as well as through special procedures based on representations or complaints to the Governing Body made by ILO constituents (articles 24 and 26 of the Constitution, respectively). Moreover, since 1950, a special procedure has existed whereby complaints relating to freedom of association are referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) of the Governing Body. The CFA may also examine complaints relating to Member States that have not ratified the relevant freedom of association Conventions.

Role of employers' and workers' organizations

As a natural consequence of its tripartite structure, the ILO was the first international organization to associate the social partners directly in its activities. The participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the supervisory mechanisms is recognized in the ILO Constitution under article 23, paragraph 2, which provides that reports and information submitted by governments in accordance with articles 19 and 22 must be communicated to the representative organizations.

Representative employers' and workers' organizations may submit observations on the reports concerning the application of international labour standards to their governments. They may, for instance, draw attention to a discrepancy in law or practice regarding the application of a ratified Convention. Furthermore, any employers' or workers' organization may submit observations on the application of international labour standards directly to the Office. The Office will then forward these to the government concerned, which will have an opportunity to respond before the observations are examined by the Committee of Experts except in exceptional circumstances. [3]

[1] For detailed information on all the supervisory procedures, see ILO Handbook of Procedures Relating to International Labour Conventions and Recommendations, International Labour Standards Department, Geneva, 2019.

[2] Reports are requested every three years for the fundamental Conventions and governance Conventions, and from now on, every six years for other Conventions. In fact, at its 334th Session the Governing Body decided to expand the reporting cycle for the latter category of Conventions from five to six years (GB.334/INS/5). Reports are due for groups of Conventions according to subject matter. Following the amendment of the 1998 Declaration, the Governing Body decided to apply a three-year cycle for the fundamental Conventions on occupational safety and health as from 2024 (GB.346/INS/3/3).

Origins of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

During the early years of the ILO, both the adoption of international labour standards and the regular supervisory work were undertaken within the framework of the plenary sitting of the annual International Labour Conference. However, the considerable increase in the number of ratifications of Conventions rapidly led to a similarly significant increase in the number of annual reports submitted. It soon became clear that the plenary sitting of the Conference would not be able to examine all of the reports (submitted by Governments on the application of ratified Conventions) along with adopting international labour standards as well as considering other important matters. In response to this situation, the Conference in 1926 adopted a resolution [4] establishing on an annual basis a Conference Committee (subsequently named the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards) and requesting the Governing Body to appoint a technical committee (subsequently named the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations) which would be responsible for drawing up a report for the Conference. These two committees have become the two pillars of the ILO regular supervisory system.

Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

Composition

The Committee of Experts is composed of 20 members, who are outstanding legal experts at the national and international levels. The members of the Committee are appointed by the Governing Body upon the recommendation of its Officers based on proposals by the Director-General. Appointments are made in a personal capacity from among impartial persons of competence and independent standing drawn from all regions of the world, in order to enable the Committee to have at its disposal first-hand experience of different legal, economic and social systems. The appointments are made for renewable periods of three years. In 2002, the Committee decided that there would be a limit of 15 years' service for all members, representing a maximum of four renewals after the first three-year appointment. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee decided that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, which would be renewable once for a further three years. At the start of each session, the Committee would also elect a Reporter.

Work of the Committee

The Committee of Experts meets annually in November–December after a period of examination of reports by individual experts. In accordance with the mandate given by the Governing Body, [5] the Committee is called upon to examine the following:

[5] Terms of reference of the Committee of Experts, Minutes of the 103rd Session of the Governing Body (1947), Appendix XII, para. 37.

- the periodic reports under article 22 of the Constitution on the measures taken by Member States to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which they are parties;
- the information and reports concerning Conventions and Recommendations communicated by Member States in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution;
- information and reports on the measures taken by Member States in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution. [6]

The task of the Committee of Experts is to indicate the extent to which each Member State's legislation and practice are in conformity with ratified Conventions and the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their obligations under the ILO Constitution in relation to standards. In carrying out this task, the Committee adheres to its principles of independence, objectivity and impartiality. [7] The comments of the Committee of Experts on the fulfilment by Member States of their standards-related obligations take the form of either observations or direct requests. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They are reproduced in the annual report of the Committee of Experts, which is then submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June every year. Direct requests are not published in the report of the Committee of Experts, but are communicated directly to the government concerned and are available online. [8] In addition, the Committee of Experts examines, in the context of the General Survey, the state of the legislation and practice concerning a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations chosen by the Governing Body. [9] The General Survey is based on the reports submitted in accordance with articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, and it covers all Member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the concerned Conventions.

Report of the Committee of Experts

As a result of its work, the Committee produces an annual report. The report consists of two volumes.

The first volume (Report III (Part A)) [10] is divided into two parts:

- Part I: the General Report describes, on the one hand, the progress of the work of the Committee of Experts and specific matters relating to it that have been addressed by the Committee and, on the other hand, the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards.

[6] Article 35 covers the application of Conventions to non-metropolitan territories.

[7] General Report, para. 14.

[8] General Report, para. 82. Observations and direct requests are accessible through the NORMLEX database available at: www.ilo.org/normes.

[9] By virtue of the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008, a system of annual recurrent discussions in the framework of the Conference has been established to enable the Organization to gain a better understanding of the situation and varying needs of its members in relation to the four strategic objectives of the ILO, namely: employment; social protection; social dialogue and tripartism; and fundamental principles and rights at work. The Governing Body considered that the recurrent reports prepared by the Office for the purposes of the Conference discussion should benefit from the information on the law and practice of Member States contained in General Surveys, as well as from the outcome of the discussions of General Surveys by the Conference Committee. In principle, the subjects of General Surveys have therefore been aligned with the four strategic objectives of the ILO. The importance of the coordination between the General Surveys and recurrent discussions was reaffirmed in the framework of the adoption of a five-year cycle of recurrent discussions by the Governing Body in November 2016.

[10] This citation reflects the agenda of the International Labour Conference, which contains as a permanent item, item III relating to information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations.

- Part II: Observations concerning particular countries on the fulfilment of obligations in respect of the submission of reports, the application of ratified Conventions grouped by subject matter and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities.

The second volume contains the General Survey (Report III (Part B)).

Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference

Composition

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards is one of the two standing committees of the Conference. It is tripartite and therefore comprises representatives of governments, employers and workers. At each session, the Committee elects its Officers, which include a Chairperson (Government member), two Vice-Chairpersons (Employer member and Worker member) and a Reporter (Government member).

Work of the Committee

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards meets annually at the Conference usually in June. Pursuant to article 7 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Committee shall consider:

- measures taken to give effect to ratified Conventions (article 22 of the Constitution);
- reports communicated in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution (General Surveys);
- measures taken in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution (non-metropolitan territories).

The Committee is required to present its report to the plenary sitting of the Conference.

Following the independent technical examination carried out by the Committee of Experts, the proceedings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards provide an opportunity for the representatives of governments, employers and workers to examine together the manner in which States are fulfilling their standards-related obligations. Governments are able to elaborate on information previously supplied to the Committee of Experts, indicate any further measures taken or proposed since the last session of the Committee of Experts, draw attention to difficulties encountered in the fulfilment of obligations and seek guidance as to how to overcome such difficulties.

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discusses the report of the Committee of Experts, and the documents submitted by governments. The work of the Conference Committee starts with a general discussion based essentially on the General Report of the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee then discusses the General Survey. It also examines cases of serious failure to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. Finally, the Conference Committee examines a number of individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions which have been the subject of observations by the Committee of Experts. At the end of the discussion of each individual case, the Conference Committee adopts conclusions on the case in question.

In its report [11] submitted to the plenary sitting of the Conference for adoption, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards may invite the Member State whose case has been discussed to accept a technical assistance mission by the International Labour Office to increase its capacity to fulfil its obligations, or may propose other types of missions. The Conference Committee may also request a government to submit additional information or address specific concerns in its next report to the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee also draws the attention of the Conference to certain cases, such as cases of progress and cases of serious failure to comply with ratified Conventions.

[11] The report is published in the Record of Proceedings of the Conference. Since 2007, it has also been issued in a separate publication. See, for the last report, Conference Committee on the Application of Standards: Record of Proceedings, International Labour Conference, 112th Session, Geneva, 2024.

The Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

In numerous reports, the Committee of Experts has emphasized the importance of the spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility that has always existed in relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. It has accordingly become the practice for the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend the general discussion of the Conference Committee and the discussion on the General Survey as an observer, with the opportunity to address the Conference Committee at the opening of the general discussion and to make remarks at the end of the discussion on the General Survey. Similarly, the Employer and Worker Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to meet the Committee of Experts during its sessions and discuss issues of common interest within the framework of a special session held for that purpose.

Part I. General Report

I. Introduction

1. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, appointed by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to examine the information and reports submitted under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the Constitution by Member States of the International Labour Organization on the action taken with regard to Conventions and Recommendations, held its 95th Session from 25 November to 7 December 2024. The Committee has the honour to present its report to the Governing Body.

A. Composition of the Committee

2. The composition of the Committee is as follows: Mr Shinichi AGO (Japan), Ms Lia ATHANASSIOU (Greece), Ms Leila AZOURI (Lebanon), Mr James J. BRUDNEY (United States of America), Ms Graciela Josefina DIXON CATON (Panama), Mr José Roberto HERRERA VERGARA (Colombia), Mr Benedict Bakwaph KANYIP (Nigeria), Ms Irene KASHINDI (Kenya), Mr Mohamed KORRI YOUSSOUFI (Morocco), Mr Alain LACABARATS (France), Ms Elena E. MACHULSKAYA (Russian Federation), Ms Mónica PINTO (Argentina), Ms Mia RÖNNMAR (Sweden), Mr Iain ROSS (Australia), Ms Kamala SANKARAN (India), Ms Ambiga SREENEVASAN (Malaysia), Mr Jean-Marie TCHAKOUA (Cameroon), Ms Deborah THOMAS-FELIX (Trinidad and Tobago), and Mr Bernd WAAS (Germany). The appendix of the General Report contains brief biographies of all the Committee members.

3. The Committee welcomed two new members appointed by the Governing Body at its 351st Session (June 2024), namely, Professor Mohamed Korri Youssoufi (Morocco) and Professor Jean-Marie Tchakoua (Cameroon).

4. Professor Korri Youssoufi received his Doctorate in Private Law from the University Panthéon-Assas of Paris. He holds diplomas in private law (University of Fes) and in comparative law (University of Bordeaux – Centre of Comparative Labour and Social Security Law – COMPTRASEC). He has been a professor at the Faculty of Legal, Economic and Social Sciences, University of Meknes since 1996 where he teaches labour law. He has major publications on national labour law and case law and authored numerous studies and papers in legal journals.

5. Professor J.-M. Tchakoua has been teaching private law, notably labour law and social security law, at the Faculty of Legal and Political Sciences of the University of Yaoundé since 1992. He is President and founding member of the Cameroon Association for the Promotion of Labour Law and Social Security, founding member of the Association for the Promotion of Law in Africa (APRODA) and member of the Association for the Promotion of Human Rights in Central Africa (APDHAC). He is the author of specialized publications and numerous articles and studies in legal journals.

6. The Committee noted that due to numerous professional commitments, Judge Ngcobo (South Africa) had asked to be relieved of his duties on the Committee and expressed appreciation for the work done by Judge Ngcobo during his years of service.

7. The Committee also noted that one member, Judge Ross, was unable to attend this year's session for unavoidable reasons and that another member, Professor Waas, was able to join the proceedings of the Committee online.

8. For the reasons set out above, the Committee functioned with a composition of 18 members this year.

9. Ms Graciela Dixon Caton concluded her mandate as Chairperson, as per the 2008 Committee decision that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, renewable once. The Committee elected Mr Alain Lacabarats as its new Chairperson from 2025. Ms Sankaran was elected as Reporter.

10. The Committee noted that this was the last year on the Committee for three of its outstanding members, Professor Brudney, Juge Dixon Caton and Professor Machulskaya, all of whom had completed 15 years of service.

11. The Committee expressed its deep appreciation for the outstanding manner in which Judge Dixon Caton had carried out her duties throughout her 15 years of service on the Committee and, in particular, commended her warmly for the highly professional way in which she had carried out the important and exciting task of leading the Committee during the six years (90th to 95th Sessions) she served as its Chairperson. The Committee commended Judge Dixon Caton for the lasting contribution she had made to the protection of seafarers notably through her work on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006).

12. The Committee also extended its special appreciation for the remarkable contribution that Professor Brudney had brought to the Committee during his 15 years of service and commended him warmly for the invaluable expertise he had contributed to the areas of freedom of association and labour inspection.

13. Finally, the Committee expressed its special appreciation for the outstanding manner in which Professor Machulskaya had carried out her mandate during her 15 years of service on the Committee and particularly commended her for the technical excellence and legal expertise she had contributed to the thematic area of social security.

B. Mandate

14. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body established by the International Labour Conference and its members are appointed by the ILO Governing Body. It is composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO Member States. The Committee of Experts undertakes an impartial and technical analysis of how the Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States, while cognisant of different national realities and legal systems. In doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions. Its opinions and recommendations are non-binding, being intended to guide the actions of national authorities. They derive their persuasive value from the legitimacy and rationality of the Committee's work based on its impartiality, experience and expertise. The Committee's technical role and moral authority is well recognized, particularly as it has been engaged in its supervisory task for more than 90 years, by virtue of its composition, independence and its working methods built on continuing dialogue with governments taking into account information provided by employers' and workers' organizations. This has been reflected in the incorporation of the Committee's opinions and recommendations in national legislation, international instruments and court decisions.

C. Working methods

15. In order to guide the Committee's reflection on continuous improvement of its work, a Subcommittee on Working Methods was set up in 2001 with the mandate to examine the working methods of the Committee and any related subjects, in order to make appropriate recommendations to the Committee so that it can perform its functions in the best and most efficient manner possible and, in so doing, assist Member States in meeting their obligations in relation to international labour standards and enhance the functioning of the supervisory system. This year, under the chairpersonship of Mr Alain Lacabarats, the Subcommittee on Working Methods met for the 24th time.

16. The Subcommittee was briefed by the Office on the Governing Body discussions concerning the streamlining of reporting on the basis of thematic implementation reports and, on this basis, continued its reflection on possible further modernization of the Committee's working methods. Noting that the Governing Body would continue to discuss the matter of thematic reporting in 2025, the Subcommittee asked the Office to share the draft thematic templates for input before their finalization. The Subcommittee recalled that the Committee had initiated the practice of drafting thematic comments which had over the years expanded to several thematic areas. The Subcommittee explored in this context new thematic areas in which thematic comments could be introduced as of the Committee's next session.

17. The Subcommittee further discussed the question of possible adjustments to advance the reporting timelines. The Subcommittee noted that the current due date for country reports had been introduced at the 258th Session (November 1993) of the Governing Body when the latter decided to move the annual session of the Committee of Experts from February–March to November–December of each year and adapted the due dates for receipt of article 22 reports as follows: "the reports requested under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution would have to be sent to the Office by 1 June or, at the latest, 1 September. … The processing of these reports – analysis of them and drafting of any corresponding comments – would take place between July and November […]". [1]

18. The Subcommittee emphasized that, as indicated in the above extract from the Governing Body report, the due date initially intended for the submission of reports was 1 June, while the three-month period between 1 June and 1 September was allowed at the time because article 22 reports were delivered through postal means, and their delivery date could vary depending on the geographical location of Member States. The Subcommittee also noted that, as a result of successive reorganizations of the reporting cycle over the past 30 years, the comments on which replies are expected are known to Member States and the social partners three to six years in advance of their due date, depending on the fundamental, governance or technical status of each instrument. The Subcommittee finally noted that only a small proportion of reports due were received in June of a reporting year and that most reports were sent by electronic means either on 1 September or shortly before that date, approximately ten weeks before the Committee's session, thereby creating bottlenecks in the timely examination of these reports by the Committee. The Subcommittee therefore asked the Office to impress upon Member States the need to respect the deadline of 1 June so as to enable the Committee to plan and carry out its work in an efficient manner.

D. Information session with Government representatives

19. At its 92nd Session (2021), the Committee accepted the request put forward by Government members of the Conference Committee for holding an annual meeting between the Committee of Experts and Government representatives. This year, the Committee held an information session with governments for the third time. All Member States were invited to attend either in person or online. The session was attended by 35 government representatives from the following countries: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, China, Colombia, Cuba,

[1] Document GB.258/6/19, Appendix I, paras 24 and 25.

Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Namibia, Peru, Philippines, Singapore, Spain, Sweden Türkiye and Uruguay.

20. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts, Ms Graciela Dixon Caton, initiated the discussion by emphasizing that the Committee was open to dialogue with governments in order to improve the effectiveness of its mandate and in full recognition of its independence. On behalf of the Committee, Mr. James Brudney presented the rationale and process adopted in the preparation of general surveys, highlighting the topical subjects which had been selected by the Governing Body over the past six years in order to address the needs of workers, the substantial response rates by governments to the questionnaires under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and the important number of comments received by employers' and workers' organizations.

21. Several government representatives expressed their great appreciation for the Committee's work and noted its positive impact on socio-economic development, notably as useful guidance for assessing laws and practices and preparing labour law reforms. Some also expressed the view that more focused requests for information in the Committee's comments, for example, on statistics, were likely to avoid delays in the preparation of replies, given resource constraints in labour administrations and the need to coordinate with other ministries. They also asked for the views of the Committee of Experts on proposals currently under discussion at the Governing Body on thematic reporting. Others referred to the reporting workload and thanked the Office for steps taken to streamline reporting, including through the pilot project on thematic reporting baselines which had been very useful for countries with an extensive ratification record.

22. Some representatives asked for clarification on the interplay among supervisory processes and the deadlines for consideration of observations sent by the social partners as well as the process for closing an issue when a satisfactory response had been received by the Committee. Finally, questions were asked about the ways in which the Committee of Experts interacted with UN human rights bodies.

23. In reply to these questions, Mr. Alain Lacabarats referred to the Governing Body discussions on proposals for streamlining reporting on the basis of 15 thematic implementation reports of which the Committee had been informed by the Office. He recalled that the Committee had developed the practice of thematic comments since 2009 in several thematic areas. He also informed the government representatives that the Subcommittee on working methods was going to further discuss this subject in the coming days.

24. Ms Monica Pinto spoke about the synergies between the Committee's work and that of the human rights bodies, recalling that the ILO was the first international organization to adopt Conventions which addressed human rights matters as of 1919 and the first to embrace the notion of human rights after the Second World War, in the Declaration on the Aims and Purposes of the International Labour Organisation, 1944 (Declaration of Philadelphia) which became part of the ILO Constitution. She further recalled that labour rights were reflected in human rights treaties ratified by the same Member States which had ratified international labour standards thereby undertaking mutually supporting obligations which called for coherence and consistency in their application and in the reports established thereon. She finally said that there was a lot of cross-fertilization between the work of the Committee and that of other human rights mechanisms such as the treaty bodies, the Universal Periodic Review, as well as special procedures of the Human Rights Council, in particular for the collection of information.

25. Furthermore, Mr Shinichi Ago and Mr James Brudney provided clarifications on the interplay among supervisory mechanisms and their complementarity which was based on mutual respect for each mechanism's autonomy and the fact that the Committee would often be requested by all other supervisory mechanisms to follow up on their recommendations. They also provided clarifications on the process for consideration of observations received by employers' and workers' organizations based on the information provided in paragraphs 123 to 124 of the 2024 General Report, and on the process for closing an issue when responses fully answered the questions previously raised by the Committee, including by expressing satisfaction in the case of legislative reforms addressing previous comments made by the Committee.

E. Relations with the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

26. A spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility has consistently prevailed over the years in the Committee's relations with the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference. In this context, the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts was invited to participate in the general discussion of the Conference Committee at the 112th Session of the International Labour Conference. Being unable to attend in person, the Chairperson was represented at that session by Ms. Deborah Thomas-Felix, Member of the Committee of Experts. In addition, the Chairperson of the Committee on Freedom of Association was invited once again to address the Conference Committee in order to present the Committee's Annual Report.

27. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts invited the Employer Vice-Chairperson (Mr Kaizer Moyane) and the Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Marc Leemans) to participate in a special sitting of the Committee at its present session. They both accepted this invitation. An interactive and thorough exchange of views took place on matters of common interest.

28. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts, Ms Graciela Dixon Caton, welcomed the two Vice Chairpersons of the Conference Committee to the exchange which, she noted, had become an ongoing feature of efforts to maintain a fruitful dialogue and create synergies, allowing each Committee to exercise its respective mandate autonomously and in full independence with respect to the Committee of Experts.

29. The Employer Vice Chairperson thanked the Committee of Experts for the invitation to participate in this dialogue which aimed at enhancing mutual understanding and was crucial to strengthening the supervisory system. He raised six points. First, with respect to the ongoing proceedings before the International Court of Justice (ICJ) for an advisory opinion on whether the right to strike of workers and their organizations was protected under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), he was of the view that the only viable way forward once the advisory opinion was delivered, would be to seek consensus through social dialogue and standard setting. He called on the Committee of Experts to be part of the solution once the ICJ rendered its advisory opinion in order to foster convergence among ILO constituents and recalled that past experience demonstrated that agreement between the two Committees had led to more effective implementation of standards in Member States both in law and practice. He reiterated the view that the Committee of Experts should have suspended its comments on the right to strike until the outcome of the ICJ proceedings was known.

30. Second, with respect to proposals for the streamlining of reporting currently under discussion at the Governing Body, the Employer Vice-Chairperson expressed the view that this would enhance the efficiency of the supervisory mechanism without compromising its quality and called on the Committee of Experts to contribute to ensuring that the thematic templates were comprehensive; that full transparency was ensured in reporting in order to provide a complete and accurate picture of national practices; and that the social partners continued to play an active role in the supervision of standards. Third, he asked the Committee of Experts to adopt a more balanced approach by including in its comments positive examples of compliant practices in order to help other Member States introduce similar practices in their countries. Fourth, he asked for more explanations on the criteria and context for bringing certain cases to the attention of the Conference Committee, in addition to the information provided in the Committee of Experts report, in order to ensure more transparency. Fifth, he referred to the distinction between observations and direct requests. While noting the explanations provided on this subject in the Committee of Experts' General Report, he underlined that given the inordinate number of direct requests versus observations, it was important to find ways to avoid preventing the social partners from being part of the supervisory process. Sixth, with respect to the increase in country cases repeatedly discussed before the Governing Body on the same countries regardless of progress made, he emphasized the need for observations by the Committee of Experts which reflected the full context and called for the Committee of Experts to consider adaptable measures tailored to the conditions of each country in order to ensure a balanced approach and make space for robust social dialogue which was the only way to find sustainable solutions. Finally, he stated that the Employers' group remained committed to continuing the fruitful dialogue with the Committee of Experts.

31. In his concluding statement, the Employer Vice-Chairperson referred to the subject of sustainable enterprises by saying that the ILO Centenary Declaration for the Future of Work had made a point of promoting their needs in recognition of the evolution of the world of work since 1919. He emphasized that one could not speak about protection of workers in the absence of sustainable enterprises and that downplaying them was doing injustice to the Centenary Declaration and tripartism which characterized the ILO. He expressed the hope to see this point coming through the Committee of Experts' comments.

32. The Worker Vice Chairperson thanked the Committee of Experts for the invitation and expressed the conviction that exchanges with the Committee of Experts helped to improve the effectiveness of the supervisory system and to ensure that ratifying countries were able to meet their obligations. He underlined that espousing unilateral claims on which there was no consensus served no purpose and produced no impact. Looking at things from the point of view of efficiency, he noted that, for example, no government had criticized the Committee of Experts for making greater use of direct requests instead of observations, as governments were rather interested in what the two Committees had to offer to their countries. He added that, as evidenced by the statements made by several government groups in support of the Committee of Experts, the vast majority of governments had a positive approach and tried to follow up on the Committee's comments, only a small minority expressing opposition to the comments of the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. He drew particular attention to the cases of governments which, despite efforts to make progress, were caught up in contradictory injunctions between, on the one hand, their commitment to social justice and, on the other, the demands of creditors calling for the dismantling of the welfare state. He recalled that, in this respect, the Committee of Experts had rightly pointed out in its previous report the challenge of monitoring compliance with standards in a context of austerity measures, stressing the importance of policy coherence, which was a global issue to which the two Committees could make their modest contribution. He therefore suggested that the Committee of Experts could draw the Conference Committee's attention to a few concrete and obvious cases that illustrated the impact of austerity policies on the supervision of standards.

33. The Worker Vice-Chairperson also referred to the relationship between the promotion of sustainable enterprises and the monitoring of international labour standards by noting that a company's sustainability depended on its compliance with labour laws and international labour standards. He emphasized that the latter did not guarantee the rights of enterprises but rather those of workers. He noted that the Committee of Experts' indisputable contribution to ensuring an environment conducive to sustainable enterprises and responsible business practices was being achieved through the monitoring of Conventions ratified by governments. He added that discussing sustainability also meant taking a closer look at the challenges posed by certain types of activity, such as supply chains, an area in which the ILO supervisory mechanisms had to play an active role, since governments could not, for example, exclude certain areas or territories from the scope of ratified Conventions except where this was explicitly allowed in the Convention concerned. Finally, he paid tribute to the dialogue that the Committee of Experts maintained with the other UN bodies, which in his view enhanced the visibility of international labour standards. He concluded by saying that these suggestions were aimed at emphasizing the will of the Workers' group to move beyond merely semantic discussions and confront today's realities and the concrete improvements that the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee had to contribute.

34. In his concluding remarks, the Worker Vice-Chairperson added that there was no point in criticizing before the Committee of Experts, a decision taken by the Governing Body which was the appropriate forum to have a discussion on the request for an advisory opinion to the ICJ. He added that the Committee of Experts did not have any competence on the country cases discussed before either the Governing Body or the International Labour Conference and was not in a position to steer the discussions taking place in these other forums.

35. On behalf of the Committee of Experts, Ms. Lia Athanassiou thanked the two Vice-Chairpersons for their comments and underlined that these enabled the Committee to seek continuous improvements in its working methods. Mr James Brudney referred to the proceedings before the ICJ as an opportunity for the latter to review the Committee's long record of dialogue with Member States and the social partners on the modalities of the right to strike as presented in the Committee's annual observations and periodic general surveys. He added that he did not see any reason to cease participation in this ongoing dialogue while the issue was pending before the ICJ and that this should be understood as showing respect to those governments with which a long-standing dialogue was under way. Mr Brudney also recalled that while genuinely understanding that the Employer members of the Conference Committee had continuing concerns with this position, the range of issues that arose with frequency under Convention No. 87 and on which the two Committees were in regular and fundamental agreement should also be appreciated, such as the right to be free from violence and physical harassment when pursuing protected trade union and employer organization activities; the principle of non-interference from the state in the autonomy of employers' and workers' organizations; and the ability of various categories of workers to exercise their rights, and establish, join or hold office in trade union organizations.

36. Ms Lia Athanassiou noted with respect to the distinction between observations and direct requests, that this was in practice undergoing constant reassessment through the Subcommittee on working methods, but also through the work of each Committee member and the plenary discussions. She added that the Committee of Experts was constantly seeking user-friendly ways to make comments more accessible and modernize its working methods, in order to draft clear, short, pragmatic and reality-based comments for more efficient results. Mr Shinichi Ago provided clarifications on the process for placing double footnotes and emphasized that the Committee paid particular attention to limiting the number of cases that it referred to the Conference Committee in order to respect the autonomy of the Vice-Chairpersons to select a sufficient number of cases for discussion at the Conference.

F. Session with the United Nations treaty body chairpersons and special procedures mandate holders

37. An exchange was held between the Committee of Experts, four treaty body chairpersons or their representatives and two special procedures mandate holders, on the right to work in the context of environmental, technological and demographic transitions to mark the 80th anniversary of the ILO Declaration of Philadelphia and the 60th anniversary of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and its accompanying Recommendation.

38. The exchange was attended by Ms Laura-Maria Craciunean-Tatu, Chairperson of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights who also represented the Chairperson of the 36th annual Meeting of the Chairpersons of the Human Rights Treaty Bodies, Ms Suzanne Djabour; Ms Gertrude Oforiwa Fefoame, Chairperson of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities; Mr Khaled C. Babacar, Rapporteur of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, on behalf of the Chairperson, Ms Fatima Dialo; Mr. Daniel Fink, Vice-Chairperson of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture on behalf of the Chairperson, Ms Suzanne Djabour.

39. Two special procedures mandate holders were invited to join the meeting: Ms Claudia Mahler, Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons and Ms Astrid Puentes Riaño, Special Rapporteur on the human right to a clean, healthy and sustainable environment.

40. In her introductory statement, the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts, Ms Dixon Caton, commemorated the adoption of the Declaration of Philadelphia 80 years ago and emphasized the Declaration's proclamation of economic security and equal opportunity for "all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex" which preceded the enunciation of the right to work in Article 23 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. She recalled that one of the most significant ILO instruments from the point of view of the right to work was the Convention No. 122 which also marked its 60th anniversary this year, enshrining the commitment of Member States to declare and pursue, as a major goal, an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. She underscored that the current environmental, digital and demographic transitions called for a renewed social contract, leaving no one behind and meeting the needs of the present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. She also referred to the ILO Global Coalition for Social Justice and noted that the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights had joined the Global Coalition with the flagship initiative on the human rights economy as a key intervention under the Coalition's thematic priority on realizing labour rights as human rights, ensuring human dignity and meeting basic needs.

41. On behalf of the Chairperson of the 36th Meeting of the Treaty Body Chairpersons, Ms Craciunean-Tatu emphasized the common aspirations and mandates of the Committee of Experts and the treaty bodies which were complementary, interrelated and mutually reinforcing. She noted that the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the ILO Director-General had held a high-level dialogue in November 2024 during which they had committed to deepening cooperation and operationalizing the human rights economy as a key intervention under the Global Coalition and its thematic priority on realizing labour rights as human rights, to work together through common messaging and joint country-level activities in several key thematic areas and to strengthen engagement between their respective human rights mechanisms and ILO expert mechanisms, of which today's exchange was an example. Ms Craciunean-Tatu finally noted the numerous references to human rights in the Pact for the Future and emphasized that the treaty bodies were ready to work with all stakeholders to ensure system wide commitment to human rights and enhanced coordination with international and regional human rights mechanisms.

42. With respect to demographic shifts and older workers, the Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, Ms Claudia Mahler, noted that population ageing was a prominent feature of global demographic change generating a need to secure the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, including the right to work and social protection. She noted that the absence of a universal pension system left older persons economically vulnerable, inducing them to continue to work after reaching their retirement age due to financial constraints, especially in developing countries and rural regions. She added that in other cases, older persons continued to work because they continued to draw social and personal benefits from their work, including a sense of purpose, social status and even physical well-being. She called for flexible and human-based retirement policies to address this phenomenon. She condemned age-based discrimination in recruitment, career advancement and separation from employment due to ageism as well as false and negative stereotypes about older workers' adaptability to digital technologies, which exacerbated intersectional discrimination against women, migrants, disabled persons or indigenous peoples. She regretted that the Pact for the Future did not contain sufficient references to older persons and called for the matter to be given the attention it deserved.

43. With respect to environmental transitions, the Special Rapporteur on the human right to a clean, healthy and sustainable environment, Ms Astrid Puentes Riaño, highlighted the interdependence of the right to work and the right to a healthy environment. She addressed the triple planetary crisis of climate change, biodiversity loss and pollution noting the systemic inequalities which exacerbated it, causing disproportionate effects on the most vulnerable. She emphasized the principles of universality, indivisibility and interdependence of human rights including the right to a healthy environment recognized by 164 UN Member States in addition to the 2021 Human Rights Council and 2022 UN General Assembly resolutions. She called for the universal ratification of the ILO's Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), highlighting the need for transformative policies in high-impact sectors such as mining, fossil fuel extraction and use, fisheries and agro-industry, and sectors particularly exposed to risks from heat waves and other extreme weather events. She emphasized that protecting a healthy environment in the world of work was an essential prerequisite for a just transition that advanced all human rights in an integrated and mutually reinforcing way and underscored the procedural aspects of the right to a healthy environment such as access to information, to public participation and to justice as crucial tools for enforcing labour and environmental rights in a holistic approach.

44. With respect to digital transition, Ms Irene Kashindi, member of the Committee of Experts, referred to the first discussion for the adoption of an instrument on decent work in the platform economy which was scheduled to take place at the 113th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2025 and could lead, in June 2026, to the first international instrument on matters pertaining to the future of work, setting human-centric rules of the game in relation to the definition of platforms and platform work, the right to collective bargaining of self-employed platform workers, the approach to algorithmic management and the conditions of work in the platform economy including wages, working time and occupational safety and health. She emphasized that technological progress should benefit all workers, and referred to Action 34 of the Pact for the Future, which contained a commitment to invest in the social and economic development of children and young people, underscoring the instrumental role of employment policies in enabling the much-needed transitions from the informal to the formal economy as well as the role of the State in piloting employment policies in effective consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations.

45. Mr José Roberto Hererra Vergara, member of the Committee of Experts, referred to the importance of the right to social security for building resilient and sustainable economies and a just transition as the recently released World Social Protection Report had revealed that 2.1 billion people were facing the ravages of climate change without any protection. He emphasized the role of universal social protection systems and the ILO Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), in this regard. He also recalled the crucial role of social protection in guaranteeing the right to work for older persons through inclusive policies that combined adequate pensions with incentives for active employment and investment in lifelong learning.

46. Ms Kamala Sankaran, member of the Committee of Experts, commemorated the 75th anniversary of the ILO Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), and the 50th anniversary of the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), in 2025, noting that migration flows were as old as humanity itself and had always been primarily influenced by the search for livelihoods and employment. She noted the commitment in Action 6 of the Pact for the Future to "maximize the positive contribution of migrants to the sustainable development of origin, transit, destination and host countries", while observing the increased risk of discrimination and xenophobia against migrant workers, which often resulted in a migrant worker pay gap and violence and harassment against migrants. She recalled the relatively low ratification rates of Conventions Nos 97 and 143 despite their topicality as well as the fact that, like for the UN Convention on migrant workers, ratifying countries were mostly countries of origin and not destination countries. She emphasized the importance of promoting fair recruitment, referencing in this regard the ILO General Principles and Operational Guidelines for Fair Recruitment and the UN Global Compact for Migration adopted in 2018.

47. Ms Monica Pinto, member of the Committee of Experts, commemorated the 35th anniversary of the ILO Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), by recalling that it was the first and only internationally binding instrument that recognized the right of indigenous peoples to self-identification and their right to participate in decisions over all questions affecting them, and noted that the key pillars of the Convention were the creation of a system of land rights and the recognition of consultation as a fundamental right, thereby highlighting the key role played by indigenous peoples in efforts to address climate change by mitigating environmental impacts through the sustainable use of resources. She concluded by saying that, as several comments by the Committee of Experts noted the physical and psychological violence suffered by indigenous peoples due to conflicts over land rights and the exploitation of natural resources, the Committee of Experts had the possibility by exercising its mandate to supervise the application of Convention No. 169, to defend the rights of indigenous peoples in order to promote alternative and sustainable solutions to the current environmental crisis.

48. Ms Craciunean-Tatu, Chairperson of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, underscored the great importance that her Committee attached to cooperation with the Committee of Experts, given that the mandates of the two Committees were complementary. She recalled the long-standing exchanges between the two Committees including joint statements and important ILO contributions to the General Comments Nos 18 on the right to work, 19 on social security, 20 on non-discrimination in economic, social and cultural rights and 23 on the right to just and favourable conditions of work. She also informed the Committee that the entry into force in 2013 of the Optional Protocol to the Covenant which allowed for the filing of individual complaints, had enabled her Committee to develop the justiciability of several rights including the right to social security which was crucial in the context of transitions. Finally, she invited the ILO to provide input to her Committee's upcoming General Comment on the environmental dimension of sustainable development which aimed at emphasizing the central position of human rights for balanced progress on all aspects of sustainable development.

49. Ms Gertrude Oforiwa Fefoame, Chairperson of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, emphasized that the right to work needed to be exercised in line with the principle of inclusion of persons with disabilities through appropriate policies addressing ableism, stereotypes and discrimination. She emphasized that reasonable accommodation tailored to each individual's needs was essential in order to enable persons with disabilities to exercise their right to work by enabling accessibility, enhanced education, training and career development. She emphasized that persons with disabilities did not wish tokenism but rather open job market employment to accomplish their potential. Noting the issues reflected in the Pact for the Future she called for the digital transition to become a way to improve the quality of life of persons with disabilities through accessibility of digital equipment, training and affordability, particularly in developing countries and rural communities with social protection playing a central role in this regard.

50. In their closing statements the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts and the representative of the Chairperson of the 36th annual Meeting of the Treaty Body Chairpersons, thanked the participants for the third exchange and expressed the hope that the thematic exchanges would continue in the future.

G. Current developments on maritime matters

51. In its previous reports, the Committee noted with deep concern the impact that situations such as the COVID-19 pandemic [2] and the war in Ukraine [3] had had on the protection of seafarers' rights as laid out in the MLC, 2006. The Committee had called on governments to recognize seafarers as key workers, acknowledging their pivotal role in the functioning of supply chains and recalled that it is precisely at times of crisis that the protective coverage of the MLC, 2006, assumes its full significance and needs to be most scrupulously applied. The Committee notes with deep concern that, in the last year, a number of seafarers have lost their lives and several merchant ships have suffered missile attacks in the Red Sea, severely affecting the safety of the seafarers on board.

52. In this context, the Committee welcomes the unprecedented resolution adopted in July 2024 by the United Nations Human Rights Council on promoting and protecting the enjoyment of human rights by seafarers. Noting that the resolution builds clear synergies between the work conducted by the ILO, the International Maritime Organization and the UN General Assembly regarding the need to adopt measures to strengthen the effective enjoyment of seafarers' human rights, including labour rights, the Committee wishes to highlight its main elements as follows and calls upon all ILO Member States to step up their efforts in this regard:

The Human Rights Council,

1. Acknowledges the obligation of States parties to the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended, to cooperate with each other for the purpose of ensuring the effective implementation and enforcement of the Convention;

2. Calls upon States parties, shipowners' representatives and seafarers' representatives to enhance the enforcement of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended, to ensure safe and decent living and working conditions for all seafarers;

3. Calls upon States and other relevant shipping industry stakeholders to promote and protect effectively the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by seafarers, including their right to life, right to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work, including safe and healthy working conditions, and right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health;

4. Urges shipping industry stakeholders to respect the right of seafarers to the opportunity to gain their living by work that they freely choose or accept, including decisions on whether to sail or continue sailing in high-risk areas [4], and that the realization of this right should not negatively affect a seafarer's employment competitiveness or future deployment;

[2] General observation adopted in 2020 on matters arising from the application of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended, (MLC, 2006) during the COVID-19 pandemic.

[3] ILO, Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Application of International Labour Standards, International Labour Conference, 111th Session, 2023, para. 75.

[4] In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw governments' attention to Article 13 of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), according to which "a worker who has removed himself from a work situation which he has reasonable

5. Urges States to continue efforts to eliminate all forms of forced or compulsory labour in the shipping industry;

6. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to designate seafarers and other marine personnel as key workers, in line with General Assembly resolution 75/17 of 1 December 2020, on international cooperation to address challenges faced by seafarers as a result of the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic to support global supply chains;

7. Encourages States, consistent with the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, to ensure that business enterprises in the global maritime industry uphold the principle of corporate responsibility to respect human rights;

8. Encourages business enterprises in the global maritime industry to meet their responsibility to respect human rights, including by instituting a human rights due diligence process to identify, prevent, mitigate and enable remediation for any adverse human rights impacts of business operations;

9. Urges all stakeholders to step up efforts to advance gender equality and empowerment in the shipping industry by, among other things, capacity-building, collecting disaggregated data and promoting equitable hiring practices;

10. Calls upon all stakeholders to institute policies, measures and programmes to prevent effectively violence and harassment, including sexual harassment and assault, bullying and all forms of discrimination on-board vessels, in order to foster an environment where all seafarers, including women seafarers, are safe and their rights respected;

11. Encourages all shipping industry stakeholders to meaningfully celebrate the Day of the Seafarer every year on 25 June;

12. Urges stronger collaboration between States, shipowners' representatives, seafarers' representatives, the International Labour Organization, the International Maritime Organization, non-governmental organizations and other stakeholders to uphold and protect the rights and dignity of all seafarers all over the world.

53. The Committee further welcomes the forthcoming entry into force of the 2022 amendments to the Code of the MLC, 2006, on 23 December 2024 and highlights the usefulness of the simplified process of amendments contained in this Convention to respond to the changing needs and challenges faced by the maritime sector. The Committee welcomes in particular the right of seafarers to social connectivity (internet) which represents a significant step forward in ensuring that seafarers can connect with their families and friends during the long periods on board and a necessary element to continue to attract and retain seafarers, in particular young seafarers and women. The Committee further welcomes the creation of a Global register of all deaths at sea which will allow the ILO to gather reliable statistics on these dire situations and inform the adoption of timely corrective measures. The Committee urges all ratifying Member States bound by these amendments to adopt the necessary measures to implement the new provisions taking into account that they contain significant concrete measures to further enhance the well-being of seafarers.

H. Current developments on violence in the world of work

54. Throughout the discharge of its mandate this year, the Committee noticed an increased level of violence in the world of work. The Committee noted with concern allegations of violence – including killings – regarding the application of numerous Conventions such as the Conventions on freedom of association (Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)), equality and non-discrimination (Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)), justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to his life or health shall be protected from undue consequences in accordance with national conditions and practice".

indigenous peoples (Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169)), occupational safety and health (Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187)), child labour (Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182)) and forced labour (Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29)). Accordingly, the Committee notes with particular concern that violence has broad implications particularly for women's rights and participation in the workforce. Regretting that this appears to be a cross-cutting and pervasive concern, the Committee trusts that the recent adoption and ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), will ensure focused attention on this matter and urges all Governments to adopt adequate measures to tackle this phenomenon.

II. Compliance with standards-related obligations

A. Reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

55. The Committee's principal task consists of the examination of the reports supplied by governments on Conventions that have been ratified by Member States (article 22 of the Constitution) and that have been declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories (article 35 of the Constitution).

Reporting arrangements

56. In accordance with the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 258th Session (November 1993), the reports due on ratified Conventions should be sent to the Office between 1 June and 1 September of each year. With reference to the discussion that took place in the Subcommittee on Working Methods this year, the Committee invites reports to be sent on the due date of 1 June.

57. The Committee recalls that detailed reports should be sent in the case of first reports (a first report is due after ratification) or when specifically requested by the Committee of Experts or the Conference Committee. In all other cases, simplified reports are requested on a regular basis. [5] The Committee draws the reader's attention to the Report's section on working methods. This section refers to Governing Body discussions on proposals for the streamlining of reporting on the basis of 15 thematic implementation reports which, if adopted, would replace the simplified reports.

58. The Committee also recalls that, at its 306th Session (November 2009), the Governing Body decided to increase from two to three years the regular reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions. At its 334th Session (October–November 2018) the Governing Body decided to increase the reporting cycle from five to six years for all other Conventions. In certain cases, reports may be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle. [6]

[5] In 1993, a distinction was made between detailed and simplified reports. As explained in the report forms, in the case of simplified reports, information need normally be given only on the following points: (a) any new legislative or other measures affecting the application of the Convention; (b) replies to the questions in the report form on the practical application of the Convention (for example, statistics, results of inspections, judicial or administrative decisions) and on the communication of copies of the report to the representative organizations of employers and workers and on any observations received from these organizations; and (c) replies to comments by the supervisory bodies. At its 334th Session, the Governing Body adopted a new report form to facilitate reporting by governments when they are expected to provide simplified reports (GB.334/INS/5).

[6] There are several ways in which a report can be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle: (i) the Committee can place a special request in a footnote at the end of a comment for a report to be sent earlier than the year it is due according to the reporting cycle (see General Report, para. 88); (ii) an "automatic" request is sent when the government has failed to send a report in the framework of the regular reporting cycle or the report sent did not contain an answer to the Committee's comments. If a government has failed to send a report for a number of years, the case is singled out in Part II (section I) of this report and examined every year by the Conference Committee during its discussion on serious failures to fulfil reporting obligations; (iii) the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards can ask a government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle following the examination of an individual case and when it discusses the cases of serious failure to report; (iv) the Governing Body may ask a government to send a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle based on the recommendations of tripartite committees established to examine representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution or the recommendations of Commissions of Inquiry established to examine complaints under article 26 of the ILO Constitution.

Compliance with reporting obligations

Number of reports received within the deadlines

59. This year a total of 1,909 reports (1,836 reports under article 22 of the Constitution and 73 reports under article 35 of the Constitution) were requested from governments on the application of Conventions ratified by Member States, compared to 2,131 reports last year. At the end of the present session of the Committee, 1,405 reports were received by the Office, corresponding to 73.6 per cent of the reports requested. [7] Last year, the Office received a total of 1,605 reports, representing 75.3 per cent. The Committee notes in particular that 43 of the 81 first reports due on the application of ratified Conventions were received by the time the Committee's session ended (last year, 42 of the 79 first reports due had been received).

60. The Committee observes that the percentage of reports received before the due date of 1 September decreased slightly from last year. In particular, 809 reports were received by the due date of 1 September this year, representing 42.4 per cent of reports requested, compared with 971 reports received at the previous session, representing 45.6 per cent of reports requested. The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the Member States which made special efforts to ensure compliance with their reporting obligations.

61. The Committee notes that out of 1,405 reports received this year, 596 were received after 1 September. This represents 42.4 per cent of the reports received this year. The Committee refers once again to the fact that the deadline for submission of reports is 1 June while noting the further period of three months until 1 September. Beyond that date, the late submission of reports seriously disturbs the sound operation of the supervisory mechanism as the examination of reports received after the deadline might be postponed due to their late arrival. Moreover, their examination in subsequent Committee sessions prevents the Committee from fully focusing on the specific thematic areas due for discussion each year and also prevents governments and the social partners from obtaining timely feedback on their reports.

62. The Committee asks all Member States to make every effort to send the reports due under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the ILO Constitution, to do so within the deadlines and to submit complete answers to the Committee's requests so as to allow for a thorough examination by the Committee. It recalls that ILO technical assistance is available to help Member States comply with their constitutional obligations and asks the Office to provide every support in this regard, while urging those Member States who have received Office assistance in recent years to make sustained efforts to ensure timely submission of their reports.

Failure to respect reporting obligations

63. When examining the failure by Member States to respect their reporting obligations, the Committee adopts "general" comments (contained at the beginning of Part II (section I) of this report). It makes general observations when none of the reports due have been sent for two or more years; or when a first report has not been sent for two or more years. It makes a general direct request when, in the current year, a country has not sent the reports due, or the majority of reports due; or it has not sent a first report due.

[7] Appendix I to this Report provides an indication by country of whether the reports requested (under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution) have been registered or not by the end of the meeting of the Committee. Appendix II shows, for the reports requested under article 22 of the Constitution, for each year since 1932, the number and percentage of reports received by the prescribed date, by the date of the meeting of the Committee of Experts and by the date of the session of the International Labour Conference.

64. Furthermore, as of 2017 the Committee gradually introduced a practice of urgent appeals according to which it may examine how a Convention is implemented in a ratifying country on the basis of information at its disposal if the Government has failed to submit a first report after ratification. In the meantime, a number of countries responded to urgent appeals by submitting the reports due. As of 2018, the practice of urgent appeals was extended to all reports due for more than three years. In 2020, the Committee issued for the first-time repetitions of previous comments with a new introductory text ("chapeau") [8] informing the government concerned in cases where reports were not received for three years or more, that if no report is supplied in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, then the Committee may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal.

65. This year, the Committee examined the case of Haiti on the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), in the absence of a government report following an urgent appeal.

66. Based on the information provided in the "general" comments (Part II, section I of the report), none of the reports due have been sent for the past two or more years from the following 14 countries: Afghanistan, Barbados, Comoros, Djibouti, Haiti, Marshall Islands, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tonga, Vanuatu and Yemen. The Committee urges the Governments concerned to make every effort to supply the reports requested on ratified Conventions.

67. Moreover, the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Member States that have failed to submit a report for more than three years, drawing their attention to the fact that if the reports due are not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, it may proceed to examine the application of the Conventions concerned on the basis of public information at its disposal. This year, the Committee launches an urgent appeal in its repetitions of previous comments to which a reply has not been received, requesting the following countries to submit a report with replies to the Committee's comments at its next session:

Urgent appeals launched in repetitions of previous comments
State	Conventions Nos
Afghanistan	105, 138, 140, 141, 142, 144 and 182
Antigua and Barbuda	81, 87, 100, 111, 122, 135, 138, 144 and 151

Equatorial Guinea	68/92
Haiti	98
Papua New Guinea	29, 87, 98, 122 and 158

[8] The introductory text ("chapeau") now reads: The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It expects that the next report will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

69. In relation to first reports, the Committee notes that 11 countries have failed to supply a first report for two or more years:

State	Conventions Nos
Antigua and Barbuda	Since 2023: Conventions Nos 177, 181, 184, 185, 187 and 188
Comoros	Since 2023: Conventions Nos 97 and 143
Djibouti	Since 2022: Convention No. 183

Sudan	Since 2023: Conventions Nos 87 and 144
Tonga	Since 2022: Convention No. 182
Tuvalu	Since 2021: Convention No. 182
Vanuatu	Since 2021: Convention No. 138

70. The Committee urges the governments concerned to make a special effort to supply the first reports due. The Committee launches an urgent appeal drawing the attention of the following Governments which have not sent a first report for more than three years to the fact that if the first report is not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, it may proceed to examine the application of the Convention in the countries concerned on the basis of public information at its disposal: Djibouti (Convention No. 183), Iraq (Convention No. 185), Marshall Islands (Convention No. 182), Tonga (Convention No. 182), Tuvalu (Convention No. 182) and Vanuatu (Convention No. 138).

71. The Committee, like the Conference Committee, emphasizes the particular importance of first reports, which provide the basis on which the Committee makes its initial assessment of the application of the specific Conventions concerned. The Committee is aware that, where no reports have been sent for some time, it is likely that administrative or other problems are at the origin of the difficulties encountered by governments in fulfilling their constitutional obligations. The COVID-19 pandemic and subsequent crises have no doubt aggravated such difficulties. [9] The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the governments which submitted 6 first reports this year. [10] It recalls the importance for governments to request assistance from the Office, and for such assistance to be provided for the preparation of first reports.

Communication of reports to the social partners

72. The Committee is pleased to note that, over the last three years, all countries have provided information on the communication of reports to employers' and workers' organizations in accordance with article 23, paragraph 2 of the Constitution thereby enabling representative organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards in accordance with the tripartite nature of the ILO. [11]

[9] In certain exceptional cases, the absence of reports is a result of more general difficulties related to the national situation, which prevents the provision of any technical assistance by the Office.

[10] Cook Islands (MLC, 1006), Fiji (Convention No. 190), Grenada (MLC, 2006, and Convention No. 189), Lebanon (MLC, 2006) and Sudan (MLC, 2006).

Replies to the comments of the Committee

73. Governments are requested to reply in their reports to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee.

74. This year, no information has been received as regards all or most of the observations and direct requests of the Committee to which a reply was requested for the following countries: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Comoros, Congo, Cook Islands, Croatia, Cuba, Denmark (Greenland), Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Israel, Kenya, Kiribati, Liberia, Libya, Lithuania, Montenegro, Nigeria, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Serbia, Somalia, South Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Turkmenistan, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (British Virgin Islands and Montserrat), Vanuatu, Viet Nam and Yemen.

75. The Committee notes with concern that the number of comments to which replies have not been received remains high. The Committee underlines that the value attached by ILO constituents to the dialogue with the supervisory bodies on the application of ratified Conventions is considerably diminished by the failure of governments to fulfil their obligations in this respect. The Committee urges the countries concerned to provide all the information requested and recalls that they may avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Follow-up to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil reporting obligations mentioned in the report of the Committee on the Application of Standards

76. As the functioning of the supervisory system is based primarily on the information provided by governments in their reports, both the Committee and the Conference Committee considered that failure by Member States to fulfil their obligations in this respect has to be given the same level of attention as non-compliance relating to the application of ratified Conventions. The two Committees have therefore decided to strengthen, with the assistance of the Office, the follow-up given to these cases of failure.

77. The Committee welcomes the fruitful collaboration that it maintains with the Conference Committee on this matter of mutual interest which is essential to the proper discharge of their respective tasks. It asks the Office to maintain the sustained technical assistance that it has been providing to Member States in this respect.

B. Examination by the Committee of Experts of reports on ratified Conventions

78. In examining the reports received on ratified Conventions and those declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories, in accordance with its practice, the Committee assigned to each of its members the initial responsibility for a group of Conventions. The members submit their preliminary conclusions on the instruments for which they are responsible to the Committee in plenary sitting for discussion and approval. Decisions on comments are adopted by consensus.

79. The Committee wishes to inform Member States that it examined all reports that were brought to its attention.

Observations and direct requests

80. First of all, the Committee considers that it is worthy of note that in 277 cases it has found, following examination of the corresponding reports, that no further comment was called for regarding the manner in which a ratified Convention had been implemented.

81. In other cases, however, the Committee has found it necessary to draw the attention of the governments concerned to the need to take further action to give effect to certain provisions of Conventions or to supply additional information on given points. As in previous years, its comments have been drawn up in the form of either "observations", which are reproduced in the report of the Committee, or "direct requests", which are not published in the Committee's report, but are communicated directly to the governments concerned and are available online. [12]

82. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They point to important discrepancies between the obligations under a Convention and the related law and/or practice of Member States. They may address the absence of measures to give effect to a Convention or to take appropriate action following the Committee's requests. They may also highlight progress, as appropriate. Direct requests allow the Committee to be engaged in a continuing dialogue with governments often when the questions raised are primarily of a technical nature. They can also be used for the clarification of certain points when the information available does not enable a full appreciation of the extent to which the obligations are fulfilled. Direct requests are also generally used to examine the first reports supplied by governments on the application of Conventions.

83. This year the Committee made 625 observations and 1,145 direct requests. The Committee's observations appear in Part II of this report, together with, for each subject, a list of direct requests. An index of all observations and direct requests, classified by country, is provided in Appendix VII to the report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards

84. The Committee examines the follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards as this information forms an integral part of the Committee's dialogue with the governments concerned. This year, the Committee has examined the follow-up to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards during the last session of the International Labour Conference (112th Session, June 2024) in the following cases:

Follow-up of representations under article 24 of the Constitution and complaints under article 26 of the Constitution

85. In accordance with the established practice, the Committee also examines the measures taken by governments pursuant to the recommendations of tripartite committees (set up to examine representations under article 24 of the Constitution) and commissions of inquiry (set up to examine complaints under article 26 of the Constitution). The corresponding information forms an integral part of the Committee's dialogue with the governments concerned. The Committee considers it useful to indicate more clearly the cases in which it follows up on the effect given to the recommendations made under these constitutional supervisory procedures, as indicated in the following tables.

In addition, the Committee followed up on Governing Body discussions on an article 26 complaint which has not yet led to the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry in the cases of Bangladesh (Convention No. 81), Guatemala (Conventions Nos 87 and 98) and Nicaragua (Conventions Nos 87, 98 and 144).

Follow-up given to legislative aspects referred by the Committee on Freedom of Association

87. In accordance with established practice, the Committee also examines the legislative aspects referred to it by the Committee on Freedom of Association. At the latter's request, the Committee decided to indicate these cases in the following table.

Special notes

88. As in the past, the Committee has indicated by special notes (traditionally known as "footnotes") at the end of its comments the cases in which, because of the nature of the problems encountered in the application of the Conventions concerned, it has deemed it appropriate to ask the government to supply a report earlier than would otherwise have been the case and, in some instances, to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2025.

89. In order to identify cases for which it inserts special notes, the Committee uses the basic criteria described below, while taking into account the following general considerations. First, the criteria are indicative. In exercising its discretion in the application of the criteria, the Committee may also have regard to the specific circumstances of the country and the length of the reporting cycle. Second, the criteria are applicable to cases in which an earlier report is requested, often referred to as a "single footnote", as well as to cases in which the government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference, often referred to as a "double footnote". The difference between these two categories is one of degree. Third, a serious case otherwise justifying a special note to provide full particulars to the Conference (double footnote) might only be given a special note to provide an early report (single footnote) when there has been a recent discussion of the case in the Conference Committee. Finally, the Committee wishes to point out that it exercises restraint in its recourse to "double footnotes" in deference to the Conference Committee's decisions as to the cases it wishes to discuss.

90. The criteria to which the Committee has regard are the following:

- the seriousness of the problem; in this respect, the Committee emphasizes that an important consideration is the necessity to view the problem in the context of a particular Convention and to take into account matters involving fundamental rights, workers' health, safety and well-being, as well as any adverse impact, including at the international level, on workers and other categories of protected persons;
- the persistence of the problem;
- the urgency of the situation; the evaluation of such urgency is necessarily case specific, according to standard human rights criteria, such as life-threatening situations or problems where irreversible harm is foreseeable;
- the quality and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

91. In addition, the Committee wishes to emphasize that its decision not to double footnote a case which it has previously drawn to the attention of the Conference Committee in no way implies that it has considered progress to have been made therein.

92. At its 76th Session (November–December 2005), the Committee decided that the identification of cases in respect of which a government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference would be a two-stage process: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee the insertion of special notes; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final, collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.

93. This year, the Committee has requested governments to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2025 in the following cases:

Cases of progress

95. Following its examination of the reports supplied by governments, and in accordance with its standard practice, the Committee refers in its comments to cases in which it expresses its satisfaction or interest at the progress achieved in the application of the respective Conventions.

96. At its 80th and 82nd Sessions (2009 and 2011), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the identification of cases of progress:

(1) The expression by the Committee of interest or satisfaction does not mean that it considers that the country in question is in general conformity with the Convention, and in the same comment the Committee may express its satisfaction or interest at a specific issue while also expressing regret concerning other important matters which, in its view, have not been addressed in a satisfactory manner.

(2) The Committee wishes to emphasize that an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measures adopted by the government concerned.

(3) The Committee exercises its discretion in noting progress, taking into account the particular nature of the Convention and the specific circumstances of the country.

(4) The expression of progress can refer to different kinds of measures relating to national legislation, policy or practice.

(5) If the satisfaction relates to the adoption of legislation, the Committee may also consider appropriate follow-up measures for its practical application.

(6) In identifying cases of progress, the Committee takes into account both the information provided by governments in their reports and the comments of employers' and workers' organizations.

97. Since first identifying cases of satisfaction in its report in 1964, [13] the Committee has continued to follow the same general criteria. The Committee expresses satisfaction in cases in which, following comments it has made on a specific issue, governments have taken measures through either the adoption of new legislation, an amendment to the existing legislation or a significant change in the national policy or practice, thus achieving fuller compliance with their obligations under the respective Conventions. In expressing its satisfaction, the Committee indicates to governments and the social partners that it considers the specific matter resolved. The reason for identifying cases of satisfaction is twofold:

[13] Report of the Committee of Experts submitted to the 48th Session (1964) of the International Labour Conference, para. 16.

- to place on record the Committee's appreciation of the positive action taken by governments in response to its comments;
- to provide an example to other governments and social partners which have to address similar issues.

98. Details concerning these cases of progress are found in Part II of this report and cover 35 instances in which measures of this kind have been taken in 27 countries. The full list is as follows:

99. Thus, the total number of cases in which the Committee has been led to express its satisfaction at the progress achieved following its comments has risen to 3,263 since the Committee began listing them in its report.

100. Within cases of progress, the distinction between cases of satisfaction and cases of interest was formalized in 1979.[14] In general, cases of interest cover measures that are sufficiently advanced to justify the expectation that further progress would be achieved in the future and regarding which the Committee would want to continue its dialogue with the government and the social partners. The Committee's practice has developed to such an extent that cases in which it expresses interest may encompass a variety of measures. The paramount consideration is that the measures contribute to the overall achievement of the objectives of a particular Convention. This may include:

- draft legislation that is before parliament, or other proposed legislative changes forwarded or available to the Committee;
- consultations within the government and with the social partners;
- new policies;
- the development and implementation of activities within the framework of a technical cooperation project or following technical assistance or advice from the Office;
- judicial decisions, according to the level of the court, the subject matter and the force of such decisions in a particular legal system, would normally be considered as cases of interest unless there is a compelling reason to note a particular judicial decision as a case of satisfaction; or
- the Committee may also note as cases of interest the progress made by a state, province or territory in the framework of a federal system.

101. Details concerning the cases in question are found either in Part II of this report or in the requests addressed directly to the governments concerned, and include 180 instances in which measures of this kind have been adopted in 101 countries. The full list is as follows:

Practical application

102. As part of its assessment of the application of Conventions in practice, the Committee notes the information contained in governments' reports, such as information relating to judicial decisions, statistics and labour inspection. The supply of this information is requested in almost all report forms, as well as under the specific terms of some Conventions. In the context of the COVID-19 pandemic and the interlocking crises that followed, such information is indispensable to complete the examination of national legislation and to help the Committee identify the issues arising from real problems of application in practice. The Committee wishes to emphasize to governments the importance of submitting such information and also encourages employers' and workers' organizations to submit clear and up-to-date information on the application of Conventions in practice.

Observations made by employers' and workers' organizations

103. At each session, the Committee recalls that the contribution by employers' and workers' organizations is essential for the Committee's evaluation of the application of Conventions in national law and in practice. Member States have an obligation under article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution to communicate to the representative employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports supplied under articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution. Compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards. In some cases, governments transmit the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports, sometimes adding their own comments. However, in the majority of cases, observations from employers' and workers' organizations are sent directly to the Office which, in accordance with the established practice, transmits them to the governments concerned for comment, so as to ensure respect for due process. For reasons of transparency, the record of all observations received from employers' and workers' organizations on the application of ratified Conventions since the last session of the Committee is included as Appendix III to its report. Where the Committee finds that the observations are not within the scope of the Convention or do not contain information that would add value to its examination of the application of the Convention, it will not refer to them in its comments. Otherwise, the observations received from employers' and workers' organizations may be considered in an observation or in a direct request, as appropriate.

In a reporting year

104. At its 86th Session (2015), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the treatment of observations from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalled that, in a reporting year, when observations from employers' and workers' organizations are not provided with the government's report, they should be received by the Office by 1 September at the latest, so as to allow the government concerned to have a reasonable time to respond, thereby enabling the Committee to examine, as appropriate, the issues raised at its session the same year. When observations are received after 1 September, they would not be examined in substance in the absence of a reply from the government, except in exceptional cases. Over the years, the Committee has identified exceptional cases as those where the allegations are sufficiently substantiated and there is an urgent need to address the situation, whether because they refer to matters of life and death or to fundamental human rights or because any delay may cause irreparable harm. In addition, observations referring to legislative proposals or draft laws may also be examined by the Committee in the absence of a reply from the government, where this may be of assistance for the country at the drafting stage.

Outside of a reporting year

105. At its 88th Session (2017), following its consideration of the Governing Body's review of the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years, the Committee indicated its willingness to consider the manner in which it might broaden the very strict criteria for breaking its cycle of review when receiving comments from workers' or employers' organizations on a specific country under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and decided that inspiration in this regard could be drawn from those criteria used for "footnoting" cases and set out in paragraph 73 of that year's General Report.

106. In light of the October–November 2018 Governing Body decision (GB.334/INS/5) expanding the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years and expressing its understanding that the Committee would further review, clarify and, where appropriate, broaden the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle with respect to technical Conventions, the Committee proceeded with the review of the criteria mentioned above at its 89th Session (2018).

107. The Committee recalls that, in a non-reporting year, when employers' and workers' organizations send observations which simply repeat comments made in previous years, or refer to matters already raised by the Committee, such comments will be examined in the year when the government's report is due, in accordance with the regular reporting cycle. In this case, a report will not be requested from the government outside of that cycle.

108. Where the observations on a technical Convention meet the criteria set out in paragraph below, the Committee will request the office to issue a notification to governments that the article 23 observations received will be examined at its subsequent session with or without a response from the government. This would ensure that governments have sufficient notice while ensuring that the examination of matters of importance are not further delayed.

109. The Committee would thus review the application of a technical Convention outside of a reporting year following observations submitted by employers' and workers' organizations having due regard to the following elements:

- the seriousness of the problem and its adverse impact on the application of the Convention;
- the persistence of the problem;

- the relevance and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

110. With respect to any Convention (fundamental, governance or technical), recalling its well-established practice, the Committee will examine employers' and workers' observations in a non-reporting year in the year received in the exceptional cases set out in the paragraph above, even in the absence of a reply from the government concerned.

111. The Committee emphasized that the procedure set out in the paragraphs above aims at giving effect to decisions taken by the Governing Body which have extended the reporting cycle and called for safeguards in that context, to ensure that effective supervision of the application of ratified Conventions is maintained. One of these safeguards consists in giving due recognition to the possibility afforded to employers' and workers' organizations to draw the attention of the Committee to matters of particular concern arising from the application of ratified Conventions, even in a year when no report is due. The approach above also pays particular attention to the importance of providing due notice to governments, except in exceptional circumstances, and in all cases the Committee will indicate its reasons for breaking the cycle.

112. The Committee notes that since its last session, it has received 786 observations (compared to 1,276 last year), 179 of which (compared to 221 last year) were communicated by employers' organizations and 607 (compared to 1,055 last year) by workers' organizations. The great majority of the observations received (667 compared to 1,220 last year) related to the application of ratified Conventions; [15] 362 of these observations (compared to 551 last year) concerned the application of fundamental Conventions, 93 (compared to 166 last year) related to governance Conventions and 212 (compared to 503 last year) concerned the application of other Conventions. Moreover, 119 observations were received in relation to the 2024 General Survey on employment injury protection. The Committee notes that, 420 of the observations received this year on the application of ratified Conventions were transmitted directly to the Office. In 247 cases, the governments transmitted the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports. The Committee notes that in general the employers' and workers' organizations concerned endeavoured to gather and present information on the application of ratified Conventions in specific countries, both in law and in practice. The Committee recalls that observations of a general nature relating to certain Conventions are more appropriately addressed within the framework of the Committee's consideration of General Surveys or within other forums of the ILO.

Cases in which the need for technical assistance has been highlighted

113. The combination of the work of the supervisory bodies and the practical guidance given to Member States through development cooperation and technical assistance has always been one of the key dimensions of the ILO supervisory system. The Committee follows up on a number of these cases in the present report, especially where they relate to the follow-up to conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at its 112th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2024). [16] Moreover, assistance was provided by the International Training Centre of the ILO (Turin Centre) and international labour standards specialists based in the field to 45 countries for the preparation of article 22 reports on ratified Conventions, including the MLC, 2006.

[15] Appendix III to this Report.

[16] See table in para. 84.

114. The Committee notes that this year, the International Labour Standards Academy focused on the regions of Europe-Central Asia and the Arab States, delivering training on international labour standards to the ILO constituents, judges, law professors and other legal professionals across the two regions. The Committee notes the International Labour Standards Academy's important contribution to building the reporting capacities of governments and employers' and workers' organizations including in countries facing serious weaknesses in this field. The Committee also notes that in addition to the International Labour Standards Academy, the Turin Centre delivered:

- online courses on reporting in English and French as well as tailor-made training on reporting to constituents;
- international labour standards training to judges in the Americas region;
- a series of capacity-building events with a focus on promoting the ratification and legal implementation of the MLC, 2006, as well as reporting thereon;
- finally, the Committee welcomes the tripartite digital activity carried out at the global level by the Office and the Turin Centre in order to facilitate the submission of reports under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and comments by workers' and employers' organizations for the preparation of the 2025 General Survey.

115. In addition to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil certain specific obligations related to reporting, the cases for which, in the Committee's view, technical assistance from the Office would be particularly useful in helping Member States to address gaps in law and in practice in the implementation of ratified Conventions are highlighted in the following table and details can be found in Part II of this report.

C. Reports under article 19 of the Constitution

116. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body decided that the subjects of General Surveys should be aligned with those of the annual recurrent discussions in the Conference under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008. This year, governments were requested to supply reports under article 19 of the Constitution for the General Survey on the Workmen's Compensation (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 12), the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19), the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Recommendation, 1925 (No. 25), the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (Part VI), the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), and the Employment Injury Benefits Recommendation, 1964 (No. 121).

117. The General Survey [17] has been prepared on the basis of a preliminary examination by a working party comprising six members of the Committee in accordance with the practice followed in previous years.

118. The Committee notes with regret that, for the past five years, none of the reports on unratified Conventions and on Recommendations requested under article 19 of the Constitution have been received from the following 21 countries: Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Chad, Comoros, [17] ILC, Report III(Part B), 113th Session, 2025.

Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti, Kyrgyzstan, Marshall Islands, North Macedonia, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Uganda and Yemen.

119. The Committee once again urges governments to provide the reports requested so that its General Surveys can be as comprehensive as possible and provide a complete picture of developments relevant to the impact of COVID-19 in areas that are particularly affected by the pandemic.

D. Submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities (article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 of the Constitution)

120. In accordance with its terms of reference, the Committee this year examined the following information supplied by governments of Member States pursuant to article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization:

(a) information on measures taken to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference from June 1970 (54th Session) to June 2023 (111th Session) (Conventions Nos 131 to 191, Recommendations Nos 135 to 208 and Protocols); and

(b) replies to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee at its 94th Session (November–December 2023).

121. Appendix IV of Part II of the report contains a summary of the most recent information received indicating the competent national authorities to which the following instruments were submitted and the date of submission: the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), adopted at the 108th Session of the Conference, as well as the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Convention, (No. 191), and the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Recommendation, 2023 (No. 207), as well as the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208), adopted at the 111th Session of the Conference. In addition, Appendix IV summarizes the information supplied by governments in 2024 with respect to the instruments adopted in earlier years and submitted to the competent authorities.

122. Additional statistical information is found in Appendices V and VI of Part II of the report. Appendix V, compiled based on information provided by governments, shows where each Member State stands in terms of its constitutional obligation of submission. Appendix VI shows the overall submission status of each instrument adopted since the 54th Session (June 1970) of the Conference. All instruments adopted prior to the 54th Session of the Conference have been submitted to the competent national authorities. The statistical data in Appendices V and VI are regularly updated by the competent units of the Office and can be accessed in NORMLEX.

103rd Session

123. At its 103rd Session in June 2014, the Conference adopted the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203). The Committee notes that 135 governments have provided information on the submission of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, to the competent national authorities, whereas 121 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 203 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, which entered into force on 9 November 2016, has been ratified by 60 Member States: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Chile, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Czechia, Denmark, Djibouti, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

104th Session

124. At its 104th Session in June 2015, the Conference adopted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 204 to the competent authorities ended on 12 June 2016, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 12 December 2016. The Committee notes that 118 governments have provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of Recommendation No. 204. It refers in this regard to Appendix IV of Part II of the report, which contains a summary of information supplied by governments on submission, including with respect to Recommendation No. 204. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit Recommendation No. 204 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

105th and 106th Sessions

125. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 105th Session of the Conference (May–June 2016). At its 106th Session, in June 2017, the Conference adopted the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent authorities ended on 16 June 2018, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 16 December 2018. The Committee notes that 104 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Recommendation No. 205 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

107th and 108th Sessions

126. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 107th Session of the Conference (May–June 2018). At its 108th Session, in June 2019, the Conference adopted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206). The 12-month period for submission of Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to the competent authorities ended on 21 June 2020, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 21 December 2020. The Committee notes that 111 governments have provided information on the submission of Convention No. 190, whereas 91 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 206 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that Convention No. 190, which entered into force on 25 June 2021, has been ratified by 45 Member States: Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Mauritius, Mexico, Namibia, Nigeria, North Macedonia, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, San Marino, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Uganda, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Uruguay. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

109th, 110th and 111th Sessions

127. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 109th Session of the Conference (May–June 2021 and November–December 2021). Moreover, no instrument was adopted at the 110th Session of the Conference (May–June 2022). At its 111th Session (June 2023), the Conference adopted the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Convention (No. 191) and the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Recommendation, 2023 (No. 207), as well as the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208). The 12-month period for submission of these instruments to the competent authorities ended on 12 June 2024, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 12 December 2024. The Committee notes that 25 governments have provided information on submission of these instruments to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit the above instruments to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to them.

Cases of progress

128. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Governments of the following countries: Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Democratic Republic of the Congo, North Macedonia, Nepal and Paraguay. It welcomes the efforts made by these Governments in overcoming significant delays in submission and taking important steps toward fulfilling their constitutional obligations to submit to their legislatures the instruments adopted by the Conference over a number of years.

Special problems

129. To facilitate the work of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, this report only mentions those governments that have not submitted the instruments adopted by the Conference to their competent authorities for at least seven sessions. These special problems are referred to as cases of "serious failure to submit". This time frame begins at the 100th Session (2011) and concludes at the 111th Session (2023), bearing in mind that the Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations during its 97th (2008), 98th (2009), 102nd (2013), 107th (2018), 109th (2021) and 110th (2022) Sessions. Thus, this time frame was deemed long enough to warrant inviting the governments concerned to a special sitting of the Conference Committee so that they could account for delays in submission. In addition, the Committee is also providing information in its observations concerning cases of "failure to submit", in relation to governments that have not submitted to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the last six sessions of the Conference.

130. The Committee notes that, at the opening of its 95th Session, the following 26 Member States (48 in 2020, 45 in 2021, 42 in 2022 and 25 in 2023) were in the category of "serious failure to submit": Angola, Bahrain, Belize, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Gambia, Grenada, Haiti, Hungary, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Oman, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, United Arab Emirates, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.

131. The Committee is aware of the exceptional circumstances that have affected some of these countries for years, as a result of which some of them have been deprived of the institutions needed to fulfil their obligation to submit instruments. At the 112th Session of the Conference (June 2024), some Government delegations supplied information explaining why their countries had been unable to meet their constitutional obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to their national legislatures. Further to the concerns raised by the Committee of Experts, the Conference Committee also expressed deep concern at the failure to respect this obligation. It pointed out that compliance with this constitutional obligation, which means submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to national legislatures, is of the utmost importance in ensuring the effectiveness of the Organization's standards-related activities.

132. The above-mentioned countries have been identified in observations published in this report, and the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols that have not been submitted are indicated in the statistical appendices. The Committee considers it worthwhile to alert the governments concerned so as to enable them immediately, and as a matter of urgency, to take appropriate steps to bring themselves up to date and into compliance with this obligation. The Committee recalls that governments may benefit from the measures the Office is prepared to take, upon their request, to assist them in taking the steps required for the rapid submission to their legislature of the pending instruments.

Comments of the Committee and replies from governments

133. As in its previous reports, the Committee makes individual observations in section II of Part II of this report on the points that should be brought to the special attention of governments. In general, observations are made in cases where there has been no information for five or more sessions of the Conference. Furthermore, requests for additional information on other points have been addressed directly to a number of countries (see the list of direct requests at the end of section II).

134. As the Committee has already pointed out, it is important that governments send the information and documents required by the questionnaire appended to the Memorandum adopted by the Governing Body in March 2005. The Committee must receive for examination a summary or a copy of the documents submitting the instruments to the legislative bodies, an indication of the date of submission, and be informed of the proposals made as to the action to be taken on the instruments submitted. The obligation of submission is discharged only once the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted to the legislature and a decision has been taken on them. The Office must be informed of this decision, as well as of the submission of instruments to the legislature.

135. The obligation of submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the ILO Constitution is one of the fundamental obligations of Member States. Unlike other multilateral treaties, where States may not be required to undertake any specific action, including ratification, even if they have participated in the adoption of the instruments, the ILO Conventions require going a step closer to international legislation, in the sense that the Constitution has made it an obligation for all Member States to promote their implementation, including their ratification, although ratification by itself is in the prerogative of a sovereign State and is not required under this constitutional obligation on submission. The Committee, therefore, reiterates the importance of the reporting obligation of Member States with respect to submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the Constitution, differentiating itself from other ordinary treaties and making ILO Conventions stand out in the universal framework of the protection of social rights.

136. The Committee hopes to continue to note cases of progress in this matter in its next report. It again reminds governments that they may seek technical assistance from the ILO, particularly through the standards specialists in the field.

* * *

137. Lastly, the Committee would like to express its profound appreciation for the invaluable assistance rendered to it by the officials of the Office, whose expertise, competence and devotion to duty make it possible for the Committee to accomplish its complex task.

Part II. Observations concerning particular countries

I. Observations concerning reports on ratified Conventions(articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Observations on serious failure to report

Afghanistan

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fifth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Ten reports are now due, including on fundamental and governance Conventions, which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the responsible authorities to send their reports without delay and advises them that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

While noting the complex situation prevailing in the country, the Committee trusts that the responsible authorities will honour their international commitments and provide information in response to the Committee's comments. The Committee reminds the authorities that they may avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Antigua and Barbuda

The Committee notes with concern that, the first reports on the application of the Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177), the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184), the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003, as amended (No. 185), the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), all due since 2023 have not been received. Two reports were received this year of the 28 requested. 26 reports are still due for this country including the first reports on the application of the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), and the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). Some of the reports due, including on fundamental and governance Conventions, should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports without delay on Conventions Nos 11, 29, 87, 98, 105, 122, 135, 138, 144, 151, 154 and 182 and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the by the Decent Work Technical Support Team for the Caribbean Countries and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Barbados

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the third year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. 16 reports are now due including the first report on the application of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The reports due, including on fundamental and governance Conventions, should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the Decent Work Technical Support Team for the Caribbean Countries and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Comoros

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. In addition, the first reports on the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), and the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), due since 2023, were not received. 30 reports are now due, including the first report on Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102). Most of the reports due, including on fundamental and governance Conventions, should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the Decent Work Technical Support Team for Eastern and Southern Africa, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Congo

The Committee notes with deep concern that, the first reports on the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003, as amended (No. 185), the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), have not been received despite its urgent appeals launched in 2020 and 2021. In addition, only 3 of the 15 reports requested this year have been received. 12 reports are still due, including on fundamental Conventions, some of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first reports without delay on Convention No. 185, MLC, 2006, and Convention No. 188 and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report in accordance with its constitutional obligation. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Tuvalu

The Committee notes with deep concern that, the first report on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), due since 2021, has not been received.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first report on Convention No. 182, without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of this report, the Committee may fully review the application of this Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report in accordance with its constitutional obligation. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Vanuatu

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the sixth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. The Committee also notes that the first report on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), due since 2021, has not been received. Nine reports are now due, including on fundamental Conventions, some of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments.

The Committee launches again an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues by the ILO Country Office for Pacific Island Countries in 2023 and the International Training Centre of the ILO in 2024, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Yemen

Freedom of association, collective bargaining, and industrial relations

Algeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the following representative employers' and workers' organizations received on: 17 September 2024 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), 30 August 2024 from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), 27 August 2024 from the National Autonomous Union of Public Administration Personnel (SNAPAP), 24 August 2024 from the Trade Union Confederation of Productive Workers (COSYFOP) and the National Union of Industrial Workers (SNSI), and 22 August 2024 from the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG). The Committee notes the replies provided in September 2024 by the Government to the observations and examines them below. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in response to the allegations contained in the observations to which it has not yet provided a response.

Measures against trade union leaders. The Committee previously requested information on several trade union leaders (Mr Kaddour Chouicha, Coordinator of the Higher Education Teachers' Union (SESS), Mr Fellah Hamoudi, member of the SNAPAP office, and Mr Morad Ghedia, Chairperson of the SNAPAP) who were subjected to judicial harassment, according to the allegations of the trade union organizations. In 2022, the Committee noted the Government's reply on the grounds for their arrest and conviction and requested information on the outcome of the legal procedures against them. The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates that it regularly provides information to the various ILO supervisory bodies, including this Committee, the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference and the Committee on Freedom of Association. The Committee observes that the case of Mr Fellah Hamoudi was examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of a complaint in March 2024 (Case No. 3434) and that on that occasion the Government indicated that Mr Fellah Hamoudi had been arrested and sentenced by the court in Tlemcen to three years in prison and a fine of 300,000 Algerian dinars (US$2,245) for acts punishable under the Criminal Code and the Associations Act of 2012. In the Government's view, this case does not constitute an obstacle to freedom of association, and Mr Fellah Hamoudi may exercise his right to appeal to the court in Tlemcen. Recalling the seriousness of the alleged offences against trade union leaders, namely harassment, arrest, detention and terrorism convictions, the Committee expects the Government to provide without delay the court decisions convicting the trade union leaders and any information on the follow-up, including any appeals lodged against the decisions in question.

Moreover, the Committee urges the Government to comment on the situation of the members and trade union leaders of the SNAPAP and the General and Autonomous Confederation of Workers in Algeria (CGATA) referred to in the communication received by the Office in August 2023, a copy of which was forwarded to the Government on 6 September 2023.

Lastly, the Committee notes that the communication from COSYFOP contains numerous allegations concerning harassment of its leaders and members. The Committee notes that these allegations were examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of a complaint. The Committee refers to the conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee on Freedom of Association (see 405th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, March 2024, Case No. 3434). The Committee notes that while the Committee on Freedom of Association did not express an opinion on whether the several convictions of trade unions leaders and members mentioned in the complaint represent a violation of freedom of association, it however underlined that the judicial decisions punishing trade union leaders and members are related to the expression of opinions in the exercise of trade union mandates, even if the Government disputes the existence of COSYFOP. Agreeing with the Committee on Freedom of Association that the authorities' threatening to press criminal charges in response to legitimate opinions of trade union representatives may have an intimidating and detrimental effect on the exercise of trade union rights, the Committee requests the Government to comment regarding the impact of such threats on lawful trade union activities.

Inviolability of trade union premises. With regard to the alleged closure of the premises of the CGATA and COSYFOP, the Committee notes with regret that the Government once again merely bases the administrative decision on what it considers to be the lack of legitimacy of the trade union leaders of COSYFOP and the CGATA and the alleged use of the premises for purposes that are not related to trade union activities. The Government reiterates that those concerned still have not asserted their right to complain to the courts to challenge the closure of headquarters. Noting that the Government does not dispute the closure of these premises by administrative decision, the Committee recalls that searches should only be possible when a warrant has been issued for that purpose by the regular judicial authority, when the latter is satisfied that there is good reason to presume that such a search will produce evidence for criminal proceedings under the ordinary law, and provided the search is restricted to the purpose for which the warrant was issued (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 114). The Committee once again urges the Government to reverse without delay the decisions to close the trade union premises of COSYFOP, the CGATA and the SNAPAP/CGATA taken by the administration without a court warrant.

Legislative issues

Implementation of legislation on the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 23-02 of 25 April 2023 on the exercise of the right to organize, and of Act No. 23-08 of 21 June 2023 concerning the prevention and settlement of collective labour disputes and the exercise of the right to strike. It noted that these two Acts amend existing provisions and introduce new provisions which provide clarification on the exercise of freedom of association and protection of the right to organize. It noted, however, that the trade union organizations had made numerous criticisms of Act No. 23-02 and immediately denounced the fact that it had been developed in consultation with a minority of the country's trade unions.

The Committee examined the Acts in light of the observations of the Government and the trade union organizations and recommended on many points that the Government initiate consultations with the social partners with a view to amending the provisions of the Acts indicating any measures taken in this respect. The Committee notes with concern that the Government merely provides information justifying the adoption of the legislative provisions which are the subject of its comments, without following up on the Committee's recommendations, with a few exceptions. The Committee is therefore bound to recall below the provisions in respect of which it urges the Government to take without delay the necessary measures, in consultation with representative employers' and workers' organizations, with a view to amending them.

Scope of application (section 2 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee urges the Government to consult the social partners, as a matter of urgency, on the measures to be taken to amend the requirements resulting from the application of section 2 of Act No. 23-02, so that trade union office in an enterprise is no longer restricted to persons employed by the enterprise in question, or to remove the requirement to belong to the occupation or to be an employee for at least a reasonable proportion of trade union officials. The Committee recalls that provisions of this type infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to elect representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons (such as full-time union officers or pensioners) from being elected, or by depriving the organizations of the experience of certain officers when they are unable to provide enough qualified persons from among their own ranks.

Independence of trade union organizations (sections 12 to 15 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee recalls that provisions imposing a general prohibition on political activities by trade unions or employers' organizations for the promotion of their specific objectives are contrary to the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review sections 12 to 15 of Act No. 23-02, in consultation with representative workers' and employers' organizations at the national level, with a view to amending them.

Trade union constitutions and rules of procedure (sections 37 to 42 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee recalls that the development of the trade union movement and its wider recognition as a social partner in its own right require workers' organizations to be able to voice their positions on political issues in the broad sense of the term, and, in particular, to express their views publicly on a government's economic and social policy. With regard to the political activities of the trade union movement, the Committee has expressed the view that both legislative provisions which establish a close relationship between trade union organizations and political parties, and those which prohibit all political activities by trade unions, give rise to serious difficulties with regard to the principles of the Convention. The Committee therefore recalls that provisions imposing a general prohibition on political activities by trade unions or employers' organizations for the promotion of their specific objectives are contrary to the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review sections 37 to 42 of Act No. 23-02, in consultation with representative employers' and workers' organizations at the national level, with a view to amending them.

Gifts and bequests (section 49 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee recalls the need to remove the requirement to obtain prior authorization from the public authorities with regard to gifts and bequests from national trade union organizations or foreign entities. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 49 of Act No. 23-02.

Term and number of trade union appointments (section 56 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee recalls that the right of workers' organizations to draw up their own constitutions and rules, organize their administration and formulate their programmes means that matters such as the establishment of the term of appointments must be left to the unions themselves in their constitutions and rules. The Committee considers that provisions regulating in detail the alternation in the leadership of workers' or employers' organizations are incompatible with the Convention as they amount to interference by the public authorities in trade union affairs. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 56 of Act No. 23-02.

Response to requests from the authorities (section 61 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee questions the wording of section 61, which imposes a duty to respond to all requests from the competent administrative authority but does not specify the nature, possible justifications or limits of such requests. Such a general provision poses challenges in that it could allow for continuous or harassing objections from the authorities and thereby give rise to risks of partiality or abuse. While the Government provides explanations for the wording of this section, it nevertheless indicates that, for the sake of clarity, section 61 will be reviewed under the amendment to Act No. 23-02. The Committee urges the Government to delete section 61 of Act No. 23-02 or to initiate consultations with representative workers' and employers' organizations in order to amend it.

Dissolution of trade unions (sections 64 to 67 of Act No. 23-02). The Government indicates that it will be able to provide information on the implementation of these legal provisions in its next reports. Recalling that the dissolution of trade unions constitutes an extreme form of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations, the Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information on the number of administrative appeals seeking the dissolution of trade unions under section 65, the specific grounds for such appeals, and the outcomes.

Procedures for the exercise of the right to strike (sections 41 to 46 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee recalls that strikes relating to the Government's economic and social policy, including general strikes, are legitimate and therefore should not be regarded as purely political strikes, which are not covered by the principles of the Convention. Trade unions and employers' organizations responsible for defending socio-economic and occupational interests should be able to use, respectively, strike action or protest action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policies which have a direct impact on their members. Moreover, with regard to so-called "sympathy" strikes, the Committee considers that a general prohibition of this form of strike action could lead to abuse, particularly in the context of globalization characterized by increasing interdependence and the internationalization of production, and that workers should be able to take such action, provided that the initial strike they are supporting is itself lawful (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 124 and 125). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to remove the excessive restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike contained in sections 42 and 45 of Act No. 23-08.

The Committee also requested the Government to clarify the concept of strike under section 42, which defines a strike as a collective and concerted stoppage of work "compatible with the activity of the enterprise and the continuity of public services". In its reply, the Government states that the legislative provision is understood to mean that the strike must be consistent with the requirements of the enterprise's activity, and also compatible with continuity of the public service insofar as the enterprise may include activities related to the production of essential goods (for example, pharmaceutical products and medical devices during a pandemic). The Committee requests the Government to provide practical examples where a collective stoppage of work has been considered incompatible with the employer's activity or with the continuity of the public service, pursuant to section 42 of Act No. 23-08, and to indicate any penalties imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to provide any list, drawn up on the basis of practice or by regulation, of jobs considered compatible with the continuity of the public service.

Lastly, the Committee noted that the Act requires that strike action be taken after exhaustion of the dispute settlement procedures provided for under Title II of the Act (sections 5 to 40). The Committee indicated that the established conciliation, mediation and voluntary arbitration procedures, which build on each other, could result in a settlement procedure lasting several months before a strike is called. In this regard, the Committee recalled that it considered, for example, that the imposition of a duration of over 60 working days as a precondition for the exercise of a lawful strike may make the exercise of the right to strike difficult, or even impossible (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 144). The Committee urges the Government to initiate consultations with representative workers' and employers' organizations in order to reduce the period of prior dispute settlement procedures provided for in Act No. 23-08.

Requisitioning (section 65 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee recalls that it is desirable to limit powers of requisitioning to cases in which the right to strike may be limited, or even prohibited, namely: (i) in the public service for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; and (iii) in the case of an acute national or local crisis, and considers that essential services, for the purposes of restricting or prohibiting the right to strike, are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 151 and 131). The Government indicates that the provisions concerning requisitioning have not yet been used. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any use of section 65 of Act 23-08, in the future.

Strike resolution (section 69 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee requests the Government to remove the provision envisaging the participation of the employer or representative thereof in the general meeting at which it is to be decided whether or not to return to work.

The Committee also notes with concern the observations of trade union organizations on the negative effect of the Act on their ability to develop their activities and its implementation by the authorities, including the labour inspectorate, which is detrimental to independent trade union organizations. The Committee therefore expects the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to give effect to its requests for amendments to the legislative framework introduced in 2023 on the exercise of freedom of association, including the right to strike, so as to bring it into conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

Registration of trade union organizations

The Committee recalls that it has been examining the issue of the registration of the Algerian Union of Employees of the Public Administration (SAFAP) and the Confederation of Algerian Trade Unions (CSA) since 2019. Regarding the SAFAP, the Government indicates that it expects the union to amend its constitution in accordance with Act No. 23-02. As to the CSA, the Government indicates that the trade union organization has been invited to amend its constitution in accordance with the new law. However, an examination of the constitution of the CSA, as well as the constitutions of some of the trade union organizations forming it, has revealed issues of conformity, particularly with section 38, which specifies the provisions that must be included in the constitutions of trade union organizations. The administration is still awaiting the conformity of the constitution of the CSA, as well as those of the trade union organizations forming it. The Committee expects the Government to complete processing the registration applications of the SAFAP and the CSA without delay.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the allegations of the National Union of Industrial Workers (SNSI), which denounces the administration's refusal to register its leadership that was renewed at a general meeting in July 2018. The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments in response to the allegations contained in the communication from the SNSI.

With regard to the situation of SNATEG, the Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association, during its last examination of the complaint (408th Report, October 2024, Case No. 3210), maintained its recommendations requesting the Government to review the decision to dissolve SNATEG without delay, taking due account of the factual evidence outlined, and in accordance with the principles of freedom of association and its international obligations. The Committee notes with concern that the Government merely states that the administration processed the application for the voluntary dissolution of SNATEG without interfering. The Committee is bound to reiterate its expectation that the Government will finally take the necessary measures to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in this case.

Lastly, the Committee is bound to remind the Government, which challenges the standing of members of COSYFOP (whose registration it contests) and the CGATA (whose registration it refuses) as trade union leaders, that the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent on registration and that the authorities should refrain from any interference which would restrict this right or impede its exercise, unless public order is disturbed or its maintenance seriously and imminently endangered. The Committee notes that these organizations once again denounce the administration's refusal to take measures to register them, despite their requests and willingness to engage in dialogue.

With regard to COSYFOP, the Committee recalls that its situation is before the Committee on Freedom of Association, which has made recommendations firmly urging the Government to make contact with COSYFOP in order to find a way out of the difference of opinion concerning the election of its leaders, in order to facilitate the registration process. The Committee endorses these recommendations (see 405th Report, March 2024, Case No. 3434). The Committee expects the Government to resolve the issue of the registration of COSYFOP, the CGATA and other trade union organizations awaiting registration under the new law without further delay.

In conclusion, the Committee once again urges the Government to further strengthen its efforts to ensure that full freedom of association is effectively guaranteed in law and in practice. Regretting that the Government has not taken any tangible measures despite the extent of the previously raised issues of conformity with the Convention, the Committee expects the Government to hold without further delay consultations with the representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned in order to revise the provisions of Acts Nos 23-02 and 23-08 in the light of its comments. The Committee urges the Government to report any progress in this regard.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the following representative employers' and workers' organizations received on: 17 September 2024 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), 30 August 2024 from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), 27 August 2024 from the National Autonomous Union of Public Administration Personnel (SNAPAP), 24 August 2024 from the Trade Union Confederation of Productive Workers (COSYFOP) and 22 August 2024 from the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in response to the allegations contained in these observations, in particular those relating to anti-union discrimination against union leaders and members.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee), in June 2024, concerning the application of the Convention by Algeria. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee requested the Government to: (i) strengthen cooperation with the independent social partners with a view to overcoming any outstanding challenge posed by the new legislation in order to provide the necessary guarantees for the protection of the right to organize and collective bargaining, in line with the Convention; (ii) adopt and effectively enforce legislation to strengthen the protection of workers against any forms of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference, including by intensifying the role of labour inspection; (iii) improve and speed up administrative and judicial procedures to identify and remedy acts of anti-union discrimination; (iv) ensure sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against anti-union discrimination; (v) revise the procedures for registering trade unions in order to reduce the duration of those procedures and ensure that measures to protect union leaders and members against reprisals are effectively implemented during such procedures; (vi) avoid any act of interference with the functioning of workers' organizations and employers' organizations, including the General Confederation of Algerian Employers (CGEA), to preserve their full autonomy and independence; (vii) review the relevant sections of Act No. 23-02 (concerning the exercise of the right to organize) with a view to ensuring the right to freely form workers' and employers' organizations to ensure that they set out precise, pre-established and objective criteria for the determination of employers' and workers' organization representativeness and that such criteria are effectively applied and ensure that employers' and workers' organizations are not prevented from receiving financial or other assistance by international workers' and employers' organizations; (viii) guarantee the right for minority unions to bargain at least on behalf of their own members; and (ix) guarantee that personal data of employers' and workers' organization members received to assess the continued representativeness of the respective organizations is kept under strict confidentiality so as to discourage any acts of anti-union discrimination.

The present examination by the Committee is based on the written and oral information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee, as well as on the information contained in its report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes with concern the observations provided by national and international trade union organizations concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and interference against independent trade unions and their leaders. The Committee recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association has had before it several cases concerning harassment and dismissal of trade union leaders and members, as indicated in the observations of the trade union organizations. The Committee refers to the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in the cases concerned, such as that of the COSYFOP (see 405th Report, March 2024, Case No. 3434) and of SNATEG (see 408th Report, October 2024, Case No. 3210).

The Committee previously expressed its concern at the allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference against the COSYFOP and affiliated trade union organizations, including threats against and dismissals of trade union leaders of BATIMETAL-COSYFOP, the Workers' Union of the Commission for Electricity and Gas Regulation (STCREG), the National Union of the Higher Institute of Management and the National Federation of Workers of the Social Security Funds, affiliated with the COSYFOP. The Committee expressed its expectation that the Government would ensure adequate protection for the leaders and members of these trade union organizations against any acts of anti-union discrimination and interference by the employers and administrative authorities concerned. In its reply, the Government merely stated that the COSYFOP and its three affiliated organizations (the National Union of the Railway Transport Sector (SNSTF)), the National Union of the Ammonia/Fertilizer Sector (SNSAE) and the National Union of the Commercialization and Distribution of Petroleum Products Sector (SNSCDPP)) had ceased all trade union activity since 1991, that it regularly submits information in this regard to the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of an ongoing complaint, specifying that these organizations have never provided the information necessary to assess their trade union representativeness or the renewal of their executive committees, and that consequently, as the complainants have not presented any evidence proving their membership, there are no legal grounds for the allegations. Recalling that its request concerned allegations of threats and anti-union dismissals against trade union leaders of BATIMETAL-COSYFOP, the STCREG, the National Union of the Higher Institute of Management and the National Federation of Workers of the Social Security Funds, the Committee urges the Government to provide without further delay its comments on the situation of the trade unionists named in the communications from the COSYFOP in 2023, indicating whether the organizations concerned continue their activities and are able to engage in collective bargaining in the establishments concerned.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern the new allegations of the COSYFOP of anti-union dismissals against the leaders of the Seasonal Forestry Workers' Union (Toufik Bensetra, Abdelkader Zouaoui and Yakhlef Kerlouf) and the inaction of the labour inspectorate despite its obligation to conduct an investigation and to communicate the findings to the trade union representative and his or her organization under Act No. 23-02 on the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the situation of the trade union leaders concerned and to indicate whether the Seasonal Forestry Workers' Union continues its activities and is able to engage in collective bargaining.

The Committee notes that, in response to the conclusions of the Conference Committee concerning the need to avoid any act of interference with the functioning of the General Confederation of Algerian Enterprises (CGEA), the Government indicates that this representative organization is protected under section 8 of Act No. 23-02 and that it is regularly consulted, in particular on the drafting and revision of labour, employment and social security legislation and regulations.

Implementation of new legislation. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 23-02 of 25 April 2023 on the exercise of the right to organize, and of Act No. 23-08 of 21 June 2023 concerning the prevention and settlement of collective labour disputes and the exercise of the right to strike. It made recommendations on certain provisions.

Procedures for protection against anti-union discrimination. In the light of the allegations of the trade union organizations concerning the failure of the labour inspectorate to act on the actions lodged with it following acts of anti-union discrimination and dismissals affecting organizations affiliated with the COSYFOP, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of sections 133 to 147 of Act No. 23-02 on procedures for the protection of salaried workers in the private sector and public servants and employees in public institutions and administrations against discrimination. The Committee duly notes the following statistics provided to the Conference Committee: the labour inspection services received 32 complaints from trade union delegates during the course of 2023, of which 26 were in the public sector and 6 in the private sector. The labour inspectorate undertook 32 investigations with employers, resulting in 5 warnings, 3 compliance notices, 4 violation reports and 2 situation reports. According to the Government, the action taken by labour inspectors led to the retraction of four penalties imposed by employers, including the cancellation of a dismissal. 24 complaints were found to be without merit by the labour inspectors responsible for the investigations. 16 other complaints were made by trade union delegates to conciliation offices, resulting in 15 reports of the failure of conciliation, and 1 complaint is still being processed.

The Committee notes that the COSYFOP expresses concern about the implementation of this new procedure for the protection of workers against anti-union discrimination because, according to the COSYFOP, the labour inspectorate: (i) most often rules against independent trade unions by aligning itself with the interests of employers and the administration; and (ii) complicates the access of trade union representatives to legal remedies, for example, by delaying or refusing to issue the documents necessary to challenge unfair dismissals before the courts. The COSYFOP therefore requests the Government to consult the workers' organizations concerned with a view to amending the legal provisions, with the assistance of the Office.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of sections 133 to 147 of Act No. 23-02, including up-to-date statistical data on the number of actions lodged with labour inspectorates, and the percentage of investigations carried out and their outcomes. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its comments in response to the concerns expressed above by the COSYFOP.

Moreover, the Committee previously noted that under the current legislation and procedures, it would be possible for an employer to dismiss the founding members of a union during the period when it was applying for registration (which in practice can take several years), without the latter benefiting from the protection afforded by the legislation against anti-union discrimination and requested the Government to take measures in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is prepared to initiate consultations with the social partners, as necessary, to improve trade union representativeness and protection. The Committee once again requests the Government to initiate consultations with the social partners to ensure adequate protection to trade union leaders and members during the period in which an established trade union is applying for registration, and to indicate any progress made in this regard.

Protection against interference. With regard to protection against interference under section 8 of Act No. 23-02, the Committee requested the Government to specify the exceptions provided for by law, to which the provision in question refers. According to the Government, the exception mentioned in section 8 refers to section 49 of the Act, which provides that gifts and bequests from external sources are acceptable only with prior authorization from the governmental authorities, which must verify the origin, amount and compatibility of these contributions with the trade union objectives. The Government indicates that sections 8 and 49 of Act No. 23-02 guarantee that trade unions operate independently and in accordance with the law. In this regard, the Committee refers to its observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), in which it reiterates the need to remove the requirement to obtain prior authorization from the public authorities with regard to gifts and bequests from national trade union organizations or foreign entities, and thus to amend section 49 of Act No. 23-02, which reproduces this obligation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any exceptions made to the implementation of section 8 of Act No. 23-02 in alleged cases of interference.

Determination of trade union representativeness. The Committee noted that under the terms of section 69 of Act No. 23-02, the representativeness of a trade union organization was determined by a minimum voting strength in professional elections, as well as the financial transparency of its accounts and its political neutrality. The Committee noted that the criterion of political neutrality contained could give rise to difficulties in that it could trigger risks of partiality or abuse and wished to know how the criterion of financial transparency was relevant to determining representativeness.

According to the Government, the criterion of financial transparency was introduced with the aim of ensuring rigorous management of the financial resources of trade unions, including contributions from their members, and is intended to strengthen the trust of members and prevent potential conflicts or disputes over the management of trade union organizations before the competent jurisdictions. In order to meet this criterion of financial transparency, trade unions are required to comply with the provisions set out in the Act (sections 46 to 52). As to political neutrality, the Government indicates that this criterion is intended to prevent any partisan political influence within trade unions, with a view to maintaining their independence and guaranteeing that decisions reflect the collective interests of the workers, irrespective of their political beliefs and affiliation. The political freedom of each member is guaranteed by the provisions of the Act (section 12), which provides that "the members of the trade union shall be free in an individual capacity to join political parties".

While noting the information provided, which is intended to explain how the Act seeks to guarantee the governance, including the financial governance, of trade unions, the Committee must insist on the fact that the reference to the criteria of financial transparency of accounts and political neutrality, pursuant to articles 69 et seq. of Act No. 23-02, for determining the representativeness of organizations to be engaged in collective bargaining may not provide the required guarantees of precision and objectivity, and thus give rise to risks of partiality or abuse. The Committee notes that the Government is willing to assess the effectiveness of the measures introduced by law and to improve the legislative framework within an inclusive and constructive social dialogue. In this spirit, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to consult with the representative employers' and workers' organizations on the means of recognition of representativeness under section 69 et seq. of Act No. 23-02, with a view to their revision. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to clarify the extent to which the criteria of financial transparency and political neutrality have been applied in practice when determining representativeness following professional elections.

Conditions for maintenance of representative status. The Committee recalls that its previous comments referred to the information to be provided to prove the representativeness of basic trade union organizations or to maintain the representative status of workers' and employers' organizations (sections 79 et seq. of the Act). This status is maintained by obtaining, every three years, a certificate issued by the competent governmental authority after the trade union organizations have provided information via an electronic platform. The Committee noted that the requirement to provide information concerning members in order to maintain representative status would obviate the criterion of election results. The Committee also noted that the completeness of the information that basic trade union organizations had to provide the employer and the labour inspectorate with, under the terms of section 79(3) of the Act, could raise difficulties with regard to the risks of anti-union discrimination, as the trade union organizations maintain. The Committee notes that the trade unions reiterate their concern in this respect. The Committee notes the Government's reply indicating that the information gathered via the electronic platform is protected by law and is not shared with employers under any circumstances. It cannot therefore be used for purposes of anti-union discrimination.

In this regard, the Committee considered it unnecessary to draw up a list of names of members of trade union organizations in order to determine membership numbers, since this could be established from a statement of union dues without drawing up a list of names, which would entail a risk of acts of anti-union discrimination. Noting once again that the Government states that it is committed to inclusive and constructive social dialogue with a view to assessing the effectiveness of the measures introduced by law and improving the legislation, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the representative employers' and workers' organizations, to remove the requirement to provide information that could facilitate acts of anti-union discrimination.

Renewal of representative status. The Committee previously indicated that the administrative approval mechanism for the validation and maintenance of the representative status of trade union organizations could have an impact on the development of industrial relations and collective bargaining and requested the Government to provide timely information on the renewal of the representative status of organizations. In its reply, the Government indicates that the Act is recent and that the majority of the mandates of trade unions have not yet expired. The information required is not yet available. Moreover, trade unions are currently engaged in the process of providing information for the assessment of their representativeness through the electronic platform, in accordance with the Act and Decree No. 23-359 of 17 October 2023, determining the procedures for the assessment of the representativeness of trade unions and the content of the statistical indicators of their membership. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be able to provide information on the renewal of the representativeness status of organizations, and to indicate the number of certificates provided each year and the number of refusals to renew, appeals and outcomes thereof.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In response to its request concerning the promotion of collective bargaining in the absence of a representative organization in a unit, the Committee notes the Government's clarifications concerning the right of minority trade unions to carry out actions, such as disseminating information and other initiatives to attract new members (section 70 of Act No. 23-02), and their right to appoint a trade union representative who may disseminate and display information relating to the trade union activities of his or her organization (section 95 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee once again requests the Government to clarify the extent to which, if no trade union attains the requisite threshold to be declared representative in professional elections, minority organizations might unite to negotiate a collective agreement applicable to the negotiating unit or, at least, conclude a collective on behalf of their respective members. In the absence of legislative or regulatory provisions that would allow such a solution, the Committee encourages the Government to initiate consultations with representative employers' and workers' organizations on the issue and to report on them.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the detailed data provided on the total number of collective agreements and accords signed between 2021 and part of 2024. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements and accords registered by the labour inspectorate, and to specify the sectors concerned as well as the number of workers covered.

Antigua and Barbuda

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference, and had requested the Government to provide information on cases concerning anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that there are no cases to report with regard to anti-union discrimination and that the Antigua and Barbuda Constitution grants inalienable rights to citizens. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and requests the Government to provide information of any cases concerning anti-union discrimination (especially with respect to the procedures and sanctions imposed).

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Azerbaijan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Bipartite negotiations. The Committee recalls that the Labour Code, 1999, makes a distinction between a "collective accord", concluded at the enterprise level following bipartite negotiations between workers and employers (section 29), and a "collective agreement", concluded at industry, territorial or national level following bipartite (between trade unions and the authorities, section 36(1)) or tripartite negotiations (between trade unions, employers' organizations and the relevant authority, section 36(2)). Recalling that tripartism may be appropriate for the regulation of questions of a larger scope but should not replace the principle of autonomy of the parties in collective bargaining on conditions of employment, the Committee had requested the Government to take appropriate measures, in consultation with the social partners, to encourage and promote collective bargaining between trade unions and employers and their organizations without involvement of public authorities. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) a Social Partnership Bill is in preparation in order to improve social partnership relations and strengthen the relevant legislative and institutional framework; (ii) the Tripartite Commission is currently drafting a "Model collective agreement for different types of economic entities" to encourage the conclusion of collective agreements at private enterprises. While taking due note of this information, the Committee regrets that no measures have been taken to amend section 36(2) of the Labour Code as to provide the possibility for organizations of workers and employers to conclude collective agreements following bipartite negotiations at levels other than the enterprise. The Committee is therefore compelled to repeat its previous request and hopes that the Government will take the appropriate measures in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Bahamas

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Commonwealth of the Bahamas Trade Union Congress received on 15 September 2024, which refer to the issues raised by the Committee below and to the lack of consultations with the social partners thereon.

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to amend the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) and other texts to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. In particular, the Committee referred to the need to amend the following provisions:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations without previous authorization:

- section 3 of the IRA and sections 39 and 40 of the Correctional Officers (Code of Conduct) Rules, 2014, to ensure that prison staff enjoy all rights and guarantees under the Convention;
- section 8(1)(a) and the First Schedule of the IRA, to ensure that, beyond the verification of formalities, the Registrar has no discretionary powers to refuse the registration of trade unions and employers' organizations.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules and to elect their representatives in full freedom and to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes:

- section 20(2) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct ballots for election or removal of trade union officers and for amendment of the constitution of trade unions without interference from the authorities;
- section 20(3) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct strike ballot without supervision by the authorities;
- sections 73, 76(1) and 77(1) of the IRA providing for compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike, so as to not excessively restrict the right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities;
- sections 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA, to ensure that no penal sanctions may be imposed for having carried out a peaceful strike;
- section 75 of the IRA, so as to allow organizations responsible for defending socio-economic and occupational interests to use strike action or protest action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members.

Article 5. Right to affiliate with international federations or confederations:

- section 39 of the IRA, so as to ensure the right of workers' and employers' organizations to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the IRA is still under review by the National Tripartite Council (NTC); (ii) the review of sections 20(2), 73, 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA is a top priority; and (iii) the Committee's request to repeal section 39 of the IRA, made since 2006, continues to be under review. The Committee also notes that, according to a public statement made by the chairperson of the NTC on 4 October 2024, the NTC resumed its meetings in October 2024 with a newly elected board and that its agenda for 2024–27 includes work on the implementation of ILO Conventions. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, including through bringing its comments to the attention of the NTC, with a view to ensuring that the legislation is amended without further delay. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this regard and reminds the Government of the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Commonwealth of the Bahamas Trade Union Congress (CBTUC) received on 15 September 2024 which highlight the need to strengthen social dialogue in the country and refer to issues examined by the Committee in this observation. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures for the adoption of legislative provisions giving effect to Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) it is working diligently on this matter, raised since 2013; and (ii) the review of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) by the National Tripartite Council (NTC) is still ongoing. The Committee also notes that, according to a public statement made by the Chairperson of the NTC on 4 October 2024, the NTC resumed its meetings in October 2024 and its agenda for 2024–27 includes work on the implementation of ILO Conventions. Recalling that this is a long-standing issue and considering that the review of the IRA is still ongoing, the Committee expresses its firm expectation that the Government will take the necessary measures to give effect to Article 2 of the Convention without further delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Representativeness. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 41 of the IRA provides that in order for a trade union to be recognized for bargaining purposes, it must represent at least 50 per cent of workers of the bargaining unit, and recalled that under a system of designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee regrets to note that the Government reiterates that there are no new developments in this regard as the IRA has not yet been amended. Recalling that it has been raising this issue for more than a decade, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures in the context of the ongoing review of the IRA so as to bring it into line with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Right of prison guards to bargain collectively. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that prison guards can fully enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee notes that, while the Government indicates that it acknowledges the comments made in this respect, it reiterates that there are no new developments to report. Recalling once again that the right to bargain collectively also applies to prison staff, and that the establishment of a simple consultation procedure for public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State is not sufficient, the Committee reiterates its firm expectation that the Government will take the necessary measures, including legislative ones, to ensure that prison guards can fully enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which 10 out of the 11 collective agreements received by the Department of Labour in 2022, covering sectors such as finance, telecommunications, health and education, are still pending registration. The Committee also notes the CBTUC's indication that some collective agreements are outstanding since 2018. Recalling that under the principle of free and voluntary negotiation enshrined in Article 4 of the Convention, the process of registration of collective agreements shall only involve checks on compliance with the legal minima and questions of form, the Committee expresses its concern as to the very long delays in the registration of collective agreements and requests the Government to provide further details in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide more comprehensive and updated information on: (i) the number of collective agreements signed, registered and in force in the country, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements; and (ii) the measures taken to promote collective bargaining.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance in relation to the above-mentioned issues and encourages the NTC to take its comments into account when undertaking its review of the IRA.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 10 September 2014, concerning matters examined under this comment, as well as other allegations of violations of the Convention in the law. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2016, which are of a general nature. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government since 1998 to provide information on developments in the process of reviewing legislation regarding trade union recognition. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that there are no further developments in the process of reviewing legislation regarding trade union recognition, and that a number of the observations made by the ITUC refer to issues concerning trade union registration. Hoping that it will be able to observe progress in the near future, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in the legislative review process and it recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee had noted the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication received on 31 August 2014. The Committee requests once again the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously noted that the new Employment Rights Act (ERA) only covered cases of anti-union dismissals (section 27) and limited this protection to employees continuously employed for a period of over one year. The Committee had recalled that the Government had adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination which should not be confined to penalizing dismissal on anti-union grounds, but should cover all acts of anti-union discrimination (demotions, transfers and other prejudicial acts) at all stages of the employment relationship, regardless of the employment period, including at the recruitment stage, and had therefore requested the Government to amend the new Act so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that section 40A of the Trade Union Act provides protection against acts of anti-union discrimination stating that an employer who dismisses a worker or adversely affects the employment or alters the positions of a worker to his prejudice because that worker takes part in trade union activities is guilty of an offence. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that under the proposed Employment (Prevention and Discrimination) Act, which is currently in an advanced stage of preparation, a person discriminates against another when that person on a ground specified (subsection (2)) creates an exclusion or shows a preference, the intent or effect of which is to subject the other person to any disadvantage, restrictions or other detriment, and that the Government will take immediate steps to include "trade union membership or trade union status" as a ground established in subsection (2). The Government further indicates that under the proposed Act, the Employment Rights Tribunal will have the power to make a range of orders, including paying to the complainant a compensation in an amount that may include exemplary damages. The Committee trusts that the new legislation will soon be adopted and will ensure adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

In its previous comment, the Committee had further noted that while sections 33–37 of the new ERA provided for the possibility of reinstatement, re engagement and compensation, the maximum amount of compensation awarded to workers who have been employed for less than two years is five-weeks wages, which, depending on the number of years of continuous employment, is increased by between two-and-a-half and three-and-a-half weeks wages for each year of that period (Fifth Schedule). The Committee had considered that the prescribed amounts do not represent sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for anti-union dismissal, and had therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Fifth Schedule of the new ERA so as to bring the compensation amount to an adequate level. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is proposing an amendment to the ERA that: (i) would allow the Chief Labour Officer to lodge cases before the Employment Rights Tribunal which may include persons employed for less than one year and where anti-union discrimination is being alleged; and (ii) gives power to the Tribunal to order an amount not exceeding 52 weeks' wages. The Committee recalls that the compensation envisaged for anti-union dismissal should: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; and (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprises concerned (it has considered, for example, that while compensation of up to six months' wages may be a deterrent for small and medium-sized enterprises, that is not necessarily the case for highly productive and large enterprises). The Committee trusts that the Government will take all the necessary measures to amend the ERA in line with the principles set out above, and requests the Government to provide information on any development in relation to the envisaged legislative amendment and its application in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Belarus

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Belarus Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP), received on 31 August and 15 September 2024, and of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 31 August 2024, referring to matters addressed in this comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

The Committee recalls that in its June 2023 resolution concerning the measures recommended by the Governing Body under article 33 of the ILO Constitution on the subject of Belarus, the Conference urged the Government of Belarus to receive as a matter of urgency an ILO tripartite mission with a view to gathering information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and subsequent recommendations of the supervisory bodies of the ILO, including a visit to the independent trade union leaders and activists in prison or detention. The International Labour Conference decided to hold at its future sessions a special sitting of the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) for the purpose of discussing the application of the Convention by the Government and the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, so long as the Government has not been shown to have fulfilled its obligations.

The Committee takes note of the conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee in June 2024 following the discussion on the application of Conventions Nos 87 and 98. The Conference Committee noted with deep concern the persistent disregard of the guidance, conclusions and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, the supervisory bodies and the Governing Body by the Government of Belarus and refusal to accept and implement them. It further expressed its deep concern and regret at the use of criminal sanctions against trade unionists engaged in legitimate trade union activities and the judicial harassment of trade union members, including arrests, prosecution and imprisonment. It deplored the repression against independent trade unions and the imprisonment of trade unionists and urged the Government to immediately release them, drop any charges and quash any convictions brought against them. It recalled that this case had been discussed repeatedly in the Committee before the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry, and deeply deplored the lack of progress towards the observance of the Conventions by the Government of Belarus. The Conference Committee deeply deplored the climate of state violence, intimidation and fear in Belarus which is not conducive to the free exercise of civil liberties; the continuing deterioration of freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining; and the erosion of the rule of law exemplified by the complete lack of independence of the judiciary. It took note of the March 2024 Governing Body action plan to implement the 2023 resolution and the High-Level Roundtable to discuss freedom of association in Belarus, which took place on 28 May 2024 and evidenced the persistent general climate of non-respect for basic civil liberties necessary to the exercise of freedom of association. The Conference Committee called on the Government to take all possible measures with the greatest urgency to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and all subsequent observations made by the supervisory bodies of the ILO regarding compliance with the Conventions. It also requested the Government with the utmost urgency to accept an international humanitarian mission to ensure that independent doctors can visit all imprisoned trade unionists to assess their health and offer medical assistance, as necessary; and an ILO tripartite mission to assess the situation and visit trade unionists that are currently in prison or detention. The Conference Committee decided to include the discussions and conclusions of the special sitting in a separate part of its report.

At the outset, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government indicates that since its 2023 report, there have been no significant changes in law and practice that would affect the application of the Convention and once again merely reiterates the information it had previously provided and considers that the Committee misunderstands and misinterprets the situation on the ground.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee recalls that it urged the Government to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities, and to drop all related charges. The Committee also urged the Government to receive without further delay an ILO tripartite mission with a view to gathering information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and subsequent recommendations of the supervisory bodies of the ILO, including a visit to the independent trade union leaders and activists in prison or detention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it had repeatedly drawn attention to the lack of grounds and outright absurdity of allegations that the country's trade unions and citizens were persecuted for carrying out trade union activities and legally and peacefully exercising civil rights and liberties. According to the Government, the ILO is being misled by the complaints of politically motivated individuals and organizations, and therefore continues to erroneously assume that the 2020 protests were motivated by economic and social considerations, were lawful and peaceful, and were directed at protecting civil and trade union rights and liberties. The Government insists that purely political events, unrelated to the processes of social dialogue in the workplace and the exercise of trade union rights, should not serve as a basis for assessing compliance with the Convention and should not be considered when monitoring the implementation thereof. The 2020 protests were artificially encouraged by outside forces, were unlawful and were intended to seize power by unconstitutional means. The protestors' demands (the resignation of the Head of State, fresh elections, exoneration of law breakers) had nothing to do with the protection of citizens' labour, social and economic interests or the tasks that trade unions are bound to perform. The Government considers that the authors of the complaints deliberately brought political issues to the ILO in order to discredit Belarus internationally, justify unprecedented unilateral restrictive measures against the country, escalate political pressure on the legitimate authorities and launch another wave of sanctions based on ILO decisions. The Government reiterates that all citizens and trade unions referred to in the complaints and comments of the ILO supervisory bodies had been prosecuted for specific unlawful acts not connected with the lawful and peaceful exercise of trade union rights and freedoms. The Government points out that it had already commented on several occasions on the reasons for their prosecution. These individuals have been prosecuted for crimes such as gross violation of public order resulting in disruption to transport and enterprises; violence against internal affairs officers; calls for action to harm national security; incitement to ethnic or social enmity and discord on the grounds of ethnic and social affiliation; facilitation of extremist activities; defamation; and damage to property in public places. Several of these individuals were members of the foreign-funded extremist formation Rabochy Rukh (Workers' Movement), whose principal aim is to involve employees of state-owned industrial enterprises in radical political activity so as to obtain inside information on their operations, stop the production process and strengthen sanctions against Belarus. In addition to committing extremist crimes, the members of this formation engaged in illegally gathering and passing on restricted inside information about Belarusian economic entities to foreign states, foreign organizations and their representatives. Thus, the Government indicates, all calls for the dismissal of all charges against these individuals and their immediate release had no objective legal basis. The review of sentences, interaction with the convicted persons and their release from custody falls within the exclusive competence of law enforcement agencies and courts, interference in the activities of which is inadmissible and entails liability in accordance with the law. The Government recalls that the activities of the BKDP and its member organizations were terminated by the Supreme Court decisions on the basis that they contradicted the national Constitution and other legislation, and caused harm to the State or public interests. The Government reiterates that national legislation does not allow copies of court and other documents to be provided to parties who are not involved with the proceedings. This practice is dictated by legal provisions aiming to ensure protection of individuals' personal data and their rights and freedoms when their personal data is processed. Furthermore, since the individuals in question were not prosecuted in connection with their trade union activities or their exercise of other legal rights and freedoms guaranteed by Conventions Nos 87 and 98, the Government believes that the Committee's requests for copies of court decisions go beyond the obligations assumed by Belarus under these Conventions and are excessive.

With regard to the calls by the Committee and other ILO bodies for a tripartite ILO mission to visit Belarus to gather information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and the subsequent recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, including visits to individuals who are imprisoned or detained, the Government indicates that in the context of the utterly discriminatory and blatantly politicized decision on Belarus taken at the instigation of Western countries during the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2023 with the aim of widening the unlawful pressure on the Belarusian State, currently, there is no political or practical reason for organizing a mission to the country (which would very probably also be used to escalate illegitimate pressure).

The Committee notes the BKDP indication that as of 14 September 2024, more than 50 trade union and labour leaders and activists were under criminal persecution, that is, were either imprisoned/imposed a penalty of restriction of freedom or were released but not exonerated. The BKDP reiterates, with respect to the latter category of persecuted individuals, that the national legislation provides for a system of restrictions on the rights of those who have served their sentences (for example prohibition from leaving the country, the city, or even apartment without police permission; recorded video checks several times a day and even at night; the obligation to appear at the police station for preventive measures in the form of talks and collective watching of patriotic pro-government films; ban on specific professional activities, including public service positions and educational activities; ban on organizing mass events for two to five years after serving the sentence; bank accounts controlled by special services can be frozen). The BKDP further indicates that the Government approved lists of "extremists" and "terrorists" that included all those released activists and that it can take up to five years to be removed from the "terrorist" list, and up to ten years from the "extremist" list. The BKDP provides a list of 32 trade union and labour leaders and activists imprisoned (including Mr Aliaksandr Yarashuk, the BKDP Chairperson and member of the ILO Governing Body) or whose freedom of movement was otherwise restricted, and a list of 28 trade union and labour leaders and activists released, but not exonerated.

The BKDP provides further information on the situation of the following prosecuted trade unionists:

- Mr Leonid Soudalenko (activist of the Belarusian Union of Radio and Electronics Workers (REP), labour lawyer): was sentenced in absentia by a judge of the Gomel Regional Court on 18 June 2024 to five years of imprisonment and a fine of 26,000 Belarusian rubles (approximately €7,700) under sections of the Criminal Code on "facilitating extremist activities". Due to well-founded fears of persecution after serving his previous three-year sentence in July 2023, Mr Soudalenko was forced to flee Belarus and therefore cannot exercise his right to defence. His rights to a defence and fair trial were substantially violated during this process, including due to the fact that the defence attorney appointed by the State refused to provide him with the requested procedural documents, including the decision to initiate the case and a copy of the verdict. Mr Soudalenko filed applications with the Gomel Regional Prosecutor's Office and the Gomel Regional Investigative Committee to initiate a criminal case against the attorney under section 204 of the Criminal Code "refusal to provide information to a citizen". He also appealed the verdict; the hearing was scheduled for 17 September 2024.
- Ms Volha Brytsikava (leader of the Belarus Independent Trade Union (BNP)): on 11 June 2024, the Supreme Court judicial panel rejected her appeal against her sentencing to three years of imprisonment under section 130(1) of the Criminal Code "inciting racial, national, religious or other social hatred or discord". The proceedings were held in a closed session. On 28 June 2024, the Ministry of Internal Affairs put Ms Brytsikava on the "extremists" list. On 20 August 2024, another closed trial was held to examine three new charges under the following sections of the Criminal Code: 361(3) "calls for restrictive measures (sanctions) and other actions aimed at harming the national security of the Republic of Belarus", punishable by up to six years of imprisonment, with or without a fine; 130(1) "incitement of racial, national, religious or other social hostility or enmity", punishable by up to five years of imprisonment; and 361-4(1) "facilitating extremist activities", punishable by up to six years of imprisonment, with or without a fine. Currently, she cannot receive money transfers.
- Ms Palina Sharenda-Panasiuk (REP activist who was sentenced to one year of imprisonment under the following sections of the Criminal Code: 411(2) "malicious disobedience to the requirements of the administration of a correctional institution executing a sentence of imprisonment" on 10 September 2023, and 364 "violence or threat of violence against an internal affairs officer", 369 "insulting a representative of authority", 368 "insulting the President of the Republic of Belarus" on 9 June 2021): in early July 2024, Ms Sharenda-Panasiuk was transferred to the Minsk Republican Scientific and Practical Center for Mental Health for a psychiatric examination. This was her fourth examination. In July 2024, her relatives received a communication from the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) stating that the activist was diagnosed with "moderate chronic pancreatitis", a dangerous disease, the treatment of which was complicated in prison conditions. It would appear that since 14 September 2024, Ms Sharenda-Panasiuk was in Gomel Pretrial Detention Center although for a long time, the family did not know where she was; on 10 September 2024, she was placed in a punishment cell.

- Mr Siarhei Shelest (member of Rabochy Rukh and BNP Naftan activist who was sentenced to 14 years of imprisonment on 17 February 2023 under the following sections of the Criminal Code: 188 "defamation", 356(1) "treason against the State", 361-1(3) "creation of an extremist formation or participation in it"): the administration of the Penal Colony No. 2 in Babruysk artificially created situations where Mr Shelest was subject to disciplinary sanctions. On 1 May 2024, he was placed in cell-type premises, which, according to the BKDP has more severe restrictions on rights than punishment cells.

The BKDP further alleges that in cooperation with the management of certain enterprises, mass detentions of workers took place during their working hours in May–August 2024. Workers were arrested, convicted and sentenced to 15 days of administrative arrest under section 19.11 of the Code on Administrative Offences "distribution, production, storage, transportation of information products containing calls for extremist activities or promoting such activities". Some were later fired from their respective workplaces. In addition, two activists of the Free Belarusian Trade Union (SPB) were arbitrarily detained by the Department of Financial Investigations for making donations to victims of human rights violations through the initiative ByHelp. They were threatened with criminal prosecution under section 361-2 of the Criminal Code "financing extremist activities". The condition for their release was the payment of US$500 and US$1,000 to the State Institution "Republican Center for the Organization of Medical Response". The BKDP provides details on the Government's inclusion of materials of independent trade unions, their leaders and activists of the labour movement in the lists of "extremist" materials, which restricted workers' rights to access information to coordinate their joint actions. The distribution (including through websites, social networks and so on), public display of extremist materials, their production, publication, storage and transportation for the purpose of distribution are prohibited. The legal consequences of recognition as "extremist" materials is their ban on the territory of Belarus and the basis for bringing to administrative responsibility under section 19.11 of the Code on Administrative Offences which carries a possible sentence of an administrative arrest of up to 30 days. The BKDP indicates in this regard that on 15 July 2024, information materials of the BNP at the Belaruskali 1st Mine were recognized by the Salihorsk District Court of Minsk region as extremist.

The Committee notes with deep concern the information communicated by the BKDP regarding the list of 47 trade union leaders and activists currently detained or whose freedom of movement is restricted. The Committee also notes with deep concern the information provided by the BKDP and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) to the Governing Body at its 352nd Session, indicating that violations of freedom of associations and civil liberties have not only not been addressed but have worsened due to the State campaign of persecution of leaders and activists of the workers' movement. It is now impossible for independent trade unions and their members to carry out their activities in Belarus. Anyone who associated himself or herself with independent trade unions and participated in their activities is subject to criminal liability punishable, under the Criminal Code, by restriction of freedom or imprisonment for a term of up to ten years. The recent pardons of some political prisoners and prisoners of conscience by Mr Lukashenko (in July, August and September 2024) cannot be considered as actions to restore the rights violated by the State as a mandatory condition for pardon is admission of guilt of committing the crime.

The Committee once again deplores the Government's unwillingness to take steps for the release of the detained trade union leaders and members. The Committee further once again deplores that on the one hand the Government reiterates that trade unionists had been prosecuted for specific unlawful acts not connected with the lawful and peaceful exercise of trade union rights and freedoms and, on the other, it fails to provide a copy of the judicial decisions as previously requested by the Committee. The Committee emphasizes that the right to a fair and public hearing implies the right for the judgment or decision to be made public and that the publicizing of decisions is an important safeguard in the interest of the individual and of society at large. The very essence of judicial procedure is that its results are known, and confidence in its impartiality rests on their being known. The Committee recalls that the absence of guarantees of due process of law may lead to abuses and may also create a climate of insecurity and fear which may affect the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary steps, including legislative, if necessary, to ensure the right to a fair trial. Further in this respect, the Committee, with reference to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, stresses the need to ensure impartial and independent judiciary and justice administration in general, in order to guarantee that investigations into these grave allegations are truly independent, neutral, objective and impartial. Accordingly, the Committee also renews its request that the Government take steps, including by legislation, if necessary, to supply copies of the relevant court decisions upholding detention and imprisonment of workers and trade unionists.

The Committee further once again recalls that for a number of years the ILO supervisory bodies, including this Committee, have been drawing the Government's attention to the International Labour Conference 1970 resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties, which emphasizes that the rights conferred upon workers' and employers' organizations must be based on respect for civil liberties, as their absence removes all meaning from the concept of trade union rights. With reference to its previous comments and the 406th Report (March 2024) of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) on Measures taken by the Government of the Republic of Belarus to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee considers that the failure of the Government to acknowledge, address and redress very serious allegations of violation of civil liberties; or to act on the repeated specific requests of the ILO supervisory bodies, including those made by this Committee; or to provide information beyond that which had been already examined by this Committee, as well as by other ILO supervisory bodies and the Governing Body, together reinforces the reality of wilful Government non-compliance with its obligations stemming from its membership in the Organization. In these circumstances, the Committee firmly urges the Government to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities, and to drop all related charges. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed reply to all allegations outlined above. With reference to the Conference Committee conclusions and the decision of the Governing Body at its 352nd Session, the Committee requests the Government with the utmost urgency to accept: (i) an international humanitarian mission to ensure that independent doctors can visit all imprisoned trade unionists to assess their health and offer medical assistance, as necessary; and (ii) an ILO tripartite mission to assess the situation and visit trade unionists that are currently in prison or detention.

Application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the outstanding issues of the application of the Convention relate to the following concerns, all of which were raised by the Commission of Inquiry: (1) right to establish workers' organizations, which includes the issue of legal address and the right, in practice, to form trade unions outside the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FPB); (2) the right of workers' organizations to receive and use foreign gratuitous aid (funding obtained from abroad); (3) the right, in law and in practice, to demonstrate and hold mass events; (4) the right to strike; (5) consultation with organizations of workers and employers; and (6) labour disputes resolution system. The Committee observes with deep regret the absence of information on the concrete measures taken by the Government to give effect to the Committee's previous requests aimed at addressing these concerns. Instead, the Government merely reiterates the information it has previously provided and points to a lack of contradiction between national law and practice and the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound once again to urge that the Government take measures to amend without further delay Decree No. 3 (on receiving and using foreign gratuitous aid), the Law on Mass Activities and the accompanying Regulation, as well as section 342-2, 369, 369-1 and 369-3 of the Criminal Code providing for restrictions on mass events and associated penalties, in order to bring them into compliance with the Government's international obligations regarding freedom of association. It also once again urges the Government to take measures to revise sections 388(1), (3) and (4), 390, 392 and 393 of the Labour Code restricting the right to strike; as well as section 42(7), which expressly allows an employer to dismiss or terminate a labour contract with a worker who is absent from work in connection with serving an administrative penalty in the form of an administrative arrest; a worker who forces other workers to participate in a strike or calls on other workers to stop performing work duties without sound reason; or a worker who participates in an illegal strike or other forms of withholding labour without sound reasons. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on all new and concrete steps taken in this regard.

In its previous comment, the Committee deplored the effect of the dissolution of the BKDP on the work of the National Council on Labour and Social Issues (NCLSI) and of the tripartite Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere (the tripartite Council). In this respect, the Committee noted that with the dissolution of the BKDP, the only representation of workers' voice in these structures was now the FPB, which enjoyed the publicly expressed support from State authorities at the highest level, and whose independence from the authorities was questionable. In these circumstances, the Committee questioned the continuing legitimacy of the NCLSI and the tripartite Council. Considering that the development of free and independent organizations and their involvement in social dialogue is indispensable to enable a government to confront its social and economic problems and resolve them in the best interests of the workers and the nation, the Committee urged the Government to take steps to review the situation of the dissolved trade unions in this light so as to ensure that they may again function. The Committee notes with deep concern the Government's indication that the BKDP and trade unions that were part of it have no legal existence in Belarus and the absence of any measures taken to review the situation of the dissolved trade unions so as to ensure that they may again function and fully participate in national tripartite bodies. The Committee reiterates in the strongest terms its previous requests and expects the Government to indicate concrete steps taken to that end.

While noting the information provided by the Government on the FPB being the only national trade union centre, the Committee notes the 2024 report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Belarus, which provided an overview of major concerns regarding human rights in Belarus between 1 April 2023 and 31 March 2024 and focused on the right to freedom of association, revealing a targeted eradication of all independent associations in Belarus since 2021, which affected civil society organizations and initiatives, including trade unions. In its conclusions and recommendations, "[a]cknowledging the lack of independence of the FPB, the Special Rapporteur recommend[ed] suspending its participation in the International Labour Conference". The Committee also notes the BKDP indication that the FPB continued to demonstrate strong affiliation with the Government and lack of independence. Events of an ideological and propaganda nature were regularly held at Belarusian enterprises with the participation of the management, leaders of the FPB-affiliated trade unions, Government officials and law enforcement officers. According to the BKDP and the ITUC, the FPB trade unions had recently held a "celebration" of the 30th anniversary of Alexander Lukashenko's tenure in power; one of its unions, "Belkhimprofsoyuz" conducted excursions to Lukashenko's places of birth and life before becoming the President. The Committee notes that the ILO Governing Body requested the Director-General to bring to the attention of the Credentials Committee of the International Labour Conference at the 113th Session, the information noted and discussed by the Governing Body at its 352nd Session (October–November 2024), so that it might take it into account in its monitoring of the nomination of the Workers' delegation of Belarus as decided by the Conference at its 112th Session (2024) and in the examination of any new objection concerning the subject.

The Committee previously noted that Law No. 225-Z of 12 December 2022 on employers' associations provided for the notion of a "confederation of employers of the Republic of Belarus", defined as the most representative employers' organization. The Committee observed that two employers' organizations were members of the tripartite Council and were signatories of the General Agreement and requested the Government to indicate the impact of the certification of one employers' organization as confederation under the Law on the membership of the tripartite Council. The Committee notes the Government's indication that according to the Law, an "Employers' Confederation of the Republic of Belarus", as the most representative national employers' association, is to coordinate the activities of employers' associations within the social partnership system. A national employers' association to which more than half of the national employers' associations operating in Belarus belong, is to be recognized as the Employers' Confederation of the Republic of Belarus. The Government informs that Resolution No. 29 of the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection of 29 August 2023 was adopted in implementation of the Law. The Resolution sets out, among others, instructions on the arrangements for adopting a decision to recognize a national employers' association as an Employers' Confederation of the Republic of Belarus. The Government indicates that at present, both the Confederation of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs (Employers) and the Professor M.S. Kuniavsky Business Union of Entrepreneurs and Employers are included in the register of employers' associations as national associations. No decision to recognize any national employers' association as the Employers' Confederation of the Republic of Belarus has yet been taken. Both national employers' associations are represented on the NCLSI and the tripartite Council and play an active role in drafting the new General Agreement between the Government and national employers' and trade union associations for 2025–27, although only the most representative association is entitled to sign an agreement, which currently is the Confederation of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs (Employers). The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the above-mentioned Resolution No. 29 of 29 August 2023 and to inform it of any decision on certification of an association as an Employers' Confederation.

The Committee deplores the total lack of progress in implementing the recommendations of the 2004 Commission of Inquiry and in addressing the outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, and similarly deplores the continuing deterioration of freedom of association in the country. The Committee once again urges the Government to engage with the ILO with a view to fully implementing all outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies without further delay.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee expected that the ILO Director-General would appoint a special envoy to: (1) oversee all activities relevant to ensuring the prompt and effective implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and to that end, engage with all the relevant stakeholders, including the Government and UN agencies; and (2) systematically and regularly report to the Governing Body on the work he or she has conducted with a view to ensuring the implementation of the Conference resolution. While noting that the Government has not yet expressed its willingness to cooperate in this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to cooperate with the special envoy towards the implementation of the recommendations of ILO supervisory bodies as it firmly believes that a concerted effort on the part of the Government in this respect will be beneficial to Belarussian society as a whole.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

The Committee recalls that in its June 2023 Resolution concerning the measures recommended by the Governing Body under article 33 of the ILO Constitution on the subject of Belarus, the International Labour Conference urged the Government of Belarus to receive as a matter of urgency an ILO tripartite mission with a view to gathering information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and subsequent recommendations of the supervisory bodies of the ILO, including a visit to the independent trade union leaders and activists in prison or detention. The Conference decided to hold at its future sessions a special sitting of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee) for the purpose of discussing the application of the Convention by the Government and the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, so long as the Government has not been shown to have fulfilled its obligations.

The Committee takes note of the conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee in June 2024 following the discussion on the application of Conventions Nos 87 and 98. The Committee deplores the continuing deterioration of freedom of association in the country, as detailed in its comment on the application of Convention No. 87, and notes with deep regret that in its report, the Government once again merely reiterates the information it had previously provided and indicates that the legislation and practice are in compliance with the Convention. With reference to its comment on the application of Convention No. 87, the Committee once again urges the Government to engage with the ILO with a view to fully implementing all outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies without further delay. In this respect, the Committee urges the Government to receive without further delay an ILO tripartite mission with a view to assessing the situation, as requested by the Conference Committee.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend the Settlement of Disputes in Essential Services Act 1939 (SDESA), which empowers the authorities to refer a collective dispute to compulsory arbitration to prohibit a strike or to terminate a strike in the banking sector, civil aviation, port authority, postal services, social security scheme and the petroleum sector, i.e. services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that the SDESA has not been amended. The Committee therefore reiterates its long-standing request and urges the Government to provide information on the steps taken, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the Schedule to the SDESA in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration or a prohibition on strikes is permitted only in services that are essential in the strict sense of the term – that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled allegations by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of anti-union discrimination in the banana plantation sector and in export processing zones and requested the Government to ensure that the competent authorities take fully into account in their control and prevention activities the issue of anti-union discrimination, and that the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee notes that the Government states that no acts of anti-union discrimination were denounced to the authorities in the above-mentioned sectors during the reporting period (July 2017 to June 2021). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that its Labour Department has been closely monitoring these sectors by conducting inspections of workplaces to ensure that workers are adequately protected, including against acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of their employment. While it welcomes the information provided regarding the conduct of labour inspections, the Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that Belizean workers are fully informed of their rights with respect to anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to continue reporting on any statistics concerning the anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee raised the need to amend section 25 of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act (TUEOA), which provides that the tripartite body entrusted with the certification of the representative trade unions may, before granting any certification to a trade union, include additional employees to the bargaining unit, or exclude some employees therefrom in order to render the unit more appropriate. The Committee notes that the Government states that section 25 of the TUEOA was not amended but that discussions continue at the Labour Advisory Board and the Tripartite Body regarding the TUEOA, which is likely to be amalgamated with the Trade Unions Act. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that objective and pre-established criteria for the certification of the representative trade unions are provided under the new legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the text once adopted.

The Committee previously requested the Government to continue promoting social dialogue in order to bring section 27(2) of the TUEOA, which stipulates that a trade union may be certified as the bargaining agent if it is supported by at least 51 per cent of employees, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that no agreement was reached on any legislative changes in this regard, but that discussions continue at the Tripartite Body and the Labour Advisory Board regarding a proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act which would amalgamate the Trade Unions Act and the TUEOA. The Committee recalls that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativity to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 233). Noting the Government's indication that ten collective agreements covering a total of 1592 workers were concluded between 2007 and 2021, the Committee considers that the very low coverage of collective agreements in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining contained in the legislation. In this regard, the Committee also recalls that under a system of the designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 234). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the discussions concerning the proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act, to bring its legislation into line with the Convention with respect to the representativity of bargaining agents. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and reminds it of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. As already mentioned above, the Committee notes that the Government reports that the ten collective agreements reached between 2007 and 2021 were concluded in the energy, public services, port, communications, banking, food and municipal sectors, and that five of these agreements, including one which was renewed, were still in force at the end of the reporting period. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, and to report on any measures taken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2021 and 2023 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). It also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2024 in which it reiterates the comments made to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention by Cambodia. The Committee also notes the observations of the ITUC received on 17 September 2024 expressing its deep concern about the widespread anti-union climate which prevails in the country and the persistence of long-standing legal and practical obstacles to the exercise of freedom of association. The ITUC alleges that workers' rights under the Convention continue to further deteriorate, and that the Government has failed to take action on the many issues that have been raised by the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee notes that these observations refer to serious issues that are examined below.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Conference Committee at the 112th Session of the Conference (2024) and observes that, after noting the long-standing nature of this case and deeply regretting the lack of timely reporting by the Government on the application of the Convention to the Committee, the Conference Committee urged the Government to:

- take all necessary measures to prevent the arbitrary arrest, detention and prosecution of trade unionists for undertaking legitimate trade union activity;
- conclude the ongoing investigations into the murders of trade union leaders Chea Vichea and Ros Sovannareth (in 2004) and Hy Vuthy (in 2007) and expedite the investigations of all other allegations of violence perpetrated against trade unionists;
- review the list of pending cases related to the January 2014 demonstrations with the trade unions concerned;
- ensure that no criminal charges or sanctions are imposed in relation to the peaceful exercise of trade union activities and that trade unionists detained for undertaking legitimate trade union activity are immediately released;
- develop guidelines and provide regular and systematic training to all relevant public officers with a view to ensuring that legitimate trade union activity is not suppressed;

- take further appropriate measures to facilitate registration of trade unions through a simple, objective and transparent process;
- promote the effective enjoyment of the rights under the Convention by civil servants, including public sector teachers, and by domestic workers and workers in the informal economy;
- amend sections 17 and 27 of the Law on Trade Unions (LTU), so that audits to the financial statements and activity reports are only required if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or to the law;
- amend the relevant provisions of the LTU to ensure that workers' or employers' organizations can only be dissolved on the basis of the procedures laid down by their statutes, or by a court ruling, and that the determination of the procedures for dissolution by members is left to the trade unions' or employers' associations own rules and by-laws;
- take appropriate measures to ensure that all trade unions have the right to represent their members in collective disputes in grievance proceedings at the enterprise level and the ministerial level, as well as before the Arbitration Council;
- increase efforts to make the Arbitration Council an effective and sustainable institution in handling labour disputes.

The Conference Committee also requested the Government to fully implement the road map and simplify its progress report on the implementation of the 2022 direct contacts mission's recommendations, in full consultation with the social partners and with the support of the ILO. It also noted the willingness of the Government to cooperate with the ILO and invited it to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to effectively implement all of the Committee's recommendations.

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report indicating that the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training (MLVT) has requested technical assistance and support from the ILO on the implementation of the Conference Committee's recommendations concerning: (i) the guidelines for national police officers on how to respond to peaceful strikes and demonstrations; (ii) training for national police officers on the said guidelines; and (iii) the effective implementation of the recommendations through a tripartite mechanism. The Government indicates that it has decided to update the composition of the "National Committee on Reviewing the Application of International Labour Conventions Ratified by Cambodia" (NCRILC) so that it would become a tripartite mechanism to implement the recommendations made by the Conference Committee in 2024 and the direct contacts mission in 2022. The Government indicates that the NCRILC met on 1 August 2024 with the participation of the ILO to discuss concrete steps for an effective implementation of the said recommendations. The Committee welcomes the Government's indications and request for ILO technical assistance, which it notes will be provided soon. The Committee urges the Government to adopt as soon as possible, in consultation with the social partners, each and every measure that it has been urged to take by the Conference Committee. The Committee expresses its firm hope that the technical assistance of the Office will contribute to progress in the adoption of specific, effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, in order to bring the legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention with regard to the points set out below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

Murders of trade unionists. In its previous comment, the Committee firmly urged the competent authorities to take all necessary measures to expedite the ongoing investigations into the murders of trade union leaders Chea Vichea and Ros Sovannareth (in 2004) and Hy Vuthy (in 2007) and to bring to justice the perpetrators and instigators of these crimes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that although no suspect has yet been arrested in connection with the murder of trade union leader Chea Vichea, a progress report on a new investigation into the murder, prepared by the Phnom Penh Municipal Police Commissariat, was submitted to the Prosecutor of the Phnom Penh Municipal Court of First Instance on 5 June 2024 and is currently under consideration by the Prosecutor. The Government also reiterates that: (i) Thach Saveth was sentenced in 2019 to 15 years of imprisonment for the premeditated murder of Ros Sovannareth; and (ii) Chan Sophon, arrested in September 2013 for the murder of Hy Vuthy was released on appeal in 2014 and the other suspect, sentenced in absentia, Phal Vannak, is under arrest warrant issued by the Phnom Penh Court of First Instance. The Committee notes that in its examination of Case No. 2318, the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) urged the Government to take all necessary measures to expedite the process of investigation into the murders of the trade unionists and to provide a copy of the various court's decisions as well as details of the investigations brought before the courts and which led to the convictions (see 405th Report, March 2024). In the same way as the Conference Committee and the CFA, the Committee urges the Government to conclude the ongoing investigations and bring to justice the perpetrators and instigators of the crimes. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the investigations and to report on meaningful progress, including on the results of the new investigation into the murder of trade union leader Chea Vichea, which is currently under review by the Public Prosecutor.

Incidents during the January 2014 demonstrations. In its previous comment, having noted the recommendations made by the direct contacts mission in 2022, the Committee urged the Government to review with the trade unions concerned the list of pending legal procedures against trade unionists in relation to the January 2014 demonstrations and to provide detailed information on each and every case of criminal prosecution. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) the charges against the six trade union leaders who were involved in the riots were dropped by the Court of Appeals; (ii) an Inter-ministerial working group has been established to provide legal support to trade unionists involved in any pending court case; and (iii) the MLVT has sent a letter to the Cambodian Labour Confederation (CLC) requesting it to confirm whether there were any pending cases related to the incident in January 2014 and on a letter dated 26 August 2024 the CLC confirmed that there were no pending cases. The Committee notes, however, the ITUC indication that there is still a discrepancy between the list of legal proceedings kept by the trade unions and that kept by the MLVT. The Committee urges the Government to further review with all other trade unions concerned the list of pending legal procedures against trade unionists and to provide detailed information on any cases of criminal prosecution or persons still in prison in relation to the January 2014 demonstrations.

Violence, intimidation, arrest and imprisonment of trade unionists for carrying out peaceful industrial action. Training of police forces in relation to industrial and protest action. Having noted with deep concern the ITUC's allegations of ongoing arrests of workers involved in a dispute with a casino operation, a matter raised before the CFA (Case No. 3424), the Committee urged the Government to ensure that all trade unionists detained for undertaking legitimate trade union activity were immediately released. The Committee also requested the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) measures taken, including through the development of guidelines, to ensure that peaceful industrial action is not repressed; (ii) progress made to ensure regular and systematic training programmes of labour inspectors, labour dispute officers, police officers, workers and employers, as recommended by the direct contacts mission; and (iii) the number of police officers trained, the duration of the training, the subjects covered and whether disciplinary consequences for the use of excessive force are also part of the training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) except for those who committed criminal actions, no trade unionist has ever been arrested or prosecuted for their lawful industrial action; (ii) it is committed to enhancing the capacity building of the law enforcement agencies in promoting freedom of association; and (iii) the MLVT has submitted a request for technical assistance in this respect. While taking note of the Government's indication that no trade unionist has ever been arrested or prosecuted for their lawful industrial action, the Committee notes that the ITUC expresses its deep concern regarding the continuing acts of violence against workers, the arrest of trade unionists in response to their legitimate activities, and the abusive use by the authorities of penal provisions to repress the legitimate and peaceful exercise of trade union activities. The ITUC denounces that trade unionists are systematically targeted and prosecuted on trumped-up charges that have been upheld by the Supreme Court, mentioning as examples the conviction and imprisonment of Morn Rithy, president of a trade union federation, Chhim Sithar, president of the Labor Rights Supported Union of Khmer Employees of Naga Hotel (LRSU) and another eight trade unionists of the LRSU. The Committee notes that in its latest examination of Case No. 3424, the CFA noted that Chhim Sithar was released from detention in September 2024 after having completed her two-year sentence. Regretting that Chhim Sithar was forced to serve her full sentence, despite the CFA's repeated recommendations, the CFA expressed trust that the LRSU President will be able to freely engage in legitimate trade union activities without any threat to her basic civil liberties or trade union rights. The CFA also expressed trust that any remaining charges against LRSU members have been dropped and, should this not be the case, called on the Government to furnish detailed information on any further actions taken in this regard (408th Report, October 2024). With reference to the recommendations of the CFA in that case, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that all trade unionists detained for undertaking legitimate trade union activity are immediately released. The Committee firmly expects that the Government's expressed commitment to enhancing the capacity building of the law enforcement agencies in promoting freedom of association as well as the technical assistance to be provided will contribute to ensuring that peaceful industrial action is not repressed. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome and impact of the technical assistance provided as well as information on the progress made to ensure regular and systematic training programmes of labour inspectors, labour dispute officers, police officers, workers and employers.

Legislative issues

Article 2 of the Convention. Rights of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Civil servants and public sector teachers. In its previous comments the Committee urged the Government to take appropriate measures, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to ensure that civil servants – including public sector teachers – who are not covered by the LTU were guaranteed their rights under the Convention, and that the legislation applicable to them was amended accordingly. The Committee regrets that the Government merely reiterates that: (i) freedom of association is not only exercised through the LTU, but also through other laws such as the Law on Associations and Non-Governmental Organizations (LANGO); (ii) civil servants and public-school teachers can enjoy freedom of association pursuant to the LANGO; and (iii) these different regimes are due to the administrative system and division of authorities of the state institutions in charge of the registration of professional organizations. The Committee is bound to recall once again that some provisions in the LANGO contravene freedom of association rights of civil servants under the Convention, as the law lacks provisions recognizing civil servants' associations' right to draw up constitutions and rules, the right to elect representatives, the right to organize activities and formulate programmes without interference of the public authorities, and the right to affiliate to federations or confederations, including at the international level, and that the law subjects the registration of these associations to the authorization of the Ministry of Interior. The Committee notes that the ITUC recalls that trade union legislation does not apply to civil servants, including public teachers. The Committee also recalls having taken note of the deep concern expressed by workers organizations at the lack of protection of teachers' trade union rights (referring in particular to sanctions and threats to teachers seeking to organize). Expressing its regret at the continuing absence of progress, the Committee once again urges the Government to take appropriate measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that civil servants – including public sector teachers – who are not covered by the LTU are fully ensured their freedom of association rights under the Convention, and that the legislation applicable to them is amended accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on steps taken in this respect.

Domestic workers. The Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken to promote the full and effective enjoyment of the rights under the Convention by domestic workers and workers in the informal economy. The Committee recalled that consideration of the adaptation of the legislative framework to expressly enable the formation of unions by sector or profession may facilitate the exercise of the rights under the Convention by those workers. The Committee regrets that the Government merely reiterates that there is no provision in the LTU that prohibits or restricts domestic workers as well as those working in the informal economy from forming any trade union based on their will as long as they meet the conditions specified in this law. The Government also indicates that it has adopted the National Strategy for Informal Economic Development 2023–28 aimed at promoting protection and strengthening the informal economy and accelerating its transition to the formal economy. While taking note of these indications, the Committee observes that the ITUC once again highlights that domestic workers and workers in the informal economy, and others not organized on an enterprise model, still cannot in practice form and join unions. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken to promote the full and effective enjoyment of the rights under the Convention by domestic workers and workers in the informal economy and recalls that consideration of the adaptation of the legislative framework to expressly enable the formation of unions by sector or profession may facilitate the exercise of the rights under the Convention by those workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Application in practice. Trade union registration. The Committee requested the Government to take further appropriate measures to facilitate the registration of trade unions through a simple, objective and transparent process in order to address the various practical hurdles to registration. The Committee recalls that the 2022 direct contacts mission had proposed: (i) that it would facilitate the registration process to simplify the registration forms and to ensure that clear instructions are given to Ministry officials that only the requirements that are specifically set out in the law can be requested in order to grant registration; (ii) that all discretionary authority should be eliminated (such as requests to the union to provide the employee list) and training provided, including with ILO technical assistance, to build the capacity of Ministry officials and trade unions in the understanding of expectations in this regard; and (iii) that an online database showing requests for registration, pending issues and final resolution would help the transparency of the process and demonstrate the consistency of application. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) following the promulgation of the LTU and its amendment, capacity building and training on the implementation of the LTU have been provided on an annual basis, including a course on the trade union registration procedure; (ii) training is not only provided to the officials in charge of trade union registration but also to trade union leaders at federation and confederation level; and (iii) a trade union registration database has been developed and it is on the Government's agenda to create a digital platform for trade union registration. The Government also indicates that, as of July 2024, there are 6,396 professional organizations registered (6,062 are local worker unions, 280 federations of worker unions, 42 confederations of worker unions and 12 employer associations), which is a 79.39 per cent increase compared to the number of professional organizations before the adoption of the LTU in 2016. While taking due note of the Government's indications, the Committee notes that the ITUC stresses that in practice workers still experience significant obstacles in the trade union registration process and that despite some progress made in the number of trade unions registered between 2016 and 2024, registering a trade union and maintaining registration are still conditioned by particularly burdensome requirements. The Committee emphasizes the need to take further appropriate measures to address the various practical hurdles to registration and encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard, including in relation to the setting up of an online database which would help the transparency of the process and demonstrate the consistency of application.

Articles 2 and 3. Financial audit and maintenance of registration. The Committee observed that the 2019 amendments to the LTU introduced: (i) a new section 27 requiring organizations to have the financial statements audited by an independent firm if so requested by any donor or by a percentage of its members (10 per cent for local unions and five per cent for federations or confederations); and (ii) a new section 17 on maintenance of registration, requiring the audit of annual financial statements and activity reports by an independent audit firm if so requested by either any donor or by a percentage of its members (10 per cent for local unions and five per cent for federations or confederations). Observing that these provisions could subject unions to the threat of frivolous audit requests, which would entail an onerous burden to maintain registration, the Committee requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to revise the said sections of the LTU, so that audits to the financial statements and activity reports are only required if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or to the law. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) the LTU and its amendment are the outcomes of a comprehensive tripartite consultative process under the technical support from the ILO; and (ii) financial reports are not submitted to the MLVT; the development of financial reports is only for the members and donors and is usually done as part of their accountability. While taking note of the Government's indications, the Committee notes that the ITUC stresses that the financial auditing obligations can constitute disproportionate obstacles to the exercise of freedom of association. The Committee also observes that failure to comply with the requirements of new section 17 renders the trade union liable to revocation of registration upon the filing of a lawsuit by the MLVT to the Labour Court under section 18 of the LTU. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to revise, in consultation with the social partners concerned, the said sections of the LTU so that audits to the financial statements and activity reports are only required if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or to the law.

Article 3. Right to elect representatives freely. Requirements for leaders, managers, and those responsible for the administration of unions and of employer associations. The Committee and the Conference Committee (2021) requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 20, 21 and 38 of the LTU to remove the requirement to read and to write Khmer from the eligibility criteria of foreigners. The Committee regrets that the Government reiterates that the LTU was amended through tripartite consensus and that the requirement is not incompatible with the Convention. The Committee observes that no further information has been provided on the consultations. Recalling once again that the legal imposition of literacy requirements for the eligibility of representatives is incompatible with the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 104), the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary measures to remove the requirement to read and to write Khmer from sections 20, 21 and 38 of the LTU.

The right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the need to amend section 326(1) of the Labour Law whereby, in the absence of agreement between the parties on the minimum service in an enterprise for the protection of the facility installations and equipment where a strike is taking place, the MLVT is empowered to determine the minimum service in question. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 326(2) of the Labour Law, in particular any example of the sanctions imposed on workers for serious misconduct. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that an agreement should be reached between the employers and the workers on required minimum services prior to going on strike and that if it is not the case, it then falls on the MLVT to set the required minimum services. The Government also indicates that no sanctions of serious misconduct have ever been imposed unless the strike is declared illegal by the Court and the strikers do not resume working within 48 hours as ordered by the Court. The Government indicates that ILO technical assistance is necessary to establish the regulation concerning the required minimum services. The Committee reiterates the need to amend section 326(1) and strongly encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee notes that the ITUC continues to denounce, as common practices, the replacement of workers and the granting of injunctions to preclude industrial action, even when all the procedures had been followed by the unions. The Committee recalls once again the conclusions of the direct contacts mission concerning the need to clarify the role of the Committee on Strike and Demonstration in labour dispute resolution and ensure that it does not restrict the legitimate right of workers' organizations to engage in industrial action in defence of their members' interests. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Committee on Strike and Demonstration ensures an effective implementation of the relevant laws and regulations. The Government also indicates that ILO technical assistance is welcomed in this regard. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government hold a comprehensive tripartite dialogue on the issues raised concerning the legality of the exercise of industrial action, with a view to reviewing existing regulations and their application in practice and undertaking any necessary measures to guarantee the lawful and peaceful exercise of the right to strike, and encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Article 4. Dissolution of representative organizations. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 28 of the LTU by repealing section 28(2), which provides that a union is automatically dissolved in the event of a complete closure of the enterprise or establishment, and to ensure that workers' or employers' organizations should only be dissolved on the basis of the procedures laid down by their statutes, or by a court ruling. The Committee regrets that the Government reiterates that the amendment was made to ensure the interests of workers and trade unions when the enterprise is closed down, that the amendment was thus welcomed by the unions, and that as local unions are legally attached to the existing enterprise where they are formed, when that enterprise no longer legally exists the local union should no longer exist either. The Committee is bound to recall once again that, while the payment of wages and other benefits may be one reason why a union may have a legitimate interest to continue to operate after the dissolution of the enterprise concerned, there may be additional legitimate reasons for it to do so (such as defending other legitimate claims, including against any legal successors of the former company). Recalling that the dissolution of a workers' or employers' organization should only be decided under the procedures laid down by their statutes, or by a court ruling, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 28 of the LTU accordingly by fully removing its paragraph 2.

Grounds to request dissolution by the Court. The Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 29 of the LTU, which affords any party concerned or 50 per cent of the total of members of the union or the employer association the right to file a complaint to the Labour Court to request a dissolution. Observing that the 2019 amendments to the LTU did not modify the provision in question and noting that members can always decide to leave the union, the Committee recalled that the manner in which members may request dissolution should be left to the organization's by-laws. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under new section 29 of the LTU, the court may dissolve a trade union on the two following grounds: if the formation or nature of activities of the professional organization contravenes the law or the objective of the professional organization as stipulated in its statute, or if a worker trade union is no longer independent from the employer and is unable to restore its independence. Recalling once again that the manner in which members may request dissolution should be left to the organization's by-laws, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 29 of the LTU so as to leave to the unions' or employers' associations own rules and by-laws the determination of the procedures for their dissolution by their members.

Noting that the Government has requested technical assistance for the effective implementation of the recommendations through a tripartite mechanism, the Committee trusts that this assistance will be provided shortly to bolster inclusive tripartite dialogue in relation to all the above matters and requests to be kept informed of developments.

Practical application

Independent adjudication mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the ITUC's concerns regarding the functioning of independent adjudication mechanisms, such as the Arbitration Council (AC) and referred to the refusal of the MLVT to allow upper-level trade unions to represent or provide support to their members in collective disputes. The Committee also noted from the conclusions of the direct contacts mission that there were several complaints regarding the classification of disputes before the AC, such as the classification of termination of a trade union officer as an individual dispute, preventing that specific allegation from being heard. Emphasizing the importance of the independence of adjudication mechanisms, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on any evolution in the functioning of the AC, and to include statistics on the number and nature of disputes brought before it and the extent of compliance with non-binding AC awards, as well as on any court rulings to ensure that the AC awards, when binding, are duly enforced. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) it is committed to supporting the institutionalization of AC as a more credible, transparent, and financially sustainable tripartite mechanism for labour dispute settlement; (ii) a series of tripartite workshops have been organized to review the functioning and readiness of the AC to consider individual disputes in the near future; (iii) the MLVT has had several meetings with the AC Foundation and other stakeholders regarding the provision of new locations, the strengthening of the capacity of arbitrators, and the contribution to support the operation of the institution; and (iv) from 2019 to July 2024, 314 collective labour disputes were referred to the AC: 255 cases were represented by the minority trade unions; 38 cases were represented by the bargaining council, a committee formed by workers to represent them in the dispute, and 21 cases were represented by the most representative trade unions. The Government also indicates that the Labour Law, as amended in 2021, has empowered the Labour Inspector as a judicial police officer tasked with examining offences to ensure the enforcement of the Labour Law, including the binding arbitral awards. Taking note of the commitment to strengthening the AC, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that any evolution in the functioning of the AC takes place only after full and meaningful consultations with all parties and stakeholders. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Labour Law as amended. The Committee recalls in this regard the strong recommendation of the direct contacts mission that urgent action be taken to recruit and train new arbitrators and that union confederations and federations be able to represent their members without requiring prior approval from the MLVT. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on any evolution in the functioning of the AC, and to include statistics on the number and nature of disputes brought before it and the extent of compliance with non-binding AC awards, as well as on any court rulings to ensure that the AC awards, when binding, are duly enforced.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the 2020 and 2023 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in relation to matters examined in this comment. The Committee recalls that in its 2020 observations, the ITUC indicated that the 2019 amendments to the Trade Unions Law (LTU) failed to address key demands to bring the law into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the amendments were the result of a series of comprehensive tripartite consultative processes with ILO technical support.

In its previous comments, having noted the ITUC's allegations of union busting practices in the garment and footwear industries and the extended use of short-term contracts to terminate employment of trade union leaders and members and weaken active trade unions, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that all measures are taken to monitor, in consultation with the social partners, that fixed-term contracts are not used for anti-union purposes, including through their non-renewal. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that: (i) the LTU provides remedies for both dismissal and non-renewal of fixed-term contracts due to anti-union discrimination and, if verified, the labour inspectors instruct the employer to reinstate the workers or impose a substantial fine; (ii) the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training (MLVT) conducted consultations with the social partners and other actors, such as the Arbitration Council, and a common understanding was reached that the maximum duration of fixed-term contracts would be four years and, if exceeding this maximum period, the contract would be considered as having unfixed duration; and (iii) this was reflected in an Instruction on determination of the type of employment contract, issued by the MLVT on 17 May 2019. The Government also indicates that, while the MLVT found that the employment contract termination of seven workers of a footwear company were not related to neither discrimination nor unfair dismissal, it found that the termination of contract of three workers of a garment company was due to discrimination and on 4 May 2022 issued an order to reinstate them. While taking due note of the information concerning ten workers, the Committee, recalling the various allegations made over the years about the extended use of fixed-term contracts for anti-union purposes, reiterates its request to the Government to ensure that wide-ranging measures are taken to monitor, in consultation with the social partners, that fixed-term contracts are not used for anti-union purposes, including through their non-renewal.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. For many years, several workers' organizations, in particular the ITUC, have denounced serious and numerous acts of anti-union discrimination in the country. The Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the handling of the allegations of anti-union discrimination made in 2014, 2016 and 2019 and reminded the Government of the need to take all necessary measures to ensure that allegations of anti-union discrimination are investigated by independent organs that enjoy the confidence of the parties and that, whenever such allegations are verified, adequate remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) non-discrimination of workers in employment is addressed in article 12 of the Labour Law and article 6 of the LTU; (ii) the MLVT is strongly committed to eradicating all forms of discrimination and is willing to collaborate with other stakeholders to take serious action on this matter; (iii) trade unions and their members can file complaints with the MLVT; and (iv) the MLVT met with representatives of the Cambodia Labour Confederation (CLC) on 25 April 2023 to follow-up on 44 cases before the courts involving their members (11 have been resolved with acquittal of charges and 8 cases have received verdicts from the Provincial and Municipal Courts of First Instance). The Government also indicates that the MLVT organizes regular meetings with the social partners to hear and address concerns and that it welcomes all requests for collaboration to address acts of anti-union discrimination. While taking note of the Government's indications, the Committee recalls that its comments refer to the need to ensure that allegations of anti-union discrimination, such as the ones referred to by the ITUC in its observations, are investigated by independent organs that enjoy the confidence of the parties and that whenever such allegations are verified, adequate remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied. The Committee notes in this respect that in its report concerning the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Government indicates that it is committed to supporting the institutionalization of the Arbitration Council (AC) as a more credible, transparent, and financially sustainable tripartite mechanism for labour dispute settlement and that a series of tripartite workshops have been organized to review the functioning and readiness of the AC to consider individual disputes in the near future. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that allegations of anti-union discrimination are investigated by independent organs that enjoy the confidence of the parties and that, whenever such allegations are verified, adequate remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any evolution in the functioning of the AC, including on the handling of cases of anti-union discrimination. It also requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the pending court cases related to the members of the CLC.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to ensure that national legislation provided adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination, such as dismissals and other prejudicial acts against trade union leaders and members, including sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. Having observed that fines for unfair labour practices provided for in the LTU may be a deterrent for small and medium-sized enterprises, but would not appear to be so for enterprises with high productivity and large enterprises, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) provide detailed statistical information on the application of the different mechanisms to protect against anti-union discrimination, including as to sanctions and other remedies effectively imposed, for example reinstatement or compensation; and (ii) assess, in light of such data, and in consultation with the social partners, the appropriateness of existing remedies, in particular the dissuasive nature of sanctions in the LTU or any other relevant laws; and to provide information on any development in this regard. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that: (i) in addition to the application of the provisions and remedies in the LTU concerning anti-union discrimination (Chapter 15), the LTU acknowledges (section 95) that criminal laws may be applied to punish these actions (violence and discrimination against worker unions being criminal offences under sections 217 and 267 of the Penal Code) and that the employer could thus even face imprisonment, for example if the actions entailed violence; (ii) in addition to the fines imposed by the LTU, those affected can also claim compensation; (iii) the MLVT has never received complaints or grievances from trade unionists regarding existing sanctions; and (iv) the Government is committed to further strengthening the capacity of labour inspectors and raising the awareness of workers on their rights. In relation to the ITUC's allegations that the 2019 amendments to the LTU failed to bring it in conformity with the Convention and arguing in particular that anti-union discrimination sanctions remain far too low to be dissuasive, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the amendments were the result of a series of comprehensive tripartite consultative processes with social partners, especially with trade unions and employers' associations with the technical support of the ILO. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has not provided the requested statistical information nor any indication that the requested assessment of the said data with the social partners has taken place. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request and firmly expects the Government to provide the requested statistical information and, in the light of such data, and in consultation with the social partners, to assess the appropriateness of existing remedies, in particular the dissuasive nature of sanctions in the LTU or any other relevant laws; and to provide information on any development in this regard.

Article 4. Recognition of trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining. In its last comment, the Committee observed that the number of organizations having secured the support of at least 30 per cent of the total workers in the workplace (most representative status (MRS)), as well as the number of collective bargaining agreements (CBAs) concluded for 2018 and 2019 were very low (4 unions with MRS in 2018 and 15 unions in 2019 and 3 CBAs between an employer and an MRS union). The Committee noted that the March 2017 direct contacts mission (DCM) recommended the Government to take the necessary measures, including issuing instructions to the competent authorities, to ensure that MRS are recognized without delay and without the exercise of arbitrary discretion to workers' organizations or coalitions of organizations meeting the minimum threshold. The Committee requested the Government to: (i) provide information on any measures undertaken to address the issues noted by the DCM and to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention; and (ii) keep on providing information on the number of organizations recognized as having the MRS, and the number of collective agreements in force, indicating the parties that concluded the agreement (in particular, if it is a most representative union, a bargaining council or a shop steward), the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that following the 2019 amendments to the LTU, the procedures for a worker union to receive the MRS have been simplified to meet more easily the legal requirements to conclude a CBA with the respective employer (section 55 of the LTU (as amended)). The Committee notes that, as part of the amendments, the requirement for obtaining MRS was modified from requiring an accurate list of workers with official membership identification cards to requiring a list of the due-paying members representing 30 per cent or more of the total number of workers in the occupation, economic activity or sector. The Government indicates that the amendment was made to remove the raised hurdle of providing membership identification cards, which was one of the requirements to receive the MRS. The Government further indicates that, following the amendment of the said section of the LTU, the number of MRS trade unions has increased over time, from 525 MRS unions in 2019 to 812 MRS unions in August 2024 and that the number of CBAs also increased from 564 CBAs in 2019 to 632 CBAs as of August 2024. The Committee notes that in its report the Government also indicates that the total number of unions with MRS has been 48 (2019), 47 (2020), 39 (2021), 62 (2022) 36 (2023) and 31 as of July 2024 and that the number of CBAs has been: 4, 12, 9, 11, 19 and 12 in the respective years. Given the significant discrepancies between the figures provided and taking into account the very low level of the coverage of collective bargaining at the time of the amendments in the country (1.3 per cent in 2020 according to ILOSTAT), the Committee requests the Government to clarify the exact number of MRS trade unions and the number of CBAs in force in the country. Additionally, observing that the 2022 DCM recommended to the Government that practical hurdles to the recognition of the MRS of trade unions should be rapidly addressed, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of the 2019 amendments of the LTU, including on the number of workers covered by collective agreements as well as any measures taken in relation to the DCM's recommendations and in general to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to include in its information the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by the collective agreements in force in the country.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comment, the Committee once again urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers, enjoy collective bargaining rights under the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that civil servants, including teachers, can form associations in accordance with the Law on Associations and Non-Governmental Organizations (LANGO). The Government also indicates that, as long as they can organize, they can bargain collectively where necessary. The Committee recalls once again that, in addition to the armed forces and the police, only public servants "engaged in the administration of the State" (for example, in some countries, public servants in government ministries and other comparable bodies, and ancillary staff) may be excluded from the scope of the Convention. All other persons employed by the Government, by public enterprises or by autonomous public institutions, should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention and, therefore, enjoy collective bargaining rights by virtue of Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee, therefore, once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers, enjoy collective bargaining rights under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this regard and to inform about any collective agreement in force in the public sector.

The Committee recalls the Government that technical assistance of the Office is available in relation to the matters examined in this comment.

Cameroon

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning repeated police violence against strikers, cases of interference by the authorities in trade union elections, acts of vandalism on trade union premises, and trade union harassment.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not provided the requested information in response to reports of anti-union practices which have been highlighted for many years. The Government merely indicates that the allegations in question are too general for it to be able to provide a precise reply. The Committee reminds the Government that it is responsible for taking all the necessary measures to ensure that the competent authorities conduct the necessary investigations into the reported acts of violence and interference, and to take without delay the corrective measures required, if it is proven that the trade union rights recognized in the Convention have been obstructed. The Committee once again urges the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

Further to its previous comments on the failure to register eight unions of public sector education employees reported by Education International (EI), the Committee recalls that the Government first indicated that this situation had arisen because the post of union registrar was vacant, before indicating subsequently that the process of issuing registration certificates was suspended in order to "clean up the union file". The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government now indicates that it is unable to provide any suitable response since it does not know which organizations are concerned. Recalling that the right to establish trade union organizations must be guaranteed without prior authorization and that any registration procedure must be no more than a formality, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the registration of the relevant organizations of public sector education employees.

Article 3 of the Convention. Act on the suppression of terrorism. In its comments relating to the Act on the suppression of terrorism (Act No. 2014/028 of 23 December 2014), the Committee has drawn the Government's attention on several occasions to the wording of section 2(1), under which "the death penalty shall be imposed on anyone who … commits or threatens to commit any act that may cause death, endanger physical safety, result in bodily injury or damage to property or harm natural resources, the environment or the cultural heritage with the intention of: (a) intimidating the public, causing a situation of terror or forcing a victim, the Government and/or a national or international organization to carry out or refrain from carrying out a given act, to adopt or renounce a particular position or to act according to certain principles; and (b) disrupting the normal operation of public services or the provision of essential public services, or creating a public crisis …". The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the definition of "terrorist act" stems from the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Convention of 1999 and explains that the provisions of the above-mentioned texts in no way seek to restrict trade unions in the exercise of their activities. However, the Committee recalls that some of the situations covered by the Act of 23 December 2014 might relate to the legitimate exercise of activities by the representatives of trade unions or employers pursuant to the Convention, with particular reference to protest actions or strikes that might have direct repercussions on public services. The Committee also recalls that, in view of the penalty incurred, such a provision might have a particularly intimidating effect on representatives of trade unions or employers expressing views or taking action in the context of their mandates and might undermine trade union action. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 2 of the Act on the suppression of terrorism in such a way that it does not apply to the legitimate activities of workers' and employers' organizations, which are protected under the Convention.

Articles 2 and 5. Legislative reform. The Committee recalls that its previous comments, some of which date back more than 30 years, refer to the need to: (i) amend Act No. 68/LF/19 of 18 November 1968 (under which the legal existence of a trade union or occupational association of public servants is subject to prior approval by the Minister of Territorial Administration); (ii) amend sections 6(2) and 166 of the Labour Code (which lay down penalties for persons promoting a trade union which has not yet been registered and acting as if the said union had been registered); and (iii) repeal section 19 of Decree No. 69/DF/7 of 6 January 1969 (under which trade unions of public servants may not affiliate to an international organization without obtaining prior authorization). The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government merely indicates that consultations between the Government and the social partners are ongoing with a view to updating the draft new Labour Code and that it does not provide any information in response to the need to amend Act No. 68/LF/19 of 18 November 1968 and repeal Decree No. 69/DF/7 of 6 January 1969. Deploring the absence of progress on this matter, the Committee is bound once again to urge the Government to take the necessary measures to complete the legislative revision process without further delay so as to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention on the above-mentioned points which it has been recalling for several decades. The Committee trusts that the Government will show greater cooperation in the future and recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), received on 7 December 2023, which relate to issues examined by the Committee in the present comment.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the United Workers' Confederation of Cameroon (CTUC) and the UGTC denouncing acts of anti-union discrimination and interference in numerous sectors.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the expected information on the reports of anti-union practices which have been highlighted for many years. The Government merely indicates in general terms that no acts of discrimination or interference in trade union activities have been observed, and that the allegations of dismissals in the wood industry are too general to enable it to provide any clarification. The Committee once again reminds the Government of its responsibility to take time-bound and decisive action to investigate the reported cases of anti-union discrimination and interference, and to take corrective measures without delay and impose appropriate penalties if it is found that the trade union rights established by the Convention have been violated in certain administrations or enterprises. The Committee once again urges the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

With reference to the observations received from the UGTC in October 2016 on the worsening of trade union discrimination against the leaders of the National Trade Union of Employees and Managers of Banks and Financial Establishments of Cameroon (SNEGCBEFCAM) within the National Social Insurance Fund (CNPS), the Committee previously noted that a court decision had been handed down in favour of the workers who had been dismissed but that the CNPS had appealed against the decision. The Committee urges the Government to provide all relevant information on this matter.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the national collective agreement for agriculture and allied activities was signed on 6 January 2023.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the 2016 observations of the Cameroon Workers' Trade Union Confederation (CSTC) and the 2020 observations of the ITUC alleging that in practice unrepresentative organizations were designated in committees for negotiating national collective agreements and in other institutions. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments on these observations and to indicate the measures taken by the authorities to encourage and promote collective bargaining, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force, in both the public and private sectors, indicating the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by the agreements.

The Committee notes the UGTC's 2023 allegations concerning the collective agreement applicable to the staff of the CNPS. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the CNPS "withdrew" in 2011 from the national collective agreement for banks and other financial establishments, in view of the specific nature of the CNPS and the requirements of the Inter-African Conference on Social Insurance (CIPRES), which resulted in its "disengagement" vis-à-vis the SNEGCBEFCAM. The Committee notes that the UGTC asserts, on the other hand, that the collective agreement for banks remains applicable and that the workers who had recourse to the courts to demand the application of the collective agreement won their case. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that a collective agreement relating to social security is being drafted. In view of the conflicting information brought to its attention, the Committee requests the Government to provide any additional information, including any court decisions, relating to the applicability to the CNPS of the collective agreement for banks. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the mechanism by which the CNPS is bound to this collective agreement, and the procedures for denunciation of the agreement referred to by the Government. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the drafting of a collective agreement relating to social security mentioned by the Government.

Chad

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not provided any comments on the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 1 September 2016, which relate to the legal procedures governing the right to strike, cases of serious violations of trade union and fundamental rights and the determination of essential services. The Committee urges the Government to reply to these observations.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Labour Code. The Committee recalls that on many occasions it has requested the Government to take measures to amend sections 294(3) and 307 of the Labour Code with a view to recognizing the trade union rights of minors who have reached the statutory minimum age to enter the labour market in accordance with the Labour Code (14 years), either as workers or apprentices, without the intervention of their parents or guardians, and to limiting monitoring by the public authorities of the finances of trade unions to the requirement to submit periodic reports. The Committee notes the Government's reply, according to which the Act to issue the Labour Code has been revised and that Committee's concerns have been taken into account. However, the Committee regrets that the Government has not provided further information on the adoption of the legislation referred to above. The Committee expects that the Labour Code will be promulgated in the near future and that it will give full effect to the provisions of the Convention on the points referred to above. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the text that is adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that: (i) section 3 of the General Public Service Regulations excludes from their scope of application local Government officials, employees in public establishments and auxiliary administrative personnel; and (ii) the status of contractual employees is governed by the collective agreement of 7 December 2012. Noting with regret that the Government has not responded to the Committee's request to receive a copy of the collective agreement in question, the Committee requests it to provide one without delay.

Article 4. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the need to take legislative measures to ensure adequate protection for public employees against discrimination on the grounds of their trade union membership or activities. Noting that the Government restricts itself to recalling the provisions solely applicable to public employees (section 10 of the General Public Service Regulations), the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to ensure that the legislation includes explicit provisions protecting public employees against discrimination in the exercise of their trade union activities.

Article 5. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee also noted the absence of legislative provisions, either in the General Public Service Regulations, or in other texts applicable to public employees, aimed at ensuring adequate protection against acts of interference by the public authorities in internal trade union affairs. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that protection against acts of interference is restricted to contractual employees, as set out in section 297 of the Labour Code. Observing that the provisions of the Code are not applicable to Government officials and auxiliary administrative personnel employed by the State and public bodies, unless otherwise provided for under a specific regulation (section 2 of the Code), the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to ensure that the legislation applicable to civil servants and to all public employees fully guarantees adequate protection of their organizations against any acts of interference by a public authority in their establishment, functioning or administration.

Article 6. Facilities to be afforded to public employees' organizations. The Committee notes, from the information provided by the Government, that there is no text that explicitly provides for facilities to be made available to the organizations of civil servants or public employees, even where such facilities may in practice exist in the public service. The Committee once again urges the Government to take measures, as required by the Convention, with a view to ensuring, through the adoption of legislative provisions or other means, that facilities are afforded to the representatives of recognized public employees' organizations in order to allow them to perform their functions promptly and efficiently both during working hours and at other times.

Article 7. Procedures for determining terms and conditions of employment. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Public Service Advisory Committee, as established by the General Public Service Regulations, has general competence in matters related to the public service, which includes representatives of public employees' organizations who participate in the determination of conditions of employment. While noting this information, the Committee once again urges the Government to provide a copy of the Decree determining the composition, operation and appointment of the members of the Public Service Advisory Committee, and to indicate any consultations held or agreements concluded with trade union organizations concerning the determination of employment conditions in the public sector over recent years.

Article 8. Settlement of disputes. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there are still no provisions in place concerning procedures for dispute settlement. The Committee once again urges the Government to establish procedures offering guarantees of independence and impartiality

(such as mediation, conciliation or arbitration), with a view to settling disputes arising out of the determination of the terms and conditions of employment of public employees.

The Committee trusts that the Government will shortly be able to provide the information requested and to report the adoption of legislative measures that take account of the comments the Committee has been making for many years.

Comoros

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the Workers' Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 August 2017, relating to matters examined by the Committee in the present observation, and it requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee notes that, in response to the observations of the CTC in 2013, the Government indicates that the trade union leaders who had been dismissed have been reinstated. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the other matters raised by the CTC, and particularly the allegations of employer pressure against trade union leaders of the CTC, the Union of Health and Education Workers and a new trade union in a communications enterprise to persuade them to end their trade union activities.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining in the private and public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). In its previous comments, the Committee once again regretted the absence of progress in relation to collective bargaining which, according to the CTC, was not structured and had no framework at any level, and particularly that joint bodies in the public service had still not been established. The Committee notes that the CTC in its 2017 observations makes particular reference to decrees and implementing orders covering the Higher Council of the Public Service, the Joint Commission and the Medical Commission established to provide a framework for bargaining, but which have still not been signed following their preparation in 2015, thereby opening the way for regulations and measures which are not in conformity with the law to the prejudice of employees of the public service. While taking note of the request made by the Government in its report for technical assistance, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining in both the private and the public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Act of 28 June 2012 repealing, amending and supplementing certain provisions of Act No. 84-108/PR issuing the Labour Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the observations provided by Education International (EI) in August 2023 denouncing the intentional obstruction of the exercise of trade union rights of workers and in particular of teachers, including arbitrary arrests during a demonstration of education inspectors in May 2023, as well as physical attacks. The Committee requests the Government to provide comments in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right to organize in the public service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that: (i) under the terms of section 94 of Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees, freedom of association is guaranteed for public service employees; and (ii) under section 93 of the Act, the exercise of the right to strike by public service employees can only be restricted under the conditions established by the law, in particular, so as to ensure the normal provision of "public services of vital interest, which cannot suffer any type of interruption" and a Decree of the Prime Minister was to establish the list of services of vital interest, as well as the details of the minimum service in these services. The Committee notes with regret that the Government restricts itself to reiterating that it is to submit a draft Decree on this matter to the competent authorities and will provide the Committee with a copy of the Decree as soon as it is adopted. Recalling that the right to strike may be restricted or prohibited: (i) in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (iii) in the case of an acute national or local crisis, the Committee firmly hopes that the Decree in question will be shortly adopted, taking account of its observations and requests the Government to provide a copy thereof with its next report.

With regard to the trade union rights of judges, the Committee previously noted that, according to the Government, the freedom of association of judges is recognized under the provisional Order of 1996 and that judges' trade unions exist. The Committee noted however that Organic Act No. 06/020 of 10 October 2006 on the conditions of service of judges did not contain any provisions explicitly granting judges the rights provided for by the Convention even if, according to the Government, the provisional Order of 1996 remained in force, pending the amendment of the Act of 2006. The Committee observes that the Government admits that the freedom of association of judges is still not explicitly recognized in the Act of 2006 as amended and supplemented by Organic Act 15/014 of 1 August 2015. In light of the above, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the Act of 2006 as soon as possible, to enshrine freedom of association of judges. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended Act with its next report.

Article 3. Right of foreign workers to hold trade union office. In its previous comments the Committee noted that Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 amending and supplementing Act No. 015-2002 on the Labour Code did not remove the provision requiring 20 years of residence in order to be eligible for appointment to administrative or executive positions in trade unions (new section 241). Noting with deep regret the absence of any progress in this regard, although the Government had undertaken to bringing this matter before the National Labour Council, the Committee is obliged to recall that such a period is excessive, but that a period of three years could be considered as being reasonable (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 103). Recalling once again that national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 241 of the Labour Code in the near future.

Articles 3 and 4. Other legislative and regulatory issues. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government, on numerous occasions, to take steps to amend: (i) section 11 of Order No. 12/CVAB.MIN/TPS/113/2005 of 26 October 2005, which prohibits striking workers from entering and remaining on work premises affected by the strike; (ii) section 326 of the Labour Code, and in that regard suggested including an additional provision stipulating that penalties against strikers must be proportionate to the offence committed and that no prison sentence shall be imposed unless criminal or violent acts have been committed; (iii) section 28 of Act No. 016/2002 concerning the establishment, organization and functioning of labour tribunals so as to allow recourse to the labour tribunal, should conciliation and mediation procedures have been exhausted, only on the basis of a voluntary decision of the parties to the dispute; and (iv) section 251 of the Labour Code to ensure that the issue of the dissolution of trade union organizations will be regulated by their union constitutions and rules. The Committee notes with deep concern that, despite the adoption of Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 (amending and supplementing the Labour Code) and of Act No. 016/2002 (concerning the establishment, organization and functioning of labour tribunals), the above provisions are still in force, and that the Government provides no information in this regard. The Committee firmly expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the provisions cited above and provide information on all developments in this regard.

Recalling that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Inter-Union National of Congo received on 29 March 2024, denouncing the imposition of taxes on the exercise of trade union activities and collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously recalled that section 236 of the Labour Code provides that acts of interference by employers' and workers' organizations in each other's affairs shall be defined by an Order issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare following consultation with the National Labour Council. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Order in question has still not been issued and that the Government restricts itself to indicating that, in the meantime, the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare drafts memos (not provided by the Government), listing several acts of interference. The Committee strongly hopes that the next report from the Government will show definite progress in this regard, and that the expected Order will include the various cases envisaged under Article 2 of the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees recognizes the right of public servants to organize and to strike and establishes consultative bodies, it does not provide for machinery for collective bargaining on conditions of employment. At the same time, the Committee noted that the persons covered by the Act are primarily employees engaged in the administration of the State (section 2). The Committee notes that the Government refers to a draft Decree of the Prime Minister establishing and organizing the High Council for Social Dialogue, which promotes collective bargaining for workers of all sectors, including the public sector. The Committee recalls once again that, under its Article 6, the Convention applies to workers and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State (for instance, employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, as well as transport personnel) (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). The Committee once again urges the Government to specify how the right to collective bargaining is granted to various categories of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and to take, if necessary, steps to ensure that this right is granted to them both in law and in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Branch level collective bargaining. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government restricts its reply to indicating that the Order defining the functioning of the joint committees, provided for under the terms of section 284 of the Labour Code relating to branch-level collective bargaining, has not yet been issued. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Order defining the functioning of the joint committees will be adopted without further delay.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. Noting with regret that the Government limits itself to very general statements, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote collective bargaining, the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, as well as on the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee trusts that the Government will shortly be in a position to provide the information requested and to announce the adoption of regulatory measures that take account of the comments that the Committee has been formulating for many years.

Djibouti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's communication, dated 17 November 2019, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning ongoing violations of freedom of association in Djibouti. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not provided the information requested on the reasons why Mr Mohamed Abdou was prohibited from leaving the country and prevented from participating in the 103rd Session of the International Labour Conference (May-June 2014). Noting that the recent observations of the UDT and the UGTD no longer refer to this matter, the Committee trusts that Mr Abdou is no longer subject to such prohibitions.

Trade union situation in Djibouti. The Committee recalls that allegations of violations of freedom of association in the country are repeatedly brought before the ILO supervisory bodies and that mention is often made of the phenomenon of "clone unions" (duplication of trade union organizations, established with the Government's support). The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates that this phenomenon of "cloning" trade union organizations does not exist in Djibouti and that the representation of the UDT and the UGTD continues to be usurped by Mr Mohamed Abdou and Mr Diraneh Hared, authors of the observations addressed to the Committee. In this respect, the Committee notes the findings of the Credentials Committee of the 110th Session of the Conference (June 2022) on a new objection concerning the appointment of the Workers' delegation. The Committee notes with deep concern the Credentials Committee's indication that confusion continues to reign over the trade union landscape in Djibouti. The Credentials Committee particularly regrets that the Government has not addressed the allegations repeated every year by the objecting organizations concerning the "cloning" of the UDT and UGTD and usurpation of their names, "other than by stating flatly that the authors of the objection had no legitimate union mandate, without any explanation as to how, in particular, Mr Mohamed Abdou might have lost the leadership of the UDT, which he undoubtedly held in the past". Noting the information from the Credentials Committee that the Government has stated that it accepts the terms for technical assistance from the Office to proceed with an evaluation of the situation of the trade union movement in the country, the Committee firmly urges the Government to take concrete measures to this effect in the near future, with a view to ensuring the development of free and independent trade unions in accordance with the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities in full freedom. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information expected concerning the need to amend:

- section 5 of the Act on Associations, which requires organizations to obtain authorization prior to their establishment as trade unions; and
- section 23 of Decree No. 83-099/PR/FP of 10 September 1983, which confers upon the President of the Republic broad powers to requisition public servants.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take all measures necessary to amend the above provisions and will report on specific progress in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's communication, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning the persistence of anti-union discrimination in the education and rail transport sectors. The Committee notes in particular the Government's indication that decisions must be taken to discontinue criminal proceedings against the teachers who had been arrested in 2019 in the context of the case of the Baccalaureate exams, and that most of the railway workers concerned following the 2019 social conflict have been reintegrated into their posts. With regard to the transfers described as "punitive", concerning the leaders of the teachers' trade unions, the Government denies the allegations, however. Noting that the information brought to its knowledge does not provide a definitive reply to all the allegations presented by EI, UDT and UGTD, and recalling the obligation, under the terms of the Convention, to ensure that workers are adequately protected against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures required to ensure full respect of Article 1 of the Convention in the above-mentioned activity sectors.

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the draft inter-occupational collective agreement, which was examined and approved unanimously in September 2020, by the members of the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and on the total number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Dominica Amalgamated Workers Union (DAWU), the Dominica Public Service Union (DPSU) and the Dominica Employers' Federation, communicated with the Government's report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to take the following measures: (i) exclude the banana, citrus and coconut industries, as well as the port authority, from the schedule of essential services annexed to the Industrial Relations Act (Act No. 18 of 1986), which makes it possible to stop a strike in these sectors by compulsory arbitration; and (ii) amend sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the forementioned Act, which empower the Minister to refer disputes to compulsory arbitration if they concern serious issues in his or her opinion. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it will be engaging the relevant stakeholders in discussions with the aim of advancing legislative amendments as recommended by the Committee. In this respect, the Committee notes that the DPSU, while emphasizing the value of every public service, supports the request to remove the forementioned industries from the schedule of essential services and welcomes the call to amend sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the Act, whereas the Dominica Employers' Federation is opposed to this removal because of the Dominican economy's dependency on the aforementioned agricultural commodities. The Committee takes note of the DAWU's indication that the Industrial Relations Advisory Committee (IRAC) needs to hold a meeting in order to make decisions and issue recommendations to the Minister of Labour. The Committee further notes that according to the Industrial Relations Board, whose opinion the Government communicated with its report, the banana, citrus and coconut industries, given their significantly reduced role in the economy, might be removed from the list of essential services, but that the port authorities remain an essential service, for the reason that they are both air and sea gateways for entry of essential goods such as medical supplies or food. With regard to the latter services, the Committee recalls that it should be possible for strikes to be organized by workers in port services and authorities and that in such services, which are not essential in the strict sense of the term, but in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population, and in public services of fundamental importance, the authorities could establish a system of minimum service rather than impose an outright ban on strikes (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 134 and 136). Noting with deep regret that no progress has been made in bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention despite its repeated requests, the Committee urges the Government to amend, in consultation with the social partners, sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the Industrial Relations Act without further delay and to provide information on all progress made in this regard. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance in this respect.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Dominica Public Service Union (DPSU), the Dominica Amalgamated Workers Union (DAWU) and the Dominica Employers' Federation, communicated with the Government's report.

Article 2 of the Convention. Facilities granted to workers' representatives. The Committee notes with regret that despite its repeated calls since 2004, the Government's report does not provide any information on the practical application of the Convention, but merely indicates that the Labour Division serves as the Government's principal agency for labour policy administration and ensures that legislative practices are upheld. The Committee notes that the DPSU expresses concern about the lack of information regarding the application of the Convention and that it supports the invitation to request the ILO's technical assistance in this regard. The Industrial Relations Board, whose opinion the Government indicated in its report, also suggests taking up the said invitation. The Committee once again requests the Government to supply examples of facilities provided to workers' representatives in existing collective agreements. It hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future to ensure the application of the Convention in practice, and recalls that it may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance in this respect.

Ecuador

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador and the United Workers' Front (FUT) of 2023. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024, which reiterate the comments made to the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention by Ecuador. The Committee further notes the detailed joint observations of PSI in Ecuador, the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL) and FETRAPEC, received on 31 August 2024, and the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, and also notes the Government's reply to all these observations. The Committee also notes the observations of the CEOSL, received on 5 October 2024, and the Government's reply thereto.

The Committee notes that the observations of the trade unions referred to above address matters that are mainly examined in the present comment. The Committee notes that the ITUC also refers to the systematic and unjustified rejection of applications for the registration of trade unions and PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC express concern at the Basic Bill to reform the Labour Code for the Ethical Management and Transparency of Associations and Workers' Unions which, according to their indications, was submitted to the National Assembly on 30 July 2024 and proposes the legalization of various acts of interference in the independence of trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee also notes that the ITUC expresses concern, in the same way as the FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and FUT did in 2023, on the implementation of Executive Decree No. 730 of 2023 ordering the armed forces to take action to suppress organized crime, indicating that it could be applied to any attempt at popular mobilization or social protest. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the objective of the Decree is to combat organized crime and that it will be applied in such a manner that it does not affect the right to social mobilization and protest, with the guarantee that action by the armed forces will be carried out within the legal framework and in respect of human rights. The Government adds that it is prepared to maintain an open dialogue with trade unions and constantly seeks respect for freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the Decree is not applied in such a manner as to affect the exercise of the rights set out in the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Conference Committee at its 112th Session (2024), in which the Conference Committee expressed concern that the Government had so far not accepted a direct contacts mission or availed itself of ILO technical assistance, as previously requested. The Conference Committee deplored the failure of the Government to register a tripartite delegation to the Conference and noted with concern the general anti-trade union climate prevailing in the country which is not conducive to the free exercise and full enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective and urgent measures to:

- immediately and effectively take the necessary steps to determine culpability and punish the perpetrators of the murder of Mr Sandro Arteaga Quiroz;
- prevent violence in relation to the exercise of legitimate trade union activities;
- ensure that trade unionists are able to exercise their activities in a climate free from violence, harassment and intimidation, and within the framework of a system which guarantees the effective respect of civil liberties and freedom of association rights;
- ensure that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, including self-employed and informal workers, have the right to establish and join trade unions of their own choosing in law and practice;
- amend, in full consultation with the social partners, the following legal provisions in order to bring them into line with the Convention:
    - sections 443, 449, 452 and 459 of the Labour Code, which require an excessive number of workers for the establishment of workers' associations and limit the possibility of creating trade unions by branch of activity;

- section 10(c) of Ministerial Decision No. 0130 of 2013 on compulsory time limits for convening trade union elections;
- section 459(4) of the Labour Code, which requires Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible for trade union office;
- section 459(3) of the Labour Code, which allows the role of officer of an enterprise committee to be filled by any worker, whether or not a trade union member;
- section 11 of the Basic Reform Act, which excludes certain categories of public workers from the right to form and join trade unions;
- provisions of the Basic Reform Act, which grant privileges to majority committees of public servants and deprive all other organizations of the possibility to defend the interests of their members;
- Decree No. 193, which allows for administrative dissolution of public servants unions;

- take all possible measures to register the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) without delay.

The Conference Committee also invited the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to effectively implement all of the above recommendations.

Technical assistance. Direct contacts mission. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee expressed concern that the Government had not so far accepted the direct contacts mission requested in 2022 or availed itself of ILO technical assistance for the effective implementation of all the recommendations of the Conference Committee. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Labour and Wages Board (CNTS) is a tripartite advisory and technical body, under the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour, which applies the principles of equity and consensus between the various social partners that are members, and the acceptance of the direct contacts mission would therefore involve duplication as the Government is already working to ensure the full and effective application of the Convention. Echoing the concern expressed by the Conference Committee, the Committee deeply regrets that the direct contacts mission that has been requested for the past two years has not yet been carried out. The Committee firmly trusts that the Government, which is ultimately responsible for guaranteeing respect for freedom of association in the country, will accept the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee in 2022. The Committee expresses the hope that the direct contacts mission will contribute to finding appropriate solutions to all the pending issues raised by the ILO supervisory bodies for many years.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Murder of a trade unionist. In its previous comment, the Committee regretted to note the lack of progress in the investigation of the murder in 2022 of Mr Sandro Arteaga Quiroz, secretary of the Union of Workers of the Manabí Provincial Government. The Committee notes that PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC indicate that there has been no significant progress in the investigation and that the judicial procedure has not yet commenced, which in their view shows significant negligence in light of the facts. The Committee expresses its concern in this regard and regrets to note that the Government has not provided any information on the subject. The Committee notes that the ITUC deeply regrets that there has been no progress in the clarification of the facts relating to the murder and adds that the situation of insecurity has resulted in a considerable and very worrying increase in complaints of violence against trade union leaders, including death threats to coordinators of the Trade Union Association of Banana, Agricultural and Rural Workers (ASTAC) and the dismissal of workers who were endeavouring to establish or join a union, in the context of a generalized and dangerous anti-union climate. The Committee recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have constantly emphasized the interdependence of civil liberties and trade union rights, and that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). Trusting that the Government will guarantee respect for this principle of interdependence, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to determine responsibilities and punish those guilty of the crime of the murder of Mr Sandro Arteaga Quiroz and keep the Committee informed in this respect.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 2 of the Convention. Excessive number of workers (30) required for the establishment of workers' associations and enterprise committees. Possibility of creating trade union organizations by branch of activity. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend sections 443, 449, 452 and 459 of the Labour Code so as to: (i) reduce the minimum number of members required to establish workers' associations and enterprise committees; and (ii) enable the establishment of first-level trade unions that include workers from various enterprises. The Committee regrets to note that the Government does not refer to the amendment of the sections respecting the number of workers required for the establishment of workers' associations and enterprise committees. The Committee notes that the ITUC, PSI in Ecuador, CEOSL and FETRAPEC reiterate that large enterprises in the country account for 0.5 per cent of all active enterprises, and that it would therefore be impossible to establish unions in over 90 per cent of the production units in the country. They also emphasize that it is urgent to guarantee the possibility for self-employed and informal workers to organize. The Committee is bound to recall that, although the requirement of a minimum number of members is not in itself incompatible with the Convention, the number should be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 89). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, following consultations with the social partners, to amend the sections of the Labour Code referred to above in the manner indicated and to keep it informed of any developments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether self-employed and informal workers enjoy the rights set out in the Convention and to specify the corresponding legislative provisions.

With reference to the establishment of organizations grouping together workers from several enterprises, the Committee recalls that: (i) a ruling handed down in 2021 ordered the Ministry of Labour to register the ASTAC as a branch union, despite it being formed of workers from various enterprises, and to adopt regulations for the registration of unions by branch of activity; and (ii) the Ministry registered the ASTAC as a branch union and applied for an extraordinary protection order against the ruling for lack of adequate grounds and legal certainty and failure to comply with due process. The Committee notes, on the one hand, the Government's indication that there is no provision in the legislation allowing the organization of workers in several enterprises by branch of activity while, on the other hand, it indicates that unionization by branch of activity has been included in the Regulations respecting labour organizations for the exercise of the right to freedom of association and trade union independence (hereinafter the ROL), issued on 18 January 2024 by the Ministry of Labour. The Government indicates that on 18 December 2023, the members of the executive committee of the ASTAC were registered for the period 2023 to 2025. The Committee notes the ITUC's indication that the Ministry has refused to issue regulations on the establishment of branch unions and claims that the ruling respecting the registration of the ASTAC applies between the parties. The PSI in Ecuador, CEOSL and FETRAPEC observe that: (i) no decision has yet been handed down concerning the application for an extraordinary protection order; (ii) on 7 August 2024 the Constitutional Court requested the Ministry of Labour to provide a detailed report on compliance with the 2021 ruling; and (iii) in March 2024, in response to the application for the registration of the Audiovisual and Cinematographic Worker's Union of Ecuador (SITACE), the Labour Organizations Department indicated that it does not have competence to issue a decision concerning freedom of association by branch of activity. The Committee also notes the CEOSL's indication that: (i) on 6 June 2024, the Bill to reform the Labour Code to guarantee freedom of association was submitted to the National Assembly and, among other amendments, the Bill claims to facilitate trade union organization by branch of activity; and (ii) the Bill has been under discussion by the Labour Law and Social Security Commission of the National Assembly since 3 October 2024. The Committee notes all of the above indications and regrets to note that, despite the comments that it has been making for many years, the establishment of first-level trade unions of workers from various enterprises is still not permitted. The Committee recalls that these matters have been examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Cases Nos 3148 (381st, 391st and 407th Reports, of March 2017, October 2019 and June 2024) and 3437 (404th Report, October 2023) and that the Committee on Freedom of Association regretted on each occasion that, despite its recommendations and the follow up by the Committee of Experts, both the national legislation and the practice followed by the Ministry of Labour still do not permit the establishment of first-level trade unions composed of workers from different enterprises. Recalling once again that, in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, workers must be able, if they so wish, to establish first-level organizations at a higher level than the enterprise, the Committee reiterates its firm expectation that the 2021 ruling referred to above will contribute to allowing the establishment of trade union organizations by branch of activity. With reference to its previous request, the Committee notes that the Constitutional Court and the National Assembly will be dealing with this issue and expects that the Committee's views on this fundamental aspect of compliance with the Convention will be useful for them. The Committee firmly expects that the Government will provide information in the near future on the measures adopted to ensure full recognition, in law and practice, of the right of workers from several enterprises to establish first-level trade union organizations. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the process of the registration of the SITACE.

Article 3. Compulsory time limits for convening trade union elections. The Committee has been requesting the Government to amend section 10(c) of the Regulations on labour organizations No. 0130 of 2013 (ROL 2013), which provides that trade union executive committees shall lose their powers and competences if they do not convene elections within 90 days of the expiry of their term of office, as set out in the respective union statutes, such that the consequences of any delay in holding elections is determined by the union statutes themselves, subject to respect for democratic rules. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2024-012 of 2024, through which the Ministry of Labour issued ROL 2024, repealed ROL 2013; and (ii) section 13 of ROL 2024 provides that, in the event that the executive committee of a trade union has completed the period for which it was elected, it will continue in office until it is legally replaced. The Committee notes with interest this amendment and hopes that it will contribute to the effective exercise of the rights contained in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the new provision in practice.

Requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible for trade union office. The Committee has urged the Government to amend section 459(4) of the Labour Code, which provides for the requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible to be an officer of an enterprise committee. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that the prohibition only relates to officers of enterprise committees, not to being a leader or member of other forms of association. The Committee noted that, under the terms of the Labour Code, enterprise committees are one of the forms that trade unions can take within an enterprise. The Committee recalls once again that, under Article 3 of the Convention, all workers' and employers' organizations shall have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom and that the national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, if so permitted by the organization's statutes and rules, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to amend section 459(4) of the Labour Code in order to bring the legislation into accordance with the Convention and requests the Government to keep the Committee informed of any developments in this regard.

Election as officers of enterprise committees of workers who are not trade union members. The Committee previously requested the Government to hold consultations with the social partners on the need to amend section 459(3) of the Labour Code (which provides that the role of officer of an enterprise committee may be filled by any worker, whether or not a union member). The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that it considers it necessary to maintain tripartite dialogue to determine the feasibility of a possible amendment of the current text. The Committee takes due note of these indications and once again requests the Government to hold consultations with the social partners on the need to amend section 459(3) of the Labour Code to bring it into full compliance with the principle of trade union independence and to keep the Committee fully informed of any developments in this respect.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Article 2. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee noted previously that, although section 11 of the Basic Act reforming the legislation governing the public sector (hereinafter, the Basic Reform Act), adopted in 2017, recognizes the right of public officials to organize, certain categories of public employees are excluded from this right, especially those under contract for occasional services, those subject to free appointment and removal from office, and those on statutory fixed-term contracts. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has confined itself to indicating the applicable legislation and reiterates that public officials have the right to organize to defend their rights, improve the delivery of public services and to strike, without referring to the matters covered by the Committee's comment. The Committee also notes the indication by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that the ROL 2024 sets out two additional requirements which restrict the establishment of trade unions, indicating that the application for legal personality must be accompanied by a justification of the applicable labour regulations for the establishment of first-level organizations in public institutions and by a report of the labour inspector notified to the employer (when the real notification to the employer occurs after the application for registration has been made). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into line with the Convention so that all workers, with the sole possible exception of members of the police and the armed forces, have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. It requests the Government to report any measures adopted in this regard and to provide information on the impact that the additional requirements set out in ROL 2024 have had in practice.

Right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Organizations of public servants other than committees of public servants. The Committee noted previously that, in accordance with the provisions of the Basic Reform Act, committees of public servants, which must be composed of 50 per cent plus one of the personnel in a public institution, are responsible for defending the rights of public servants and are the only bodies that can call a strike. Emphasizing that all organizations of public officials must be able to enjoy the various rights established by the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) provide information on organizations of public officials other than committees of public servants and indicate the means available to them to defend the occupational interests of their members; and (ii) take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation does not limit recognition of the right to organize to committees of public servants. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has confined itself to indicating that committees of public servants are protected by article 326(9) of the Constitution of the Republic, which provides that, for all the effects of the employment relationship in State institutions, workers shall be represented by a single organization. Recalling once again that, under Article 2 of the Convention, trade union pluralism must be possible in all cases, and that no organization of public servants should be deprived of the essential means of defending the occupational interests of its members, organizing its administration and activities, and formulating its programmes, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that legislation does not restrict recognition of the right to organize to the committees of public servants as the sole form of organization and the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will provide information on any measures adopted in this regard.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations and associations of public officials to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee previously strongly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code, which provides for a term of imprisonment of from one to three years for stopping or obstructing the normal provision of a public service, so as to prevent the imposition of criminal penalties on workers engaged in a peaceful strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the adoption of new legislation and the reform of laws is the responsibility of the National Assembly and that penal sanctions are only imposed in cases in which strikers break the law. The Committee regrets to note that, based on the information provided by the Government, it appears that there has been no progress in taking its comments into account. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code in the manner indicated and, until such time as those measures have been taken, to ensure that the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code is not used as a means of criminalizing peaceful social protest. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted in this regard and invites it to draw the attention of the National Assembly to these comments.

Article 4. Dissolution of associations of public officials by the administrative authorities. Recalling that Article 4 of the Convention prohibits the suspension or administrative dissolution of associations of public officials, the Committee previously urged the Government to ensure that the provisions of Decree No. 193, which regulates social organizations and maintains engagement in party-political activities as grounds for administrative dissolution, are not applicable to associations of public officials whose purpose is to defend the economic and social interests of their members. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that the Basic Reform Act provides that organizations of public servants may exclusively be dissolved by judicial ruling. The Committee recalls that various trade union organizations have indicated that the reasons for the forced dissolution of labour organizations set out in Decree No. 193 are applied to trade unions because they are considered to be "civil society" organizations, and not trade unions. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the provisions of Decree No. 193 are not applied to associations of public servants whose purpose is to defend the economic and social interests of their members.

Administrative dissolution of the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE). After noting the registration of social organizations related to the UNE (which was dissolved by an administrative act issued by the Under-Secretariat of Education in 2016), the Committee previously requested the Government to: (i) indicate whether the registration of the UNE-E with the Under-Secretariat of Education in Quito meant that the UNE had been able to resume its activities of defending the occupational interests of its members: (ii) take all the necessary measures to ensure the registration of the UNE as a trade union organization with the Ministry of Labour, if the UNE so wished; and (iii) ensure the full return of the property seized as well as the removal of any other consequences resulting from the administrative dissolution of the UNE. The Committee noted that the UNE had filed several legal actions against the dissolution decision and that the Constitutional Court ruling on an extraordinary protection order was still pending. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has confined itself to indicating that the Basic Public Service Act provides that organizations of public officials can be dissolved exclusively by judicial ruling. The Committee notes that, according to the ITUC, PSI in Ecuador, CEOSL and FETRAPEC, in a ruling issued on 12 July 2023, the Constitutional Court partially accepted the extraordinary protection order, found that the right to due process had not been observed in the reasons given for the decisions made by the public authorities, set aside the decision of 18 January 2018 (which had found that the appeal for cassation filed by the President of the UNE was not receivable) and ordered another magistrate on the bench of the Specialized Administrative Dispute Chamber of the National Court of Justice, to be assigned by lot, to rule on the admissibility of the appeal for cassation filed by the complainant. They add that the judicial procedure is still pending in the National Court of Justice and that, irrespective of the ruling, the Government could review its own acts and set aside the administrative decision to dissolve the UNE, without a judicial ruling being necessary to order it to do so. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee requests the Government to take all possible measures for the registration of the UNE without delay. It also requests the Government to provide information on the ruling handed down by the Specialized Administrative Dispute Chamber of the National Court of Justice, and on the possibility of the Government reviewing its own acts, as suggested by the trade union organizations. The Committee also once again requests the Government to ensure the full return of the property seized as well as the removal of any other consequences resulting from the administrative dissolution of the UNE and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC), the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador of 2022, and the Government's reply to the joint observations of the FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the United Workers' Front (FUT) of 2023. The Committee also notes the detailed joint observations of PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC received on 31 August 2024, and the observations of the CEOSL received on 5 October 2024, and notes the Government's reply in this respect. The Committee notes that these observations deal in detail with issues that the Committee is examining in the present comment and allege acts of anti-union discrimination, including anti-union dismissals, blacklisting and partial compliance with rulings ordering the reinstatement of trade union leaders. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these allegations.

Technical assistance, direct contacts mission requested by the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in the context of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee notes that, when examining the application of Convention No. 87 by Ecuador in June 2024, the Conference Committee once again addressed issues that have a direct impact on the capacity of workers to engage in collective bargaining of their terms and conditions of work and consequently on the application of the present Convention. The Conference Committee expressed concern that the Government had not yet accepted the direct contacts mission requested in 2022 and had not had recourse to ILO technical assistance for the effective application of all the recommendations made by the Conference Committee. The Committee firmly trusts that the Government will accept the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee in 2022 and hopes that the direct contacts mission and ILO technical assistance will contribute to finding appropriate solutions to all the pending issues raised by the ILO supervisory bodies for many years.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. For over a decade, the Committee has been referring to the need to include provisions in the legislation that guarantee protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in access to employment. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the provisions of two Ministerial Decisions: Decision No. MDT-2017-0082, issuing regulations that guarantee non-discrimination, including during selection processes and during the existence of the employment relationship, and Decision No. MDT-2020-44 respecting discrimination, work-related harassment and/or any form of violence against women at the workplace. However, the Committee notes that the Ministerial Decisions do not contain explicit provisions guaranteeing protection against anti-union discrimination in access to employment and do not therefore address the request made by the Committee. The Committee notes the indication by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that the regulations respecting harassment, violence and discrimination at work do not apply directly to discrimination against trade union leaders. Recalling that Article 1 of the Convention addresses the prohibition of anti-union discrimination at the time of the recruitment of individual workers, so that access to employment is not made subject to the condition that workers shall not join a union or shall relinquish union membership, the Committee once again emphasizes the need for provisions explicitly prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of access to employment to be included in the legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee also notes that the trade union confederations reiterate that many trade union leaders cannot find work because employers consult the website of the judiciary, which contains publicly accessible information on labour claims, and they avoid recruiting applicants who have made claims against previous employers. They add that, in February 2024, with a view to regulating the handling of personal data and preventing discrimination based on judicial records, Regulations were issued on the handling of personal data in judicial proceedings. They indicate that, although this is a significant step forward, it is not known how many applications have been made for personal data to be kept anonymous and their outcome. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact in practice of the Regulations on the handling of personal data in judicial proceedings.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with section 221 of the Labour Code, collective labour contracts must be concluded with the enterprise committee (one of the forms, in accordance with the Labour Code, that can be taken by trade unions in the enterprise) or, if one does not exist, with the organization with the highest number of worker members, on condition that it represents over 50 per cent of the workers in the enterprise. Emphasizing the link between the low coverage of collective agreements in the country and the restrictive requirements set out in law for participation in collective bargaining, the Committee previously emphasized the need to amend the section so that, where there is no organization that represents over 50 per cent of the workers, minority trade unions are at least able, alone or jointly, to negotiate a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to indicating that 68 collective agreements were concluded in the country in 2023. The Committee regrets that information has not been provided on the adoption of the measures requested or greater detail provided on the collective agreements referred to. The Committee notes the indications by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that: (i) according to the data provided by the Government, between December 2023 and the middle of 2024, there were 14 collective agreements concluded in the private sector covering 6,029 workers; (ii) the majority of the agreements were revisions of pre-existing collective agreements; and (iii) information is not available on the coverage of collective agreements at the national level. The Committee once again emphasizes that, even though the requirement of representativity for signing collective agreements is fully compatible with the Convention, the level of representativity set should not be such as to hinder the promotion and implementation of free and voluntary collective bargaining, as envisaged in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee once again emphasizes the need to amend section 221 of the Labour Code in the manner indicated and urges the Government to provide information in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, and to indicate the sectors covered (including the agricultural and banana sector), the number of workers covered by the agreements and whether they are new or revised collective agreements.

Collective bargaining in sectors composed mainly of small enterprises. The Committee recalls that, in its comments on the application of Convention No. 87, it has been calling for many years for the amendment of the following aspects of the legislation, which significantly restrict the capacity of workers to organize in unions: (i) the requirement of a minimum of 30 workers to establish unions and enterprise committees; and (ii) the impossibility of establishing first-level unions composed of workers from different enterprises. The Committee noted with concern that these restrictions on the right to organize, combined with the absence of a legal framework for collective bargaining at the sectoral level, as alleged by the trade unions, appear to exclude any possibility for workers in small enterprises to exercise their right to collective bargaining. The Committee has previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in sectors of production composed mainly of small enterprises. The Committee notes that the Government refers to two Ministerial Decisions issued in 2024: (i) Decision MDT-2024-012, issuing the Regulations on labour organizations for the exercise of freedom of association and trade union independence; and (ii) Decision No. MDT-2024-080, issuing the Regulations on the presentation, negotiation and conclusion of collective labour agreements and transitional acts in the private and public sectors. However, the Government has not indicated how the Ministerial Decisions relate to the comments that the Committee has been making in the context of this Convention and Convention No. 87. The Committee notes the indication by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that there are no branch collective labour agreements or accords that protect sectors in which the Government has denied the possibility to organize (which according to these unions represent over 90 per cent of the production units in the country). The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to: (i) reduce the number of workers required to establish unions and enterprise committees; and (ii) enable the establishment of first-level unions composed of workers from different enterprises, in order to make collective bargaining possible in production sectors composed mainly of small enterprises.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Articles 1, 2 and 6. Protection of workers in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee of Experts and the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 3347) have requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation applicable to the public sector includes provisions that explicitly protect the leaders of all organizations of public servants, and not only the leaders of committees of public servants (a specific mechanism for the representation of workers in the public sector), against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, as well as provisions establishing penalties that are dissuasive in the event of such acts. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that protection against acts of discrimination and the right to establish trade unions are set out in explicit legislative texts, both in the Political Constitution of the Republic and the Basic Public Service Act (LOSEP), which prohibits any act of discrimination against public servants. The Committee also notes the allegations made by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that, in the public sector and in the context of the violence that is affecting the country, trade union leaders do not have a legislative framework that protects them from acts of discrimination in their individual recruitment or measures that guarantee their safety against threats related to the exercise of their freedom of association. The Committee once again emphasizes the importance of legislation that provides the same type of protection against possible acts of anti-union discrimination and interference for all leaders of all organizations of public servants equally. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the measures indicated above and requests it to provide information in this respect.

The Committee previously noted a ruling by the Constitutional Court issued in 2020 declaring unconstitutional the compulsory redundancy purchase mechanism (under which the public administration, in exchange for the payment of compensation, could unilaterally terminate the employment of public servants without the need to indicate the grounds for such termination), and it requested the Government to provide information on any action taken to comply with this ruling. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has not provided this information. The Committee notes the indications by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that: (i) on 5 June 2024, the National Court of Justice issued ruling 10-2024, indicating that the finding that the administrative act of purchasing the compulsory redundancy of a public servant is unconstitutional, in accordance with the constitutional ruling, implies that matters return to their previous state, for which reason the effects include reinstatement of the public servant, the payment of unpaid wages; and that the public servant, in exchange, must return the total amount of the compensation for the purchase of compulsory redundancy, the value of which will be offset from the amount to be reimbursed by the public authority; (ii) in response to a petition for clarification concerning the interpretation of ruling 10-2024, two judges of the Administrative Dispute Chamber of the National Court of Justice indicated that it is only applicable in the case of public servants who have submitted an administrative dispute action that is still under consideration; and (iii) the majority of those who were dismissed did not appeal to the Administrative Dispute Chamber, and those that did saw their challenges set aside, shelved or declared in abeyance. Recalling that the trade union organizations have alleged that the compulsory redundancy purchase mechanism in the public sector was applied for at least eight years with a clear anti-union intent, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any challenges brought under the 2020 ruling and ruling 10-2024 of the National Court of Justice.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously noted with concern that the Basic Reform Act and Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2018-0010 do not recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants and that only public sector workers governed by the Labour Code could engage in collective bargaining. The Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the representative organizations of workers, to take the necessary measures to establish adequate collective bargaining machinery for all categories of public sector employees covered by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that only the enterprise committee is empowered to conclude collective agreements and that for the conclusion of collective agreements it is necessary to obtain favourable budgetary certification in the public sector, as set out in the respective legislation and the Labour Code, and other related texts. The Committee notes the indication by PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC that, during the period between December 2023 and the middle of 2024, some 22 collective agreements were concluded in the public sector and that this low number of collective agreements is a result, among other factors, of the fact that only the special committees composed of employed persons classified as manual workers may conclude collective agreements and that it is necessary to obtain favourable budgetary certification. PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC add that: (i) in ruling No. 68-20-IN/24, handed down on 27 June 2024, the Constitutional Court set aside a challenge to find unconstitutional section 26 of the Basic Act on Public Enterprises (LOEP), which excludes public servants from collective bargaining in public enterprises (the Court found that the legislation makes a distinction between manual workers and other public servants and explicitly establishes clear differences between them, and that as collective bargaining in the public sector is only intended for workers governed by the Labour Code, the prohibition set out in section 26 of the LOEP lies within the margin of discretion of the legislator); and (ii) the final resolution of Case No. 3564-22-JP is pending before the Constitutional Court in which in the first instance and on appeal, the courts ordered the National Telecommunications Corporation to apply the Labour Code to public servants and include them within the benefits of collective bargaining. PSI in Ecuador, the CEOSL and FETRAPEC allege that two Ministerial Decisions issued in 2024 amount to a further attack on collective bargaining in the public sector, namely: (i) Decision MDT 039 on the setting of the remuneration of public servants and "workers" in public sector entities; and (ii) Decision MDT 080, which requires a favourable opinion of the Ministry of Finance for the conclusion of collective agreements in the public sector that have already been negotiated by the parties, and sets in motion a process of the unilateral revision of collective agreements and transactional acts, including the exclusion from the benefits of these agreements of workers classified as public servants. The Committee notes all these developments and once again expresses concern at the absence of recognition of the right to collective bargaining of public servants, despite the fact that many of them (public sector teachers, employees in the public health system, employees in public enterprises, municipal services and decentralized bodies, etc.) are not engaged in the administration of the State and therefore have to benefit from the guarantees provided by the Convention. The Committee once again regrets that, despite its requests, the Government has not taken specific initiatives for the re-establishment of the rights referred to above. Recalling once again that there are mechanisms that permit the harmonious coexistence of the mission of the public sector to serve the public interest and the responsible exercise of collective bargaining, the Committee once again firmly urges the Government, in consultation with the representative organizations of workers, to take the necessary measures to establish adequate collective bargaining machinery for all categories of public sector employees covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Ministerial Decisions referred to above.

The Committee expresses its deep concern regarding the complete absence of consideration of its requests made over many years to address the serious shortcomings in the application of the Convention observed in both the public and private sectors. While noting the persistence of numerous allegations of anti-union discrimination, the Committee deeply regrets that no legislative amendments have been made or considered to prohibit anti-union discrimination in recruitment processes or to ensure that provisions with dissuasive sanctions against anti-union discrimination and interference in the public sector protect the leaders of all public service organizations. The Committee also notes with deep concern that: (i) the combination of severe legislative restrictions on the right to organize, as noted in its comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the high threshold of representativeness required for collective bargaining, and the lack of a legal framework for sectoral collective bargaining alleged by the trade union organizations, effectively prevent, both in law and in practice, the vast majority of the country's private sector workers from exercising their right to collective bargaining; and (ii) the current legislation in the public sector excludes most public sector workers covered by the Convention from the right to collective bargaining. In these circumstances, the Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 90 of its General Report to be asked to be submitted to the Conference.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 113th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Egypt

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 17 September 2024. It further takes note of the observations of the Trade union Committee for the Workers in Suez Canal Clubs dated 20 March 2024 and the parallel report transmitted by the Solidarity of Trade Unions Federation on behalf of a number of Egyptian trade unions on 22 August 2024, in relation to the application of the Convention in law and in practice. The Committee notes the Government's reply thereto received on 24 November 2024, which the Committee will examine with the Government's next report.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Application in law and in practice. The Committee recalls from its previous comments the Government's creation of a legal and technical committee reporting directly to the Minister of Manpower (now Ministry of Labour), mandated with examining all problems facing union organizations that had failed to regularize and then offering the required technical support. Having noted numerous challenges to registration that had been raised by the ITUC and other unions, the Committee requested the Government once again to provide detailed information on the number of trade union registration applications received overall, the number of registrations granted, the reasons for any refusals to grant, as well as information on the average time taken from filing to registration.

The Committee notes from the latest information provided by the ITUC and the Solidarity of Trade Unions Federation that a number of Federations, Professional Unions and Unions of Workers still have yet to be registered despite the completion of their documents and procedures. The ITUC states that the number of independent trade unions in Egypt has decreased from 1,500 to only about 150 since 2018. The Committee notes the Government's reply concerning the steps taken to facilitate the registration of unions that had met obstacles in their requests, including the development of an action plan to hold an urgent workshop comprising representatives of the ILO office in Cairo, specialists at the Ministry's general office, labour directorates against which complaints have been received, and representatives of trade union organizations (complainants), in the presence of legal and trade union experts, to provide the necessary technical assistance to all parties. A fixed day in the first week of each month is set for the meeting of the Standing Committee to examine complaints submitted by trade union organizations and those which failed to complete the registration process. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government concerning the status of several organizations whose requests were still pending, and the indication that the Trade Union Committee of Workers in the Qus Educational Administration, Trade Union Committee for Real Estate Tax Workers in Fayoum and the Trade Union Committee of Real Estate Tax Workers in Ismailia have been registered and are carrying out their activities without interference. As regards the number of registered trade unions, the Government indicates that there is currently 1 trade union federation, 29 General Unions, 2 general unions not affiliated with the Federation, a total of 2,245 registered trade union committees, including 2,084 trade union committees affiliated to the general Federation and 63 union committees that are not affiliated with the General Federation. The Government also indicates that the average time for registration is between 3 and 5 working days if the papers are completed. Finally, the Government indicates that there are also some trade union organizations which are considering the establishment of a union at the level of the Republic or a new general union. According to the Government, this confirms that the trade union movement in Egypt enjoys freedom of association in its most important aspects. While welcoming the efforts made by the Ministry to facilitate the resolution of pending requests for registration, which in several cases have been pending for more than two years, the Committee encourages it to accelerate its efforts so that the remaining organizations awaiting registration can receive their certificates of legal personality without delay and be able to exercise fully their trade union activities.

Trade union monopoly by decree. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted with deep concern the ITUC's allegations that the Trade Union Committee of Workers in Bibliotheca Alexandrina registered in September 2022 found its legal status immediately challenged by a "Fatwa" (advisory opinion) from the State Council claiming the illegality of their organization due to the existence of another Egyptian Trade Union Federation (ETUF)-affiliated trade union in parallel. The Committee notes the Government's affirmation that the existence of a trade union committee at an enterprise is not considered to be an obstacle to the establishment of another committee in the enterprise or institution and that there are many cases to confirm this. The Government adds that the legal value of the fatwa in the Egyptian national context is that it serves as an "advisory opinion" and is not binding on any party, not even on the applicant requesting an opinion or a fatwa. The Ministry tried to intervene with the employer in this case explaining that the fatwa was contrary to law and that the trade union committee was recognized by the Ministry but received no response. The Ministry has thus resorted to the highest authority, the General Assembly of the Fatwa and Legislation Departments of the State for it to issue another fatwa repealing the fatwa issued. In the meantime, the Ministry invites the representatives of the Trade Union Committee concerned to attend tripartite dialogue sessions at the national level, and those of the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue and ensures their participation in all labour or tripartite activities with the Government and employers. The Ministry will again expedite the issuance of the fatwa of repeal and expects that a positive result can be issued in the near future. The Committee welcomes the steps taken by the Government to resolve this serious violation of the Convention and trusts that the matter will soon be resolved. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on developments in this regard.

Minimum membership requirements. The Committee recalls its previous comments requesting the Government to review, with the social partners, the minimum membership requirement to form a trade union of 50 workers for the formation of a trade union committee at enterprise level, ten union committees and 15,000 members for a general union and seven general unions and 150,000 members for the establishment of a trade union federation (namely, a confederation). The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that these requirements are not prohibitive and that it has not received any complaint in this regard. It indicates however that it has again referred the issue to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue which concluded that a study should be prepared on the experiences of similar countries and best practices in countries which resemble Egypt as to the size of the labour force for re-submission to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue, as soon as it is restructured. The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard and requests that it provide information on developments in relation to this matter including any steps taken to ensure that the minimum membership requirements do not impede the rights of all workers at all levels to form and join the organization of their choosing.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration without interference and to enjoy the benefits of international affiliation. The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to bring section 41.1 and 41.4 of the Trade Union Law which set out conditions for trade union office, including the requirement to read and write as well as matters related to military service into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes from the Government's report that it had proposed to delete these two items and simply indicate that it would be preferable for the conditions to be set out in the trade union bylaws while the majority of workers' representatives preferred to keep these conditions in the law. The Council concluded by postponing its decision on the issue and decided to submit it once again to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue, in its new composition. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring these provisions into conformity with the Convention and requests that it provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned: sections 30 and 35 of the Trade Union Law, which set out the competencies of executive committees and the election procedure for general assemblies; section 42, concerning detailed rules on the membership of executive committees and their functions; and section 58 which makes the accounts of organizations subject to the control of a central accounting body amounting to interference in their administration, read with section 7 which empowers the Minister in vague and broad terms with the authority to request the competent labour court to hand down a decision to dissolve the administrative board of a trade union organization if there is a violation of the law or a perpetration of gross financial or administrative violations. The Committee notes the explanations given by the Government as to the aim of these provisions and its indication that they have not hindered the activities of trade unions, and that section 7 has never been resorted to. As the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue was unable to examine the amendment of these provisions, the matter will be presented to its first meeting after its new composition. The Committee expects that the necessary steps will be taken to amend these provisions as appropriate to ensure the right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities without interference and requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Trade union elections. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's allegations that in 2022, many trade unions could not proceed with their internal elections as their application for registration was still pending and that the Supreme Committee established by Ministerial Decree No. 61 was clearly under the control of the Government and had simply annulled the candidacy for trade union elections of no fewer than 1,500 trade unionists, often for the benefit of ETUF candidates. The Committee notes the Government's indication that these allegations were baseless as the Supreme Committee was subsequently abolished in the same year by Ministerial Decree No. 72 and had never been convened due to the questions of its independence. As regards the specific allegations of candidates being excluded from elections, the Government states that such situations can be appealed to the courts and each and every case would need to be examined. The Committee invites the Government to review any specific cases of interference in trade union elections within the framework of the legal and technical committee established at the Ministry and to consider any remedial measures necessary within the framework of the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue.

The Committee further notes the serious allegations of interference in the elections of the executive board of the Union of Workers in the Clubs of the Suez Canal Authority resulting in its being considered non-existent, the employer ceasing all communication with the union, effectively freezing its activities and the Union's President being subject to a disciplinary investigation. The Committee notes the Government's reply that all steps were taken in accordance with the law. The Committee further notes, however, the Ministry's indication that it will invite the representative of the Trade Union Committee to a meeting to discuss the matters raised and its welcoming of any technical support or advice to any trade union organization within the framework of the Law which relates to trade union organizations, and the protection of the right to organize, and the basic bylaws of the organization. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Labour Code. The Committee has been noting for a number of years that a draft Labour Code was transmitted to the Manpower Committee of the Parliament for debate. In reply to the Committee's considerations in relation to the right to strike, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that its comments would be presented to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue for discussion and be taken into account in the draft law when discussed by the House of Representatives. The Committee further observes the concerns raised by the ITUC and the Solidarity of Trade Unions Federation about several arbitrary arrests and detentions of workers for having exercised their right to strike and the overly broad definition of essential services. The Committee notes that the Government has sent the draft to the ILO for technical review and trusts that these concerns will be addressed in the final version of the draft submitted to the House of Representatives.

The Government further informs that in July 2024, the Council of Ministers approved the re-composition of the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue under the name the Supreme Council for Social Consultation at Work with equal representation of the three partners, including the representation of trade union organizations which are not affiliated with the General Federation of Egyptian Trade Unions, the participation of representatives of the National Council for Women, persons with disabilities, human rights, motherhood and childhood, and a number of independent experts. The Council has an independent budget, a unit for research and studies, and a technical secretariat to carry out its tasks. Furthermore, it may establish subsidiary councils in the governorates. The Committee welcomes the institutionalization of the Supreme Council for Social Consultation at Work and trusts that it will soon finalize the review of the draft Labour Code for re-submission to the House of Representatives. The Committee expects that the Government will soon be in a position to inform the Committee of the adoption of the Labour Code and trusts that, in its final form, the Code will ensure full conformity with the Convention.

As regards the work on a law regulating domestic work, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft is still under discussion with the social partners, specialized bodies and agencies. The Government adds that domestic workers are not excluded from the provisions of the current labour code and that this will be directly clarified in the new draft. Recalling the importance of ensuring the right to organize for domestic workers within the meaning of the Convention, the Committee trusts that the necessary steps will be taken to ensure their coverage under the draft Labour Code, coupled with, as appropriate, the draft law regulating domestic work. It requests the Government to provide copies of these laws as soon as they are adopted.

El Salvador

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Salvadoran Workers (CSTS), received on 31 August 2024, which refer to issues raised in the present comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2024, which reiterate the comments made in June 2024 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) on the application of the Convention by El Salvador. The Committee also notes the joint observations of the CSTS, the National Confederation of Salvadoran Workers (CNTS), the Autonomous Federation of Salvadoran Workers (CATS) and the Single Confederation of Salvadoran Workers (CUTS), received on 4 September 2024, as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, which relate to issues raised in the present comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Conference Committee at the 112th Session (June 2024) of the Conference and observes that the Conference Committee: (i) noted with concern the allegations of ongoing violations of the Convention by the Government, including the absence of tangible progress in the investigations into the murders of trade unionists and reported acts of harassment against an employers' organization (National Business Association – ANEP); and (ii) expressed concern regarding the allegations of interference by the authorities in the appointment of employers' and workers' representatives in public tripartite and joint bodies. The Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with independent and representative employers' and workers' organizations, to:

- immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, and adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated;
- re-ensure respect for the freedom of workers and employers to constitute the organizations of their choosing, organize their administration and activities and formulate their programme of action without interference from the public authorities;
- expedite and conclude the ongoing investigations into the murders of trade union leaders with a view to establishing the facts, determining culpability and punishing the perpetrators;
- provide detailed information on the content and status of the parliamentary process of the proposed reform to the Penal Code, the consultation processes with social actors that exist in relation to this initiative and the results obtained;
- expedite the processes of registration of, and issuing credentials to, trade union executive committees (boards) to ensure the right of workers' and employers' organizations to establish and elect their representatives in full freedom;
- repeal the legal obligation for trade unions to request the renewal of their legal status every 12 months;

- reactivate, without delay, the Higher Labour Council (CST) to ensure the full participation of workers' and employers' organizations in social dialogue and tripartite consultation;
- develop a time-bound road map to implement without delay all recommendations made by the ILO high-level tripartite mission of 2022 and the Committee's previous recommendations relating to the Convention;
- send information on the institutional change from the Salvadoran Vocational Training Institute (INSAFORP) to the Vocational Training Institute (INCAF) and ensure that INCAF has a tripartite structure.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the right of association to defend the interests of professional and trade union associations is a key issue and that, given the significant transformation process it has been experiencing since 2019, the Government has focused on ensuring security, and also creating employment and generating investment. The Government points out that it has respectfully addressed the allegations raised by ANEP, whose discourse reiterates objectives that are irrelevant in a context which is fully open to the social and productive freedom of employers in the country. The Government indicates that there are no acts of harassment, violence or discrimination against ANEP and that proof of this is that the allegations against the Government are contrary to what has been publicly expressed by representatives of the ANEP member unions, who have endorsed the Government's administration. The Government also points out that the executive committee freely and democratically elected by ANEP in accordance with its own constitution for the 2022–24 period has performed its function both within the association and in different public forums without interference or harassment.

While noting these indications, the Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted with concern reports of acts of harassment against ANEP and also recalls that these issues are being examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 3380. The Committee notes that the CFA, in its last examination of the case, urged the Government to take the necessary measures, including those in follow-up to the conclusions and recommendations of the high-level tripartite mission and of the ILO supervisory bodies, to ensure full respect for the autonomy of ANEP and the recognition of its representatives, as well as of this employers' organization as a social partner, in order to go on promoting the full participation of ANEP in social dialogue. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will implement the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association (408th Report, October 2024) and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, and to take steps to ensure that there is no recurrence of such acts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the investigation into the murder of Mr Victoriano Abel Vega, which took place in 2010, is still under way. The Committee observes that the ITUC, CNTS, CSTS, CATS and CUTS point out that no action has been taken so far towards ensuring that the perpetrators and instigators are brought to justice. The Committee observes that the CFA, in its last examination of Case No. 2923, deplored the absence of information on tangible progress towards the resolution of the case more than 14 years after the murder, and firmly urged the Government and all the competent authorities, in a coordinated manner and as a matter of urgency and priority, to make all the necessary efforts to expedite and conclude the investigations under way in order to identify and punish as soon as possible both the instigators and the perpetrators of the murder of Mr Victoriano Abel Vega. The Committee refers to the recommendations of the CFA in this case (Report No. 407, June 2024). With regard to the murder of the trade union leader Mr Weder Arturo Meléndez Ramírez, the Government indicates that the perpetrators of the murder have been identified and the criminal proceedings are at the preliminary stage, with a final judgment still to be handed down. The Committee observes that the CFA, in its last examination of Case No. 3395, expressed the hope that the criminal proceedings under way would enable both the instigators and perpetrators of the murder of Mr Meléndez to be identified and punished without delay. The Committee refers to the recommendations of the CFA in this case (Report No. 408, October 2024). The Committee recalls that the CFA noted, in the context of Case No. 3395, that the Government had referred to a proposal to reform the Penal Code which had been drawn up by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, with the aim of improving the protection of freedom of association of trade union leaders and members. The Committee invited the Government to provide information in this respect. The Committee observes that the CFA, in its last examination of the case, referred to the Committee for follow-up of the handling of this initiative. Once again underlining the importance of having a legislative framework which enables prompt and deterrent penalties to be imposed on acts of anti-union violence, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the handling of the initiative in question.

The Committee notes that the CNTS claims there is a latent threat against the trade union movement: (i) in mid-2022, following an anonymous call to the National Police, Ms Dolores Almendares, general secretary of the Cuscatancingo San Salvador Centro Employees' and Workers' Union and member of the CNTS executive committee, was arrested and detained for 7 months; (ii) at the end of 2018, the National Police arrested Mr José Hever Hernández Chacón, general secretary of the El Salvador Federation of Independent Workers' and Commercial Unions, who remained in detention and died without a letter of release having been implemented; (iii) Mr José Leonidas Bonilla, a trade unionist at the mayor's office of Mejicanos, was arrested on 26 April 2022, following an anonymous call identifying him as a member of unlawful associations, and died in detention in September that year without a letter of release, signed by a judge, having been implemented; and (iv) Mr Sabino Ramos, member of the executive committee of the Workers' Union of the Mayor's Office of Panchimalco and member of the executive committee of the El Salvador Federation of Municipal Workers, was arrested on 28 April 2022 and is currently in custody. The Committee expresses its concern at the seriousness of these allegations. Recalling that the arrest and detention of trade union leaders and members for the exercise of legitimate trade union activities constitute a serious obstruction of their rights and a violation of freedom of association, and underlining the importance of ensuring guarantees of due process, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Pending legislative reforms. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the following legislative and constitutional provisions:

- articles 219 and 236 of the National Constitution and section 73 of the Civil Service Act, which exclude certain categories of public servants from the right to organize (members of the judiciary, public servants who exercise decision-making authority or are in managerial positions, employees with duties of a highly confidential nature, private secretaries of high-ranking officials, diplomatic representatives, assistants in the Public Prosecutor's Office, auxiliary employees, assistant prosecutors, labour prosecutors and delegates);
- section 204 of the Labour Code, which prohibits membership of more than one trade union, so that workers who have more than one job in different occupations or sectors are then able to join different trade unions;
- sections 211 and 212 of the Labour Code (and the corresponding provision of the Civil Service Act in respect of unions of public service employees), which establish, respectively, the requirement of a minimum of 35 members to establish a workers' union and a minimum of seven employers to establish an employers' organization, so that these requirements no longer hinder the establishment of workers' and employers' organizations in full freedom;

- section 219 of the Labour Code, which provides that, in the process of registering the union, the employer must certify that the founding members are employees, so as to ensure that the list of the applicant union's members is not communicated to the employer;
- section 248 of the Labour Code, which requires a waiting period of six months for a new attempt to establish a trade union when its registration has been refused;
- article 47(4) of the National Constitution, section 225 of the Labour Code and section 90 of the Civil Service Act, which establish the requirement to have attained the age of majority and to be a national of El Salvador by birth in order to hold office on the executive committee of a union, which are excessive restrictions on the right of workers to elect their representatives in full freedom. In this regard, the Committee notes that the ITUC, CNTS, CSTS, CATS and CUTS all indicate that the requirement to be a national of El Salvador by birth prevents migrant workers from Honduras and Nicaragua who work in the construction industry and agriculture from holding union office;
- article 221 of the National Constitution, so as to limit the prohibition of the right to strike in the public service to officials exercising authority in the name of the State and those who perform their duties in essential services in the strict sense of the term (while recalling that it is also possible to restrict the exercise of the right to strike through the establishment of minimum services in public services of fundamental importance);
- section 529 of the Labour Code, so that when a decision is taken to call a strike, only the votes cast are taken into account, and also that the principle is recognized of the freedom to work of non-strikers and the right of employers and managerial staff to enter the premises of the enterprise or establishment, even where the strike has been decided upon by an absolute majority of the workers;
- section 553(f) of the Labour Code, which provides that strikes shall be declared unlawful "where inspection shows that the striking workers do not constitute at least 51 per cent of the staff of the enterprise or establishment".

In addition, recalling that prison staff must have the right to organize, the CFA and the Committee have asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full respect of the right of prison staff to organize (Report No. 392, Case No. 3321, October 2020).

In its last comment, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the constitutional and legislative reforms referred to above, including the reform of the Labour Code, were under examination by the Legislative Assembly. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2022 and 2023 various sections of the Labour Code were reformed which are not concerned with matters relating to the Convention. The Government highlights the work of the Trade Union Office, which provides legal support for trade unions, and indicates that in 2022–23 the National Department of Trade Unions (DNOS) granted legal personality to 41 new trade union organizations (three federations, 18 trade unions and 20 union branches).

While noting these indications, the Committee notes with regret that the Government does not refer to the adoption of any measures to revise the numerous constitutional and legislative provisions referred to above. The Committee notes that the ITUC, CNTS, CSTS, CATS and CUTS: (i) emphasize that it is vitally important that the requested reforms be implemented as soon as possible; and (ii) state that the Legislative Assembly working committee was dissolved on 1 June 2024 and that it is not known so far which of the established committees will deal with the topics that came under that committee's mandate, and so any reform that had been addressed by the dissolved committee might be shelved. Emphasizing the extended number of years that the Committee has been raising these legislative matters, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps, after tripartite consultations, to ensure that the provisions referred to above are in conformity with the Convention and to provide information on this matter.

Application of the Convention in practice. While noting the Government's indications regarding the work of the Trade Union Office and the DNOS, the Committee notes that the ITUC, CNTS, CSTS, CATS and CUTS raise a number of concerns regarding the process of registration, the election of trade union executive committees and the issuing of credentials. Specifically, the unions indicate that: (i) one of the biggest obstacles to the exercise of freedom of association is the obligation to hold elections every year for the executive committees of all unions, federations and confederations; (ii) the discretionary delay in issuing credentials to union executive committees (currently more than six months) continues to cause serious damage to the organizations (the CSTS refers to the unjustified delay in relation to organizations that try to be independent of the political activities organized by the Government); and (iii) the DNOS imposes arbitrary requirements, not laid down in the Constitution or the law, with regard to the registration of union executive committees and the issuing of credentials to them, including the requirement to provide payslips and individual identity documents for executive committee members, and that the procedure for the registration or modification of executive committees used to be free of charge and is now subject to payment. The Committee recalls that the CFA has had occasion to examine allegations of excessive requirements for the registration of union executive committees in El Salvador (Case No. 3136, Report No. 377; Case No. 3258, Report No. 389) and has referred to the need to review the rules applicable to the registration of executive committees to guarantee the right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom and to ensure a swift process. The Committee refers to the recommendations made by the CFA in these cases. In the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) and the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to speed up the processes of registration and issuing of credentials for union executive committees in order to guarantee the right of workers' and employers' organizations to establish and elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistical information on the status of procedures for the registration of the executive committees of employers' and workers' organizations.

Reactivation of the Higher Labour Council (CST) and appointment of worker and employer representatives to INCAF. The Committee notes with regret that the Government makes no reference in its report to the Conference Committee's conclusions regarding the reactivation of the CST and the tripartite structure of INCAF. The Committee notes that the ITUC, CNTS, CSTS, CATS and CUTS indicate that: (i) the CST last met on 5 May 2022; and (ii) INCAF, established after the dissolution of INSAFORP (which had a tripartite structure), only has representatives from the Government. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to reactivate the CST without delay in order to ensure the full participation of employers' and workers' organizations in social dialogue and tripartite consultations and to ensure that INCAF has a tripartite structure.

The Committee notes that the trade union organizations referred to above agree in their allegations that there are serious restrictions in law and in practice, and also a lack of genuine social dialogue, which obstruct the development of a free and autonomous trade union sphere and restrict freedom of association. The Committee expresses its concern on this matter and urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to adopt all the measures that it was urged to adopt by the Conference Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made on the implementation of these measures and reminds the Government that it may still avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025].

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), which were received on 13 October 2020, endorsing the comments of the National Business Association (ANEP), which refer to issues examined by the Committee in the context of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the importance of reforming penalties for anti-union discrimination in order to ensure their deterrent effect. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Legislative Decree No. 519, published in the Official Journal of 31 October 2022, amends section 627 of the Labour Code, which establishes fines of up to 12 minimum wage equivalents, in industry, commerce and the services sector, for each of the offences specified in Books I, II and III of the Code, and other related labour legislation, which did not establish any special penalties. The fines vary according to the size of the enterprise, the seriousness of the offence, the intent, and the injury caused. While welcoming this change in the legislation, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the classification of fines according to the seriousness or types of offences involving acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this matter, and on the application in practice of the imposition of fines for acts of anti-union discrimination.

Furthermore, in its previous observation, the Committee emphasized that even though the staff of municipal authorities are not covered by the Labour Code, this does not release the Government from its responsibility to guarantee adequate protection against anti-union discrimination for this category of workers. The Committee notes that the Government once again provides information on the existing legal framework: indicating that municipal authority workers can currently file complaints with the Attorney-General's Office, the Human Rights Protection Office and the Public Prosecutor's Office; reiterating that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare (Ministry of Labour) is obliged to refrain from carrying out inspections of the municipal authorities (except for inspections relating to the General Occupational Risk Prevention Act); and noting the need to amend the applicable legislation. In this regard, the Committee observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) asked the Government to take the necessary steps, including legislative measures if necessary, in consultation with the representative social partners from the sector, to ensure that the staff of municipal authorities have access to adequate mechanisms for protection against acts of anti-union discrimination (see 389th Report, June 2019, Case No. 3284), in which the CFA referred the legislative aspects of the case to the Committee). Recalling its previous comments in the context of the application of the present Convention and of the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), on the need to introduce legislative reforms to ensure that all public workers covered by these Conventions enjoy adequate protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to revise the legal framework, in consultation with the representative organizations in the sector, to ensure that municipal authority workers have access to adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Articles 2, 4 and 6. Legislative issues pending for several years. For a number of years, the Committee has been making comments on certain provisions of domestic law with the aim of bringing them into full conformity with Articles 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention:

- acts of interference: section 205 of the Labour Code and section 247 of the Penal Code, so that the legislation explicitly prohibits all acts of interference in the terms prescribed by Article 2 of the Convention;

- requirements for negotiating a collective agreement: sections 270 and 271 of the Labour Code and sections 106 and 123 of the Civil Service Act, so that when one or more unions do not cover more than 50 per cent of the workers, collective bargaining rights are explicitly granted to the existing unions so that they, jointly or separately, can at least represent their own members;
- revision of collective agreements: section 276(3) of the Labour Code, so that the renegotiation of collective agreements while they are still in force is only possible at the request of both signatory parties;
- judicial remedies in the event of refusal to register a collective agreement: section 279 of the Labour Code, in order to clarify that appeals can be made against decisions of the Director-General involving refusal to register a collective agreement;
- approval of collective agreements concluded with a public institution: section 287 of the Labour Code and section 119 of the Civil Service Act, which regulate collective agreements concluded with a public institution, in order to replace the requirement for ministerial approval by a provision envisaging the participation of the budgetary authority during the process of collective bargaining, and not when the collective agreement has already been concluded;
- exclusion of certain categories of public employees: section 4(1) of the Civil Service Act, so that all public officials not engaged in the administration of the State enjoy the guarantees provided for in the Convention.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the Ministry of Labour, together with representatives of the unions, have set up a technical round table for the purpose of discussing and analysing the proposed reforms to the Labour Code. These reforms will subsequently be submitted to the employers for consideration before being referred to the Higher Labour Council.

The Committee welcomes this initiative and hopes that it will contribute to the reactivation of the Higher Labour Council as a tripartite social dialogue body, in which the pending legislative issues to which the Committee has repeatedly referred can be addressed comprehensively. Hoping to observe tangible progress in the near future, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of these discussions and supply further details of the employers' and workers' organizations involved in the consultation process.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the status of collective bargaining in the country, indicating that: (i) there are 23 collective agreements in force in the public sector (of which 9 have been extended); and (ii) a total of 21,590 workers in the public sector are covered by collective bargaining. The Committee also welcomes the Government's indication, in its report on the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), regarding the annual award of the "collective negotiation prize", which the Ministry of Labour is implementing to promote a culture of dialogue, collaboration and mutual respect. The Committee notes this information but observes that it does not contain any details of collective agreements in the private sector. The Committee also observes that, according to available ILOSTAT data, the coverage rate for collective bargaining in the country was 4.6 per cent in 2018. The Committee considers that this low coverage rate may stem from the restrictive requirements established by the legislation for engaging in collective bargaining, as referred to above. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on all legislative and practical measures taken to promote the full development and use of collective bargaining. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, indicating which relate to the private sector and which to the public sector, and also on the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Public servants excluded from the guarantees of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that sections 4(k) and (l) of the Civil Service Act (LSC) exclude certain categories of public employees from the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a draft updated version of the Labour Code is currently under examination and that it takes the Committee' recommendations into account, which will subsequently make possible the amendment of the LSC. In this regard, the Committee recalls that under Article 1 of the Convention, the only categories of public employees in respect of which national laws or regulations may determine the extent to which the guarantees provided for in the Convention shall apply are: (i) high-level employees whose functions are normally considered as policy-making or managerial; (ii) employees whose duties are of a highly confidential nature; and (iii) the armed forces and the police. While noting the draft updated version of the Labour Code indicated by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to swiftly take the necessary measures to revise the LSC to ensure that all public employees covered by the Convention effectively enjoy its guarantees. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Protection against anti-union discrimination and against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the absence of specific provisions in the LSC related to protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 47 of the Constitution, sections 32(j) and (m) of the LSC and the ruling for protection of constitutional rights No. 433-2005 of the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice govern protection against any act of anti-union discrimination in the public administration. The Committee duly notes the content of section 47 of the Constitution and, in particular, of section 32 of the LSC, which prohibits discrimination against public servants on grounds of their membership of a trade union, or reprisals taken against them on the same grounds. While observing that the cited legislation governs protection against anti-union discrimination for trade union leaders and members in general, the Committee nonetheless observes that the LSC contains no provisions which: (i) define applicable penalties in the event of anti-union discrimination against trade union leaders and members in general; and (ii) prohibit acts of anti-union interference. The Committee recalls once more the need for the national legislation to contain an explicit prohibition of any act of anti-union discrimination against public employees, and against any act of interference by the public authorities in the establishment, operation or administration of organizations of public employees, and for such acts to give rise to dissuasive sanctions. The Committee therefore requests the Government, in consultation with the representative organizations concerned, to take the necessary measures to adopt legal provisions expressly prohibiting acts of anti-union interference in the public administration, and to establish dissuasive sanctions both for such acts and also for anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress in this regard.

Article 6. Facilities to be afforded to public employees' organizations. In its previous comment, the Committee observed that the LSC does not contain provisions on facilities to be afforded to public employees' organizations and trusted that the current legislative reform would give full effect to the application of Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Criteria and Guidelines for the Provision and Administration of Trade Union Leave for Representatives of Public Servants in the Executive have been drawn up; and (ii) the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, through Decision No. 746-2011, establishes trade union leave for public employees. The Committee regrets that the Government has not provided information on the preliminary draft Public Service Bill which contains provisions respecting the facilities to be afforded to trade union representatives and that there continues to be no legal provision in place in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to report on any development concerning the preliminary draft Public Service Bill which contains provisions regarding the facilities to be afforded to public employees' organizations, as well as on other legal action to give full effect to the application of Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 8. Settlement of disputes. As El Salvador has ratified the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), in 2022, the scope of which covers the public service, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of that Convention in respect of this matter.

Eritrea

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that, since its first examination of the application of the Convention by Eritrea in 2002, it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation or adopt additional laws and regulations in order to: (i) recognize and guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention to domestic workers and civil servants; and (ii) provide adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. In particular, it repeatedly requested the Government to:

- adopt regulations providing for the right of domestic workers to organize and bargain collectively, as the current legal framework, namely the 2001 Labour Proclamation and the 2015 Civil Code, do not explicitly grant them the protection provided for under this Convention, and section 40 of the Labour Proclamation indicates that a Labour Regulation will determine the scope of application of the Labour Proclamation as regards domestic workers;
- adopt legislation providing for the right of civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State to organize and bargain collectively (pursuant to section 3 of the 2001 Labour Proclamation, members of the civil service –except for civil servants in state-owned enterprises- are excluded from its scope, and pursuant to section 2176 of the 2015 Civil Code, they are excluded from the right to conclude collective agreements under the terms as provided for in section 2182 of the Civil Code, read in conjunction with sections 99–114 of the 2001 Labour Proclamation);
- extend the existing protection in the 2001 Labour Proclamation against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference to:

(a) explicitly cover acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment and all prejudicial acts during the course of employment (section 23 of the Labour Proclamation prohibits anti-union discrimination in general terms without referring to specific acts);

(b) provide for effective remedies and dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference for all workers (section 28(3) of the Labour Proclamation provides for reinstatement in case of unjustified dismissal in relation to trade union leaders only and section 156(3) of the Labour Proclamation provides only for fines up until an amount not exceeding 1,200 Eritrean nakfa (approximately US$80) for the acts listed in section 118 of the Labour Proclamation, including acts of interference.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous observations and its reference to existing legal provisions which the Committee had noted but had not considered sufficient in relation to the guarantees foreseen in the Convention. It notes with regret that the Government does not provide any new information as regards any legislative measures in relation to the Civil Code, the Civil Service Code (according to the Government's previous indications in progress since 2002), the Labour Proclamation (as per the previous indications of the Government in progress since 2010) or the adoption of the Ministerial Regulation concerning domestic workers (as per the previous indications of the Government in progress since 2003). Recalling that it has been raising these issues for more than two decades, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to draft and adopt legislation that takes into account the comments that the Committee has been making for years, with a view to giving effect to the principles of the Convention. The Committee encourages the Government to seek the technical assistance of the Office to make progress in this respect.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Compulsory national service. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the compulsory national service continued to be of indefinite duration and contains both a military and a civilian component. In this respect, it noted the Government's indication that while conscripts are excluded from the right to collective bargaining during the service of purely military character, those who perform national service in state-owned enterprises have bargaining rights equal to that of other workers, and those who work in other civil sector positions can exercise their rights under the 2015 Civil Code. Recalling the restrictions in the Civil Code as regards collective bargaining for workers in civil service positions, it noted that all persons performing compulsory national service, with the probable exception of those assigned to work in state-owned enterprises, continue to be deprived of their right to collective bargaining.

The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates it previous observations. It notes, that pursuant to the 2024 report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Eritrea, the duration of the service continues to be indefinite, both in its military and civilian components, which it has been since the Government declared a state of emergency in 1998 (A/HRC/56/24, paragraph 28). Recalling the long-standing nature of this issue, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied their right to bargain collectively beyond the scope of the exceptions set out in Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. In response to its request for detailed information regarding the collective agreements concluded and in force, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there are currently 99 collective agreements in force covering 19,096 workers, including 10,865 men and 8,231 women. The Government also refers to 27 terminated, and 39 new collective agreements in 2024, and provides information as to the sectors concerned in which they were concluded (including textile, skin and shoes, transportation and communication, services, mining, chemical and metal, food and beverages). The Committee also notes the Government's information that the Department of Labour frequently conducts awareness-raising activities as regards collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information as regards the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining, and to continue to provide detailed and up-to-date information on the collective agreements concluded and in force, including the number of workers covered.

Eswatini

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations received on 30 August 2024 from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), on 17 September 2024 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and on 19 September 2024 from Education International (EI), recalling and raising issues addressed by the Committee below. The Committee notes the Government's response to the observations made by the ITUC and EI, received on 2 December 2024, which it will examine at its next meeting.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2024 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Eswatini. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the deteriorating state of public order and its negative impact on trade union rights in the country as well as a culture of impunity for the perpetrators of crimes against trade unionists. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective, urgent and time-bound measures to:

- refrain from the violent treatment, intimidation or harassment, including judicial harassment, of leaders and members of trade unions in the education sector conducting lawful trade union activities, including the Swaziland National Association of Teachers (SNAT) President and Secretary-General Messrs Mbongwa Dlamini and Lot Mduduzi Vilakati;
- release, quash convictions and drop all charges brought against individuals for having exercised lawful trade union activities and ensure the safe return home of all trade unionists living in exile, including the Secretary-General of the Swaziland Transport, Communication and Allied Workers' Union (SWATCAWU), Sticks Nkambule;
- conduct without delay independent investigations into: (1) alleged instances of intimidation, harassment or violence, including the murder of Mr Thulani Maseko and the persecution of Mr Mbongwa Dlamini, with a view to determining culpability and punishing the perpetrators and instigators of these crimes; and (2) investigate violence and interference by the police in lawful, peaceful and legitimate trade union activities and hold accountable those responsible;
- ensure that employers' and workers' organizations, including the Trade Union Congress of Swaziland (TUCOSWA), the SNAT and the SWATCAWU, are given the autonomy and independence they need to fulfil their mandate and represent their members;
- repeal any administrative orders or legislative provisions that have the effect of prohibiting or restricting the right to freedom of assembly of trade unions and ensure in practice that trade unions fully enjoy the right to hold public meetings as enshrined in the Convention, including by training police and security forces, municipal councils and the judiciary;
- address the findings of the Investigation Committee and the National Voluntary Conciliation and implement the planned sensitization campaign on the codes of practice in full consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the ILO.

The Conference Committee also requested the Government to submit a detailed report on the measures taken and progress achieved with regard to the above recommendations, including all outstanding information requested by the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2024.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Investigation Committee and the National Voluntary Conciliation procedure. ILO technical assistance. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the 2023 recommendations of the Independent Investigation Committee and the National Voluntary Conciliation procedure, mechanisms which were established at the national level to consider the complaints made by the TUCOSWA and the ITUC in the context of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) Cases Nos 2949 and 3425, concerning allegations of interference in trade union activities, and violence during trade union gatherings. These issues have also been considered by this Committee and the Conference Committee. The Committee notes that the Government availed itself of the technical assistance of the Office for the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendation, which facilitated the adoption of an Implementation Plan by the Government and the TUCOSWA, in August 2024, subject to tripartite validation and review by other relevant stakeholders. In this context, the Committee also notes the observations made by the ITUC that following the voluntary conciliation, most of the issues raised by TUCOSWA in CFA Case No. 3425 remain unresolved. Recalling the Conference Committee's request to address the findings of the Investigation Committee and the National Voluntary Conciliation with the technical assistance of the ILO, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. Anti-union repression. Police violence against industrial actions. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with deep concern the serious allegations of the ITUC and the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) regarding the persecution and murders of trade unionists and the excessive violence against strikers that increased in 2022 and 2023, with allegedly more than 80 people reported to have lost their lives because of police crackdown on protests that demanded democracy and wage increases, including during those organized by the SWATCAWU. The Committee also noted the Government's indications that the attacks on public and private property, severe violence and killings were committed in the context of civil unrest since June 2021 and should not be associated with the exercise of rights under the Convention, and that the protests by the SWATCAWU had by no means been peaceful and had been dispersed with minimum police force.

With regard to the alleged persecution and murders of trade unionists, the Committee notes the Government's indication that independent investigations into politically motivated crimes, including murders, have been ongoing, and that some cases are awaiting trial. As to the investigation of the murder of the human rights and trade union defender, Mr Thulani Maseko, the Government refers to challenges relating to the hostility and non-cooperation of potential witnesses. Concerning the alleged persecution by the authorities of Mr Mbongwa Dlamini, President of the SNAT, the Government denies attacks on his home by the security forces with live bullets, stating that the police only visited Mr Dlamini's parental home to apprehend his nephew, who was suspected of possessing a firearm. Regarding the alleged excessive force by the police during peaceful trade union activities, the Committee notes that three relevant instances have been referred to the Human Rights Commission for investigation by the National Voluntary Conciliation procedure in the context of CFA Case No. 3425. In this regard, the Committee notes that the ITUC reiterates its previous observations concerning the increased violence of the police and security forces during gatherings and demonstrations, and again refers to cases of intimidation, raids, risks of arrests, and extrajudicial killings of trade unionists and human rights activists.

The Committee once again recalls that the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only develop in a climate free of violence, threats and pressure, and that it is for the Government to guarantee that these rights can be exercised normally. It further recalls that Article 8 of the Convention provides that workers and their organizations, like other persons or organized collectivities, shall respect the law of the land and that the law of the land shall not be such as to impair, nor shall it be applied so as to impair, the guarantees provided for in this Convention. The authorities should resort to the use of force against workers, their leaders or their organizations only in situations where law and order is seriously threatened. The intervention of the forces of order should be in due proportion to the danger to law and order that the authorities are attempting to control, and governments should take measures to ensure that the competent authorities receive adequate training and instructions so as to eliminate the danger entailed by the use of excessive violence when controlling demonstrations which might result in a disturbance of peace. Independent judicial investigations should be conducted rapidly and where they have found abuse, the absence of convictions for those guilty of crimes against trade union officers and members creates, in practice, a situation of impunity, which reinforces the climate of violence and insecurity, and which is extremely damaging to the exercise of trade union rights. Recalling that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the deteriorating state of public order and its negative impact on trade union rights in the country as well as a culture of impunity for the perpetrators of crimes against trade unionists, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the outcome of all independent investigations into alleged instances of intimidation, harassment or violence, including as regards the murder of Mr Thulani Maseko, with a view to determining culpability and punishing the perpetrators and instigators of these crimes. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any violations against trade unionists identified in the future and penalties imposed pursuant to section 49(1) of the Police Service Act, No. 22 of 2018 (disciplinary action against abuse of power by members of the police) or any other relevant statutory provision.

Charges brought against individuals for having exercised lawful trade union activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to the request of the Conference Committee, that there are no charges or convictions against trade unionists for engaging in lawful trade union activities. Concerning Mr Sticks Nkambule, Secretary General of the SWATCAWU, the Government indicates that despite an injunction by the Industrial Court of Appeal, issued on the basis of the Industrial Relations Act against a planned protest (including pursuant to section 89 for threats to the national interests in view of the expected disruption of public transport services), SWATCAWU proceeded with the protest as planned on 13 December 2022. Therefore, a case for contempt of court was brought and a warrant issued for the arrest of Mr Nkambule, who fled to South Africa, before the police could arrest him. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government in relation to the charges against Mr Mcolisi Ngcamphalala, Deputy Secretary of the SNAT, and Mr Kwazi Sithembiso Simelane, the Chairperson of TUCOSWA's Youth Structure and Deputy President of the Swaziland Democratic Nurses Union (SDNU), considered in the context of CFA Case No. 3425, and which have not yet been decided by the judiciary or resolved in the context of the National Voluntary Conciliation procedure.

The Committee recalls that it considers that essential services, for the purposes of restricting or prohibiting the right to strike, are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population, and that the transport services and public transport are not considered to be essential services (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 131 and 134). In this context, it also notes that section 89 of the Industrial Relations Act does not provide for any objective limitation and grants broad discretion to the Minister to seek an injunction restraining a strike, even though section 92 of the Act provides for the procedure to determine essential services, and section 93 of the Act provides for a list of essential services, which does not include transport services. Recalling the identical request of the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in order to release, quash convictions of, and drop all charges brought against, individuals for having exercised lawful trade union activities, and ensure the safe return home of all trade unionists living in exile, including the Secretary-General of the SWATCAWU, Sticks Nkambule. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the above-mentioned injunction by the Industrial Court of Appeal concerning the SWATCAWU 13 December 2022 protest action. The Committee also requests the Government, in the context of the current legislative reform, to take the necessary measures to review section 89 of the Industrial Court Act, and to provide information on the concrete measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Harassment in the education sector. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with deep concern the serious allegations from EI, the ITUC, the ITF and the TUCOSWA concerning numerous violations of trade union rights in the education sector, in particular against the SNAT, including anti-discrimination acts and threats against the President of the SNAT, Mr Dlamini and the Secretary-General of the SNAT, Mr Vilakati, and attempts at weakening the SNAT through various means, leading to intimidation, decreased membership, incapacitated leadership due to a fear of assuming union positions, and low turnout in union activities.

The Committee notes that the Government denies these allegations, stressing that the Government has generally maintained a healthy relationship with the SNAT. Concerning Mr Dlamini's dismissal and the relevant disciplinary and court proceedings, the Committee notes the very detailed information provided by the Government and EI, as well as the Industrial Court's Judgment No. 257/2023 of 21 March 2024 declaring the dismissal of Mr Dlamini null and void and directing the Teaching Service Commission (TSC) to reconvene and proceed with the applicant's disciplinary hearing (confirmed in the High Court's Judgement No. 726/2024 of 15 November 2024). The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the reason for Mr Dlamini's dismissal by the TSC was the unauthorized absence from work for a prolonged period of time between 2022 and 2023, whereas EI observes that the absence was authorized by the school's management to take part in lawful union activities. The Committee also notes from the Government's indications that the initial charges of bringing the profession into disrepute, following Mr Dlamini's public contradiction of the Minister of Education and Training by saying schools would be closed on a date proposed for an unlawful protest action, were dropped in the disciplinary hearing process. Concerning the alleged persecution of Mr Mbongwa Dlamini, the Committee notes that EI asserts, in addition to the allegations considered above, his ongoing harassment and victimization, including through ignoring court orders in his favour, police raids of his house, the burning of his belongings, and a situation that forced him to leave the country for a few months in 2023 due to fears for his life. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the decision to bar Mr Dlamini from representing the SNAT in the Joint Negotiation Forum and all social dialogue structures, linked to his dismissal, was reversed in June 2024. Concerning the alleged threats against the Secretary-General of the SNAT, Mr Lot Vilakati, including to cancel his secondment on union duties, the Committee notes the Government's indications that there are no disciplinary actions against him. The Committee also notes that the Government contradicts the previous observations made by the SNAT that the Government refused to collect and remit trade union fees for newly recruited members in 2023 in an attempt to deregister the union. The Government indicates that the delays in registering new union members and collecting union dues were brief and related to changes in the system for registering and deregistering union members, which now requires the communication of changes in the membership to the Ministry of Public Service. The Committee notes that the SNAT challenges the Government's statement that "the Government has had good relationship with SNAT for years". In this respect, EI observes, among other things, that the TSC still refuses to meet the SNAT in the presence of the SNAT President, and that the Government is promoting headteachers and deputy headteachers only if they join the Eswatini Principal Association (EPA), a union created to counter the SNAT. The Committee also notes that the Government has not provided any information as regards the outcome of the appeal against the disciplinary action concerning Ms Sacolo, Chairperson of the Limkokwing Branch of the National Workers Union of Higher Institutions (NAWUSHI), which allegedly targeted her as a union official. Recalling the corresponding request of the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to refrain from the violent treatment, intimidation or harassment, including judicial harassment, of leaders and members of trade unions in the education sector conducting lawful trade union activities, including the SNAT President and Secretary-General, Messrs Mbongwa Dlamini and Lot Mduduzi Vilakati. In this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government to provide its comments on the remaining allegations, to indicate any measures taken to enable the SNAT to develop its activities in the education sector without threats against its leadership or interference, and to provide information on the follow-up to the decisions of the Industrial Court and the High Court in favour of Mr Dlamini.

Legislative reform. The Committee previously requested the Government that the issues of trade union registration (section 32) and of replacement of labour during the course of lawful strike action be considered in the review of the Industrial Relations Act. In this respect, the Committee welcomes the technical assistance of the Office provided in the form of a Technical Memorandum on the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Bill, 2022. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's request for further technical assistance regarding issues raised by TUCOSWA in the context of CFA Case No. 3425. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in the areas identified to work towards the conformity of the national legislation with the Convention and requests the Government to continue to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 3 of the Convention. Ban on trade union gatherings by administrative order. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with concern the allegation from EI, the ITUC, the ITF and the TUCOSWA that the right of freedom of assembly of workers' organizations was considerably restricted. In this respect, the Committee noted that: (i) pursuant to administrative order of October 2021 of the Ministry of Housing and Urban Development, the laws regulating gatherings were suspended, revoking the powers of municipal councils to issue gathering notices; and (ii) pursuant to a public announcement, purporting a relaxation of the ban, as of 18 July 2023, municipal councils were allowed to issue permits for gatherings not exceeding ten people.

The Committee notes the Government's emphasis that following the civil unrest, many gatherings and protest marches, including by trade unions have taken place. However, EI observes that there are still restrictions for trade unions to deliver petitions and march in the streets, and refers to public warnings in the press to the use of live ammunition should there be another civil unrest. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Government communicates with its report a public announcement of 7 October 2024 on gatherings by the Ministry of Housing and Urban Development, pursuant to which, anyone intending to use local authority spaces for gatherings must comply with Public Order Act No. 12 of 2017, the Code of Good Practice on Gatherings, 2017, and the Code of Good Practice on Industrial and Protest Actions (Legal Notice No. 202 of 2015), and that non-compliance with these legislative instruments will result in appropriate legal sanctions under the law. In this regard, the Government emphasizes that the laws governing public gatherings were never suspended, claiming that all previous administrative directives were informed by the COVID-19 restrictions and the civil unrest which started in June 2021. While welcoming the public statement on the issue of holding public gatherings, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide any information on the instructions given to the municipal councils, the police and security forces, that the restrictions to issue gathering notices were lifted. Recalling the Conference Committee's request to repeal any administrative orders or legislative provisions that have the effect of prohibiting or restricting the right to freedom of assembly of trade unions and ensure in practice that trade unions fully enjoy the right to hold public meetings as enshrined in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government, for the purpose of legal certainty, to duly inform the local municipal councils, the police and security forces, as well as trade unions, of the lifting of all legal provisions and instructions banning local municipal councils from issuing permits for gathering, acting through official communication or other appropriate means. Further recalling that the Public Order Act, 2017, permits the gathering of not more than 50 people without notice requirements, the Committee also requests the Government to refrain from any public statements that would discourage or intimidate trade unions from exercising the rights granted under the Convention. Noting that capacity building activities in trade union rights and the handling of industrial actions (of lower ranked police officers, the union leadership and Marshalls, and the public at large) were also recommended by the Investigation Committee and the National Voluntary Conciliation procedure, and noting the Government's reference to an upcoming awareness-raising workshop with ILO assistance, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to sensitize all relevant actors on the effective management of industrial and protest actions, in conformity with the Code of Good Practice for Industrial and Protest Actions (Legal Notice No. 202 of 2015), the Code of Good Practice on Gatherings (Legal Notice No. 201 of 2017) and the Public Order Act of 2017.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Ethiopia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2021, as well as those of Education International (EI), received on 31 August 2023 concerning matters examined in this comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 109th Session, June 2021)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention and examines the effect given to its conclusions below.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The right to establish and join federations and confederations. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to amend section 3 of the Labour Proclamation No. 1156/2019 (LP) to recognize and guarantee the right to organize for the categories of workers excluded from its scope. The Committee recalls that section 3(2) of the LP excludes the following categories of employment relations or workers in both public and private sectors from its scope: (a) contracts for the purpose of upbringing, care or rehabilitation; (b) contracts for the purpose of educating or training other than apprentices; (c) managerial employees; (d) contracts of personal (domestic) service, and (e) employees of state administration, judges, prosecutors and others whose employment is governed by special laws. The Committee notes that, regarding domestic workers, section 3(3)(c) of the LP provides that the Council of Ministers shall issue a Regulation governing their conditions of work. The Committee further notes that certain excluded groups such as teachers have formed "professional associations" governed by the Organizations of Civil Societies Proclamation No. 1113/2019 (CSOP), but that according to the ITUC and EI, these organizations cannot join federations and confederations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that every effort will be made to solve the problem by conducting a research-based discussion with the stakeholders using the newly created platform relating to the inclusion of the right to establish and join organizations in the special laws governing the conditions of work of excluded workers. The Committee notes with concern that four years after its previous examination of the application of the Convention in Ethiopia and two years after the Conference Committee discussion, no concrete measures have been taken to recognize and guarantee the right of excluded workers and employers to establish and join organizations. Recalling that the only possible exception to the application of the Convention pertains to the members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee urges the Government to either amend section 3 of the LP or adopt adequate legal provisions to recognize and guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention to the excluded categories of workers and employers. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this respect.

Civil servants. The Conference Committee requested the Government to provide information on the status of the ongoing civil service reform as regards the granting of the right to organize to all civil servants. The Committee previously noted that the Government had repeatedly affirmed its readiness to address the matter and that, in full consultations with the social partners, it would take all the necessary measures to grant civil servants and employees of the state administration the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not report any progress in this regard but only indicates that civil servants can form "professional associations" and that the Government is still in the process of studying and discussing measures to ensure their right to organize. The Committee further notes that the "professional organizations" formed under the CSOP do not appear to enjoy important rights specific to employers and workers' organizations, such as the right to represent their members in labour relations and to establish or join federations and confederations, whereas these rights are defined within the framework of the LP only. The Committee is therefore bound to urge the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with organizations representing the employees concerned, to recognize and guarantee the right to organize of all civil servants, including employees of state administration, teachers in public schools, care workers, judges, prosecutors and managerial workers and to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Teachers. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to take all necessary measures, in law and in practice, to ensure that teachers' trade unions are registered and recognized as such and can join other trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National High Court ruled that, due to the existence of a professional association previously registered under the name of the National Teachers' Association (NTA), no other association could be registered under this name. The Committee also notes the Government's submission to the Conference Committee that the Ethiopian Teachers' Association (ETA), an affiliate of EI which has more than 600,000 members, has been registered since 1949 and operates for the advancement of teachers' rights and interests. The Committee notes that according to the EI, the ETA is unable to become a member of the Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions because of the exclusion of workers involved in education and training from the coverage of the LP. It further notes the ITUC's indication that while the registration request of the NTA appears to have failed, the ETA is only recognized as an occupational organization, although it has been requesting recognition as a trade union for a long time to be able to fully represent its associates in collective bargaining and to join a trade union confederation; however, in absence of legislative reforms, such recognition remains impossible. The Committee recalls that in May 2013, in the framework of the Joint Statement on the Working Visit of the ILO Mission, the Government had committed itself to registering the NTA under the Charities and Societies Proclamation (the predecessor of the CSOP). The Committee notes with regret that despite this longstanding formal commitment of the Government, the NTA has not succeeded in obtaining registration. The Committee notes that the legal issues raised in relation to the full recognition and guarantee of Ethiopian teachers' right to organize are due to: (i) the exclusion of private and public sector teachers from the scope of the LP and, (ii) the inadequacy of the guarantees granted to teachers' associations governed by the CSOP, which do not allow the ETA to join a confederation or represent its members in collective bargaining. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to, in full consultation with the social partners, review the legislation with a view to giving full recognition and guarantee to the rights of private and public sector teachers under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect.

Articles 2 and 7. Right to establish organizations without previous authorization, conditions of recognition of legal personality. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to revise section 59.1(b) of the CSOP in order to ensure that the grounds for refusal of trade union registration are not excessively broad. The Committee notes that section 59.1(b) provides that the Civil Societies Organization Agency shall refuse to register an organization where it finds that the aim of the organization or the activities description under its rules are contrary to law or public morals. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this regard, while in its written submission to the Conference Committee it had indicated that this provision primarily aims to prevent wrongdoing by civil society organizations and NGOs. The Committee further notes that pursuant to section 61 of the CSOP, the acquisition of legal personality depends on registration. The Committee once again recalls that registration should be a simple formality and should not amount to a requirement of prior authorization for establishment of organizations, and that "public moral grounds" constitute too wide and vague a ground for refusal of registration and acquisition of legal personality, giving an excessively broad discretion to the authorities to block the registration and acquisition of legal personality for organizations. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise section 59.1(b) of the CSOP with a view to removing "contrary to public morals" as grounds for refusal of registration of an organization and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. Essential services. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to delete air transport and urban light rail transport services from the list of essential services. The Committee notes the Government's indication that currently, light rail transport constitutes the main means of transportation for large numbers of people in urban areas and would be deleted from the list of essential services when other public transportation options start being widely used. The Committee recalls that these services do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term – that is services, the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee therefore requests once again that the Government take the necessary measures so that the air and urban light rail transport services are deleted from the list of essential services in section 137.2(a) and (d) of the LP and recalls that it may give consideration instead to the establishment of a system of minimum service in these services of public utility. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken or envisaged in this respect.

Quorum required for a strike ballot. The Committee notes that section 159.3 of the LP requires that a decision to take a strike action must be supported by a simple majority of the workers concerned in a meeting attended by at least two-thirds of the trade union members. The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to revise the legislation, with a view to reducing the two-thirds quorum required for the strike ballot, which may unduly hinder the possibility of calling a strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the right to strike would not be effective in the absence of support by the majority of workers. Recalling that strikes are essential means available to workers and their organizations to protect their interests, the Committee considers that where the law requires a vote by workers before a strike can be held, account should be taken only of the votes cast and the required quorum and majority should be fixed at a reasonable level. The observance of a quorum of two-thirds of union members may be difficult to reach and can unduly hinder the right to strike in practice. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 159.3 of the LP and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by the administrative authority. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to make sure that the appeal of members, founders or managers against dissolution of their organization by administrative decision has suspensive effect. The Committee notes that section 77.4 of the CSOP gives the Director General of the Civil Societies Organization Agency the power to order the suspension of the activities of an organization for a period not exceeding three months, when investigation has revealed a grave violation of the law in relation to those activities. A right to appeal of the organization to the board of the Agency and then to the Federal High Court is provided in section 77.5. The power of the Director General to suspend the activities of the organization is also provided under section 78.4, in case an organization does not alter or rectify its practice after receiving a strict warning. In this case, the suspension order can entail the dissolution of the organization unless it has been lifted by the Board of the Agency or by court order. Section 78.5 of the CSOP provides for a right to appeal to the Federal Hight Court for the members, founders or managers of the organization dissolved by decision of the Board. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information regarding the suspensive effect of appeals, and recalls that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations and should therefore be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees. This can only be ensured through a normal judicial procedure, which should also have the effect of a stay of execution (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 162). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the CSOP so as to ensure that the appeal against such administrative decisions has suspensive effect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance regarding the issues raised in this comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fiji

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that, in June 2019, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards requested a direct contacts mission (DCM) to Fiji to assess progress made in the implementation of the Convention. The Committee notes that the mission was postponed due to COVID-19 and other factors but finally took place in April and May 2024. The Committee takes note of the conclusions and recommendations of the DCM and refers to these, as well as to the detailed information provided by the Government and the social partners to the DCM, in its comment below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to consider issuing instructions and providing training to ensure that State entities and their officials refrain from anti-union practices. It also firmly expected that any charges against Mr Anthony, the General Secretary of the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC), related to the exercise of his trade union activities would be immediately dropped. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the charges against Mr Anthony were withdrawn by the prosecution. It further welcomes the Government's commitment to undertake awareness-raising and training with the relevant authorities on the protection of civil liberties, as well as the interest of the police, noted by the DCM, to participate in training to ensure respect for freedom of association, assembly and speech. The Committee notes in this regard that the DCM recalled that training modules for law enforcement had already been developed and could be introduced into broader human rights trainings. In view of the commitment expressed, the Committee encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that regular training, adapted to their needs, is provided to the police and the armed forces to ensure that State officials fully respect basic civil liberties and fundamental labour rights of workers and employers, including during demonstrations. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Appointment of members to and the functioning of the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) to review labour legislation. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed its expectation that members of the ERAB would be nominated and appointed without delay and without the Government's interference. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that members of the reconstituted ERAB were appointed in January 2023 in equal representation from the Government, workers and employers. The Committee further welcomes the observations of the DCM that the ERAB was fully functional and that the social partners were given full independence in designating their representatives.

Progress on the review of labour legislation as agreed in the Joint Implementation Report (JIR). In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to take all necessary measures to continue to review the labour legislation within the reconvened ERAB, as agreed in the JIR and the September 2020 Plan of Action (elaborated with the ILO Country Office). The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that in February 2023, the ERAB tripartite sub-committee was formed and started to review the Employment Relations Act (ERA) matrix. It further welcomes the details provided by the Government on the revision process, including the sharing of documents and numerous consultations with the FTUC and the Fiji Commerce and Employers' Federation (FCEF) between April 2023 and November 2024. The Committee notes, in particular, the October–November 2024 tripartite round-table meetings, which the Government indicates addressed the concerns raised by the employers in relation to the draft amendments. The Government further informs that the amendments, drafted with the assistance of the ILO, will also be available for national consultation to obtain the views of the population before being submitted to the Cabinet and the Parliament. Welcoming the Government's and the social partners' support for the proposed labour law reform, the Committee trusts that the revision of the ERA will be concluded without delay and will meaningfully address all outstanding matters, taking into account the Committee's comments below. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the progress made following public consultations and submission to Parliament and to transmit the final version of the amended law once adopted.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously noted that the following issues were still pending: denial of the right to organize to prison guards (section 3(2) of the ERA); and excessively wide discretionary power of the Registrar in deciding after consultation whether or not a union meets the conditions for registration (section 125(1)(a) of the ERA). While noting that the Government does not elaborate on the review of the Registrar's discretionary powers, the Committee welcomes the information provided to the DCM that the issue of the right to organize of prison guards will be addressed in the ongoing labour law reform. The Committee trusts that both of these pending issues will be properly addressed in the labour law review, taking into account the Committee's comments, and requests the Government to provide updated information in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Essential services. The Committee previously recalled that, through the inclusion in the ERA of the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree, 2011 (ENID), the list of industries in which strikes could be prohibited included those that did not fall within the definition of essential services in the strict sense of the term (section 185 of the ERA). The Committee therefore urged the Government to meaningfully engage with the social partners to review the list of essential services, as agreed in the JIR and the October 2019 and the September 2020 action plans, so as to restrict limitations on the right to strike to essential services in the strict sense of the term and public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes the adoption of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2023 and notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that it approved the repeal of the ENID, thus reverting the list of essential services in section 185 of the ERA back to the services set out in its Schedule 7, which the Committee previously considered were defined in line with the Convention. The Government also informs of amendments to section 188(4) of the ERA to extend the time frame for reporting employment grievances from 21 days (under the ENID) to six months. The Committee further notes that, according to section 185, as amended in 2023, additional services and industries listed in the provision (the Government, statutory authorities, local, city and town authorities, public enterprises and workers in managerial positions) may be designated as essential after the date of commencement of the amending legislation. The Committee observes that, other than public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, the services listed would not appear to fall within the definition of essential services in the strict sense of the term. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the manner in which the services cited in section 185 may be declared as essential services and whether any services have been considered as such. The Committee trusts that the above amendment of the ERA and any further amendments within the ongoing labour law review will contribute to ensuring that the exercise of the right to strike can only be restricted in essential services in the strict sense of the term.

For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take measures to review numerous provisions of the ERA which raise issues of compatibility with the Convention: obligation of union officials to be employees of the relevant industry, trade or occupation for a period of not less than three months (section 127(a)); prohibition of non-citizens to be trade union officers (section 127(d)); interference in union by-laws (section 184); excessive power of the Registrar to request detailed and certified accounts from the treasurer at any time (section 128(3)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (sections 175(3)(b) and 180); compulsory arbitration (sections 169, 170, 181(c) and new section 191BS (formerly 191(1)(c)); penalty in the form of a fine in case of staging an unlawful but peaceful strike (sections 250 and 256(a)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (section 191BN); penalty of imprisonment in case of staging a (unlawful or possibly even lawful) peaceful strike in services qualified as essential (sections 191BQ(1), 256(a), 179 and 191BM); excessively wide discretionary powers of the Minister with respect to the appointment and removal of members of the Arbitration Court and appointment of mediators, calling into question the impartiality of the dispute settlement bodies (sections 191D, 191E, 191G and 191Y); and compulsory arbitration in services qualified as essential (sections 191Q, 191R, 191S, 191T and 191AA). Welcoming the Government's indication, both to this Committee and to the DCM, that all of these issues have been considered in the labour law review, the Committee expects all the pending issues to be adequately addressed, in line with its comments, so as to ensure full compatibility of the law with the Convention.

Public Order (Amendment) Decree (POAD). In view of the concerns reported by trade unions that section 8 of the POAD was being used to interfere in, prevent and frustrate trade union meetings and assemblies, the Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 8 of the POAD into line with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government informs about correspondence between the Office of the Prime Minister, in charge of the POAD, and the Ministry of Employment, Productivity & Workplace Relations to address the issues that impede on the right of assembly. It adds that, recently, a number of industrial actions were undertaken by various unions without Government interference and workers were able to meet freely to organize unions and discuss employment issues. While further noting that similar assurances were provided to the DCM, indicating that the POAD has already been repealed in practice while awaiting formal amendment, the Committee notes that a concern was brought to the attention of the DCM that unionists often face challenges when applying for permits to hold public demonstrations. The FTUC further indicates that it expects consequential changes to the POAD as part of the review. The Committee therefore expects that amendments to section 8 of the POAD will be rapidly adopted, in line with the Convention, and will contribute to ensuring that the right to assembly may be freely exercised, both in law and in practice.

Political Parties Decree. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 14 of the 2013 Political Parties Decree and sections 113(2) and 115(1) of the Electoral Decree, in consultation with the representative national workers' and employers' organizations, in view of the concerns raised about the restrictive effect of the provisions on legitimate trade union activities (a strict ban on any political membership, campaign or activity, including expressing support or opposition to a political party). The Committee notes the Government's indication that it acknowledges the need to amend various sections of the Decree to remove restrictions on trade union representatives from participating in political activities, that the Fiji Law Reform Commission is currently reviewing the Decree and that consultations will take place with various stakeholders to this effect. The Committee also notes from the DCM report that some constitutional issues were raised in respect of the amendment of the law and that a pending case before the Supreme Court may shed some clarity on this issue. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in the review of the Political Parties Decree and trusts that, despite the challenges, the law will be amended to ensure that it does not impede the exercise of legitimate trade union activities.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by administrative authority. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the suspension and cancellation of several trade unions for failing to submit their annual audited reports, as well as the concerns of the International Trade Union Confederation that such measures represent a clear attempt at quashing independent trade unions. While having taken note of the steps taken by the Registrar before suspending or cancelling union registration, it requested the Government to consider, in consultation with the most representative organizations, any measures that would be appropriate to ensure that the procedures are, both in law and in practice, in full accordance with the guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Registrar ensures that unions do not manipulate their members or abuse their funds and that any suspension or cancellation of union registration is done in line with the ERA, following due process to ensure rectification and avoid suspension or cancellation. The FTUC also indicates that the Registrar does not intervene in union affairs. Taking note of the above and observing that no further concerns were raised in this regard, the Committee trusts that, in the current atmosphere of genuine social dialogue noted by the DCM, suspension or cancellation of trade union registration will not be used as a means to oppress trade unions.

(ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that a direct contacts mission (DCM) took place in the country in April and May 2024 and refers in this regard to its comment made under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee refers to the conclusions and recommendations of the DCM where they concern the application of this Convention. The Committee notes the ongoing review of the Employment Relations Act (ERA) with the technical assistance of the Office.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, in relation to the long-standing dispute in relation to the Vatukoula Mining Company (concerning the refusal to recognize a union and the dismissal of striking workers over 30 years ago), the Committee expressed its expectation that the dispute would be finally and equitably resolved and requested the Government to supply information in this regard. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that, in June 2024, the Government and the Fiji Mine Workers Union reached a settlement agreement involving payout to the concerned workers, thus bringing this long-standing dispute to an end. The Government informs that 357 workers were identified for settlement, both alive and deceased, some working abroad, out of whom 152 have already received payment.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously considered that the abrogation by the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree, 2011 (ENID) of collective agreements in force was contrary to Article 4 of the Convention and noted that this issue was not addressed by the 2015 and 2016 amendments to the ERA. It therefore requested the Government to continue to take concrete measures to facilitate negotiations and promote collective bargaining between workers and employers or their organizations in the public sector so as to create an enabling environment for collective agreements to be concluded in replacement of those abrogated by the ENID. The Committee observes that the Government does not provide any information on these points and notes from the DCM report that three collective agreements had been pending endorsement at the Arbitration Court for over a year. The Committee also notes, however, from the DCM report that there is currently an atmosphere of genuine dialogue in the country and trusts that the Government will build on the positive engagement of the social partners to create an enabling environment for the promotion of collective bargaining, including for negotiations to replace the collective agreements abrogated by the ENID. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any additional measures undertaken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its expectation that sections 191Q(3), 191(R), 191(S) and 191AA(b) and (c) of the ERA, which allow for compulsory conciliation or arbitration, would be reviewed within the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the reconstituted tripartite ERAB started the review of the ERA matrix in February 2023, that numerous tripartite consultations were held between April 2023 and November 2024, that amendments to the law were drafted with the technical assistance of the Office and will be available for national consultation to obtain the views of the population before being submitted to the Cabinet and the Parliament. The Committee trusts that the revision of the ERA will be concluded without delay and that the above provisions will be amended to ensure compatibility with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Gabon

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In its previous comments, further to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) relating to restrictions on the right to strike in the public sector on the repeatedly invoked grounds of ensuring public safety, the Committee asked the Government to provide detailed information on the number of strikes called in the public sector, the sectors concerned and the number of strikes prohibited on the grounds of a possible disruption of the public order.

Moreover, further to the observations received from Education International (EI) denouncing the adoption of various regulations which are making the exercise of trade union activities in the education sector increasingly difficult, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken in that sector to ensure that trade unions have access to educational establishments so that they can perform their representative functions and defend their members' interests.

The Committee notes that according to the Government, only 12.34 per cent of school establishments across the entire national territory were affected during the unlimited general strike called in September 2021 by the National Congress of Education Sector Unions (CONASYSED) and the National Education Union (SENA). However, the Government adds that it is not able to provide the information requested by the Committee, since the collection and centralization of data is ongoing.

The Committee regrets the Government's inability to provide the requested information, and reiterates its request with the hope that the Government will shortly be able to provide said information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Gambia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, which refer to matters under examination by the Committee.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the 2017 ITUC observations alleging the arbitrary arrests of several leaders of the Gambian National Transport Control Association (GNTCA); the death, while in detention, of Mr Sheriff Diba, one of the arrested leaders; and the imposition of a ban on the activities of the GNTCA. The Committee had requested the Government to ensure that the GNTCA was informed about the necessary procedures to obtain a review of its case, which had been discontinued before the High Court of The Gambia, and expressed its firm hope that the death of Mr Diba and the alleged arbitrary arrests would be duly investigated without delay by the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparation Commission (TRRC), an independent institution mandated to investigate human rights violations committed by the former regime. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in 2020, a task force led by the Office of the Inspector General of the Police, which included representatives of the Ministry of Justice, the National Intelligence Agency and the Gambia Armed Forces, as well as former members of the GNTCA, convened several meetings on the above-mentioned issues. The Committee further notes that the GNTCA was advised to constitute a trade union instead of an association, which led to the formation of the General Transport Union, and was also advised to approach the Victim Centres of the National Human Rights Commission. In addition, the Committee also notes the Government's indication that due to the time constraints and the volume of alleged human rights violations that the TRRC was tasked to examine, the TRRC did not investigate the death of Mr Diba, and that all pending human rights violations will be investigated and prosecuted by a Special Prosecutor's Office that will be established within the Ministry of Justice. The Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that the death of Mr Diba and the alleged arbitrary arrests of the leaders of the GNTCA are promptly investigated by the Special Prosecutor's Office. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. The Committee had previously noted that sections 3(2)(a), (c) and (d) of the Labour Act of 2007 exclude civil servants, prison officers and domestic workers, respectively, from its scope, and recalled the need to ensure that these three groups enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's indication that these categories of workers are not excluded from the scope of the Trade Union Bill and will therefore be allowed to form and join trade unions after its coming into force. The Committee observes that the right to join and participate in the forming of trade unions is provided to every employee under section 4(1) of the Trade Union Bill. Further observing that section 2 of the Trade Union Bill defines "employee" as "a person employed for wages or a salary", which does not encompass self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, the Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention applies not only to employees but more broadly to all workers without any distinction whatsoever. The Committee also notes the ITUC indication that no progress has been made with respect to the Trade Union Bill since the Gambian Trade Union Bureau submitted its comments and recommendations on the Bill in 2017. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to review the Trade Union Bill so as to ensure that once adopted, all workers, including civil servants, prison officers, domestic workers, as well as self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Minimum membership requirement. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to lower the minimum membership requirement for the registration of a trade union currently set by section 96(4)(a) the Labour Act at 50 workers. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the issue of registration of trade unions will now be dealt with under the Trade Union Bill and that the minimum membership requirement will be set at seven members under section 8(2) of its draft Trade Union Regulations. The Government indicates that the Labour Bill no longer includes provisions regulating this issue. The Committee expects that the Labour Bill, the Trade Union Bill and the draft Trade Union Regulations will be adopted without further delay so as to ensure that the minimum membership requirement for the registration of trade unions is reduced to a level which does not hinder the establishment of organizations.

The Committee hopes that the Labour Bill, the Trade Union Bill and the draft Trade Union Regulations will be reviewed and finalized as soon as possible in consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the Office, requested by the Government, to ensure that full effect is given to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard and to transmit copies of the laws and regulations once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 referring to matters under examination by the Committee.

The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that the Labour Bill and the Trade Union Bill are currently being reviewed and provides copies of the two bills.

Scope of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Trade Union Bill and expressed the firm expectation that the rights afforded by the Convention would be ensured for prison officers, domestic workers and civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, whom section 3(2) of the Labour Act excludes from its scope. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that these categories of workers are not excluded from the scope of the Trade Union Bill, as they are not enumerated among the persons excluded by section 3 of the Bill.

The Committee observes however that section 2 of the Bill defines "trade union" as "an organized group of employees", and "employee" as "a person employed for wages or a salary", a definition that may not encompass self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not apply only to employees but more broadly to all workers, and that only the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee also notes that, according to the observations submitted by the ITUC, there has been no progress regarding the adoption of the Trade Union Bill since the Gambian Trade Union Bureau submitted its comments and recommendations on the Bill in 2017. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the Trade Union Bill is revised and adopted shortly, with a view to guaranteeing that all workers, including prison officers, domestic workers, civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, as well as self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Article 4. Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, recalling that the organization of a ballot for determining representativeness should be carried out by the authorities or an independent party upon a request presented by a union, the Committee requested the Government to bring section 131 of the Labour Act, which provides that an employer may organize a secret ballot to establish a sole bargaining agent, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government states that section 169 of the Labour Bill also allows the employer to organize such a secret ballot. The Committee requests the Government to amend the Labour Bill so as to ensure that the determination of the representative status of trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining is conducted in accordance with a procedure that offers every guarantee of impartiality, by an independent body that enjoys the confidence of the parties.

Threshold of representativity. In its previous comment, the Committee recalled that if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold to be recognized as a sole bargaining agent, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members, and requested the Government to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that in the Trade Union Bill, a trade union will be recognized for purposes of collective bargaining if it represents a simple majority of the unionizable employees (section 34). Observing that the Bill does not contain any provisions regulating cases in which no union reaches that threshold, the Committee recalls once again that systems where a representative union that fails to secure the absolute majority may be denied the possibility of bargaining, may raise problems of compatibility with the Convention. Noting additionally that the Government only informs of two concluded collective agreements, the Committee considers that the apparently very small number of existing collective agreement in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining which are contained in the current legislation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the meaning of the term "simple majority" in section 34 of the Trade Union Bill, and to amend the legislation in order to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, the existing unions are given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had previously noted the information provided by the Government on two company-level collective agreements concluded in the private sector in 2014 and 2017. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to referring again to these two agreements and stating that it will take steps to sensitize trade unions to maximise the use and benefits of collective bargaining. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the concrete measures taken to promote collective bargaining in all sectors covered by the Convention, as well as on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the actions taken to promote collective bargaining in the different sectors of the economy.

Request for technical assistance. The Committee notes the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office to ensure that the Labour Bill and the Trade Union Bill include the ILO's recommendations and are aligned with the Convention. The Committee trusts that the technical assistance requested by the Government will be provided as soon as possible with a view to ensuring that, after a consultation with the social partners, the above-mentioned bills will give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any evolution in this regard, as well as copies of the laws once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Georgia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Georgian Trade Union Confederation (GTUC) received on 24 September 2024.

Articles 3 and 5 of the Convention. The right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration, to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers, and to receive financial assistance therefrom. The Law on Transparency of Foreign Influence (the Law). The Committee notes the adoption of the Law on 28 May 2024. The Committee observes that by virtue of its sections 2(1)(a) and 4(1), a non-entrepreneurial (non-commercial) legal person (except for those that are expressly excluded) must apply to the National Public Registry Agency for registration as an "organization pursuing the interests of a foreign power" if the source of more than 20 per cent of its total income during a calendar year is a foreign power. The definition of the latter comprises "an organisational entity (including a foundation, an association, a corporation or a union) or other form of association of persons, which has been established under the law of a foreign state and/or international law" (section 3). The Committee thus observes that an organization of employers or a trade union could be obliged to register as an organization pursuing the interests of a foreign power if it is affiliated with an international employers' or workers' organization and receives financial assistance equivalent to over 20 per cent of its income therefrom. The Committee notes that the Law imposes additional obligations on workers' and employers' organizations recognized as organizations pursuing the interests of a foreign power, namely: (i) the obligation to submit an annual financial declaration (section 6(1)); and (ii) the obligation to provide immediately the necessary information to the person authorized by the Ministry of Justice within the framework of examination and inquiry of the registration statement or financial declarations, as well as within the framework of the monitoring process (sections 6(1) and 8(3) and (4)). The Committee further notes that pursuant to section 8 of the Law, all organizations are subject to monitoring with a view to identifying whether they pursue the interests of a foreign power and that the grounds for initiating monitoring are: (i) decision of a person authorized by the Ministry of Justice; or (ii) a written application submitted to the Ministry of Justice, which contains appropriate information related to a specific organization pursuing the interests of a foreign power. The Committee observes that this provision appears to be unlimited in scope as it provides for no precise criteria as to what entities or individuals may submit statements to trigger monitoring, nor does it constrain the discretion of the Government agents. The Committee also notes the fines provided for in section 9 in case of non-compliance with the Law, namely: (i) 25,000 Georgian lari (about US$9,200) for failure to register or to submit a financial declaration; (ii) 10,000 lari for failure to fill in the registration statement or to remedy a shortcoming, as well as 20,000 lari in case of continuation of such failure; and (iii) 5,000 lari for failure to provide the information requested by the person authorized by the Ministry.

While noting that section 1(2) states that the Law shall not restrict the activities of an entity registered as an organization pursuing the interests of a foreign power, the Committee considers that it is difficult to reconcile the additional bureaucratic burdens imposed on trade unions or employers' organizations receiving financial assistance from abroad (including from an international trade union or employers' organization to which they are affiliated), as well as various hefty penalties that can be imposed on organizations, with the right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration, to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that the control exercised by the public authorities over finances of workers' and employer's organizations should not normally exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports and that the discretionary right of the authorities to conduct an investigation and request information at any time entails a danger of interference in the internal administration of such organizations. The Committee recalls that legislation which seriously hampers activities of a trade union or an employers' organization on the grounds that they accept financial assistance from an international organization of workers or employers to which they are affiliated infringes the principles concerning the right to affiliate with international organizations set out in Article 5 of the Convention.

The Committee understands that the Law has been adopted without prior consultations with the social partners and notes, in this respect, the Urgent Opinion of the Venice Commission of the Council of Europe, which expressed its deep concern at the fact that this Law was adopted in a rushed way with no meaningful consultation process. The Committee recalls that the introduction of any draft legislation affecting the rights and interests of workers and employers should be preceded by free and frank consultations with their most representative organizations. The Committee also observes that the Venice Commission considered that by repeatedly referring to organizations as "pursuing the interest of a foreign power", the Law had an effect of stigmatizing and undermining an organization receiving funds from abroad. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to amend the legislation, in consultation with the social partners, so as to explicitly exclude the organizations of employers and trade unions from its scope of application. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress in response to its concern, including all measures taken in this respect.

(ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the observations of the Georgian Trade Unions Confederation (GTUC) received on 24 September 2024, which refer to matters raised by the Committee below.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the concrete application of the provisions amended in 2019 and 2020 in the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination, the Law on the Public Defender as well as the Labour Code, including on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination at the time of hiring and non-renewal of employment contracts, the fines imposed and their amounts. The Committee notes the Government's indications regarding the number of alleged anti-union discrimination cases brought, respectively, to the district courts (2 cases), to the Office of the Public Defender (9 cases) and to the Labour Inspection Service (3 complaints). The Committee notes that one of these cases was related to recruitment while none of them were related to non-renewal of employment contracts. The Committee further notes that a fine of 3,000 Georgian lari (about US$1,100) was imposed on a company by the Labour Inspection Service following a dismissal related to trade union activities. The Committee finally notes that the Public Defender may only issue recommendations and general proposals, which are not mandatory, and does not have the authority to apply sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to keep providing information on the practical application of the aforementioned provisions, including on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination at the time of hiring and non-renewal of employment contracts, the fines imposed and their amounts as well as any other compensation implemented such as reinstatement.

Article 2. Interference by employers and their organizations in internal trade union affairs. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information concerning any cases of alleged interference in trade union activities from employers and their organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) according to the instructions of the Supreme Court of Georgia, no data is recorded in the statistical reporting forms for civil cases registration regarding article 54 of the Labour Code, which prohibits interference in the activities of employers' and employees' associations; and (ii) no cases were filed or considered by the district courts under article 166 of the Criminal Code, which provides liability for obstructing the establishment of a political, public or religious association or its activities. The Committee, emphasizing the importance of receiving information on judicial practice in order to assess the effective application of the Convention, requests the Government to keep providing information on any cases brought before the courts under article 166 of the Criminal Code and to take the necessary measures to provide the requested statistics regarding article 54 of the Labour Code.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any progress made to establish a more functional and effective mechanism for resolution of collective labour disputes. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the adoption of Decree N301, which approved the Rule for Collective Dispute Review and Resolution through Conciliation, aimed at fulfilling the requirements of sections 61(6) and 63 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes however that pursuant to section 4(14) of the Rule, in accordance with section 63(5) of the Labour Code, the Minister has the right to terminate conciliatory proceedings at any stage, without regard to the opinion of the parties of the dispute. The Committee, emphasizing that the GTUC raises several concerns on this matter, recalls that it had previously requested the Government to ensure that the Labour Code promoted the negotiated resolution of collective labour disputes. The Committee notes the Government's indications that no mediation proceedings have been terminated by the Minister since 2013, and that the latter's decision to terminate may only be made on the basis of a report submitted by the mediator. Noting that section 7(4)(f) of the Rule provides that the report must be submitted at the Minister's request, the Committee requests the Government to provide clarifications concerning the respective attributions of the mediator and the Minister in the course of the procedure for unilaterally terminating the conciliation proceedings.

Moreover, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that: (i) 42 conciliation procedures took place during the reporting period, 14 of which ended with an agreement between the parties; (ii) a mediator was appointed for 2 collective disputes, which both resulted in an agreement; and (iii) 57 collective agreements are in force in the country, covering 109,727 workers in total. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it has not been approached concerning the violations of collective bargaining rights at a number of enterprises alleged by the GTUC in 2021. Noting that the GTUC makes similar allegations in its observations in 2024, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Organizations pursuing the interests of a foreign power. The Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), with respect to the adoption of the Law on the Transparency of Foreign Influence and the concerns expressed in this regard. In the context of the present Convention, the Committee expresses its concern about the stigmatization that could occur against professional organizations described as pursuing the interests of a foreign power (as pointed out by the Venice Commission of the Council of Europe in its Urgent Opinion on the Law of Georgia on Transparency of Foreign Influence, issued on 21 May 2024) and about the risks of anti-union discrimination against their members and the possible obstacles to their participation in collective bargaining mechanisms that may arise as a result. In accordance with its observation under Convention No. 87, the Committee urges the Government to amend the legislation as to explicitly exclude the organizations of employers and trade unions from its scope of application. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this respect.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting for many years the adoption of measures to recognize the right to strike of civil servants who are not exercising authority in the name of the State. In this respect, the Committee noted the 2018 decision of the Federal Constitutional Court (Case No. 2 BvR 1738/12), dismissing the complaints of teachers with civil servant status against disciplinary measures for having participated in strikes during working hours, and considering that these measures were not in violation of the freedom of association as guaranteed in article 9(3) of the Constitution. It noted that the Constitutional Court based its decisions on the interpretation of article 33(5) of the Constitution as justifying a prohibition of the right to strike for civil servants, emphasizing the traditional principles and specificities of the career civil service system (such as the payment of a salary commensurate with the civil service position, the duty of loyalty and lifetime employment). The Committee noted with regret that the Constitutional Court's decision was not in keeping with the Convention, as it amounted to a general ban on the right to strike of civil servants based on their status, irrespective of their duties and responsibilities, and in particular a ban on the right of civil servants who are not exercising authority in the name of the State (such as teachers) to have recourse to strike action. The Committee also noted that proceedings on this matter had been brought before the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR).

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to its request regarding the outcome of these proceedings, that the ECtHR found that the prohibition of strikes by teachers with civil servant status is consistent with the European Convention on Human Rights, and that the disciplinary measures do not undermine freedom of association as provided for in article 11 of that Convention (see Humpert and others v. Germany, judgment of 14 December 2023 – 59433/18, 59477/18, 59481/18, 59494/18). The Government indicates that, in the ECtHR's opinion, while the right to strike is an important instrument, it is not the only means by which trade unions and their members can protect their respective professional interests, and that it is therefore not absolute. The Government further states that the ECtHR found that the lack of a right to strike is compensated by, among other things: the comprehensive participatory rights of trade unions and civil servants (such as the statutory right of the trade union umbrella organizations to participate in the process of drafting legal provisions for the civil service, and the participation rights of civil servants through staff councils), and the rights linked to the special status of civil servants, including the constitutional and judicially verifiable right to adequate maintenance. The Government also highlights that the ECtHR found that the interference with freedom of association through the prohibition of strikes was justified, as the Court considered effective public administration (in this specific case, the rights of others to education) to be a legitimate aim. In addition, according to the Government, in assessing the margin of appreciation afforded to national authorities under the European Convention on Human Rights concerning restrictions on the freedom of trade unions, the ECtHR emphasized the duality of employment status of teachers, and the possibility for teachers in Germany to practice the profession as employees with the right to strike rather than as civil servants.

The Committee takes due note of the ECtHR judgment, in which the latter concluded that "the measures taken against the applicants did not exceed the margin of appreciation afforded to the respondent State in the circumstances of the present case and were shown to be proportionate to the important legitimate aims pursued", and that accordingly, "there has been no violation of Article 11 of the [European] Convention [on Human Rights]" (paragraph 147 of the judgment). The Court recalled nevertheless "that the right to strike constitute[d] an important instrument for a trade union to protect the occupational interests of its members and in turn for the members of a trade union to defend their interests" (paragraph 128). The Court also noted the existence of a strong trend among the monitoring bodies set up under the specialized international instruments, towards considering that civil servants, including teachers with that status, should not per se be prohibited from strike action, and that this trend was also reflected in the practice of Contracting States (paragraphs 125 and 126). The Court acknowledged that "[t]he competent monitoring bodies set up under the specialised international instruments – notably the CEACR … as supervisory bodies for the ILO standards. … – have repeatedly criticised the status-based prohibition of strikes by civil servants in Germany, including, in particular, with respect to teachers with that status" (paragraph 126). The Committee notes that the Court reiterated that "[w]ithout calling into question the analysis carried out by those bodies in their assessment of the respondent State's compliance with the international instruments which they were set up to monitor … its task [was] to determine whether the relevant domestic law in its application to the applicants was proportionate as required by Article 11 § 2 of the [European] Convention [on Human Rights], its jurisdiction being limited to the Convention" (paragraph 126).

The ECtHR's judgment concerns the interpretation of the European Convention on Human Rights. Just as the ECtHR's "jurisdiction is limited to the [European Convention on Human Rights], [with] no competence to assess a respondent State's compliance with the relevant standards of the ILO" (paragraph 101 of the judgment), the Committee has no competence to pronounce itself on the Courts' interpretation of the European Convention on Human Rights or Germany's compliance therewith. Rather, the mandate of the Committee consists in undertaking an impartial and technical analysis of how the Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States; in doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions (see the Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part A), 112th Session, Geneva, 2024, General Report, paragraph 30), and, in the present case, of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). In this respect, the Committee recalls that it has always considered that the right to strike is one of the essential means available to workers and their organizations for the promotion and protection of their economic and social interests. While it has recognized that the right to strike may be restricted or even prohibited in the public service, the Committee has established that such a limitation may be applied only in the case of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. In the Committee's view, public sector teachers are not included in this category and should therefore benefit from the right to strike without being liable to sanctions, even though, under certain circumstances, the maintenance of a minimum service may be envisaged in this sector (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 129 and 130). The Committee thus observes that the situation in Germany is still not in line with the Convention in this regard. Regretting that it has not yet been possible to find a solution to this long-standing matter, the Committee encourages the Government to continue engaging in a comprehensive national dialogue with representative organizations in the public service with a view to finding possible ways of aligning the legislation with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Right to collective bargaining with respect to conditions of employment of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting, for a number of years, the adoption of measures to ensure that civil servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State, enjoy the right to collective bargaining. In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's indications, in relation to the 2018 decision of the Federal Constitutional Court (Case No. 2 BvR 1738/12), that the prohibition of the right of all civil servants, irrespective of their duties and responsibilities, follows from article 33(5) of the Constitution, which enshrines the traditional principle of the career civil servants system (such as the payment of a salary commensurate with the civil service position, the duty of loyalty, and life time employment), and that this article provides for a constitutional restriction to freedom of association as guaranteed in article 9(3) of the Constitution. The Committee therefore regretted that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State continued to be deprived of the right to bargain collectively under the Convention. It also noted that proceedings in relation to the ban on the right to strike of civil servants had been brought before the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) and observed that any judgment rendered in this respect might also have repercussions on the right of civil servants to bargain collectively.

The Committee notes the Government's indications, in response to its request regarding the outcome of the proceedings of the ECtHR, summarizing and highlighting certain aspects of the judgment (see Humpert and others v. Germany, judgment of 14 December 2023 – 59433/18, 59477/18, 59481/18, 59494/18), which the Committee notes in its comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). While the Committee recalls that the claim before the ECtHR did not concern the ban on collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, and that the Court did therefore not assess this question, it notes that the judgment in the context of its assessment, describes the participatory rights of civil servants and their unions. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Court recalls that working conditions of civil servants in Germany are regulated by legislation and not by collective agreements (see paragraph 130), and that their trade union umbrella organizations have the statutory right to participate in the process of drafting such legal provisions for the civil service (including as regards subject matters such as wages and paternal leave), and the participation rights of civil servants through staff councils, which the Court describes as participatory rights enabling the civil service unions to persuade the employer to hear what they have to say on behalf of their members (see paragraphs 130 to 132). In this context, the Committee recalls its view that the participatory rights as described in the judgment do not fully assure appropriate machinery for collective bargaining to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls in this regard that it has been highlighting for many years that, pursuant to Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, all public service workers, other than those engaged in the administration of the State, should enjoy collective bargaining rights. Conscious of the special characteristics of the public sector, the Committee recalls that collective bargaining mechanisms may be adjusted in a way so as to take into account the particularities of the status of civil servants, while at the same time guaranteeing their right to bargain collectively. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue engaging in a comprehensive national dialogue with representative organizations in the public service with a view to exploring innovative solutions and possible ways in which the current system could be developed so as to effectively recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State, including for instance, as previously indicated by the Confederation of German Employers' Associations, by differentiating between areas of genuinely sovereign domains and areas where the unilateral regulatory power of the employer could be restricted to extend the participation of representative organizations in the public service. The Committee requests the Government to provide any relevant information in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom. The Committee recalls that, for many years, it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the following provisions of the 2003 Labour Act and the 2007 Labour Regulations:

- section 79(2), which excludes persons performing managerial and decision-making functions from the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing;
- section 1, which excludes prison staff from the scope of application of the Labour Act and therefore from the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing;
- section 80(1), which provides that two or more workers may establish or join a trade union only if they are in the same "undertaking", defined in section 175 of the Labour Act as "the business of any employer";
- section 80(2), which provides that employers must employ not less than 15 workers to establish or join an employers' organization;
- section 81, which does not explicitly authorize trade unions to form or join confederations;
- sections 154–160, which do not set any time limit with regard to mediation;
- section 160(2), under which collective disputes are referred to compulsory arbitration if they are not resolved within seven days; and
- section 20 of the 2007 Regulations which sets out too broad a list of essential services.

The Committee observes that a new Labour Act is being drafted in consultation with the social partners and notes in this respect, the Government's indication that the Committee's comments have been drawn to the attention of those involved in the process. The Committee expects that all of its comments outlined above will be duly taken into account so as to ensure that the new Labour Act is in conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide a copy thereof once adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made as regards the revision of the Labour Regulations and reminds the Government of the possibility to seek technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

Legislative review. The Committee observes that a new Labour Act is being drafted in consultation with the social partners and notes in this respect the Government's indication that the Committee's comments have been drawn to the attention of those involved in the process.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment and noting that only one case of anti-union discrimination had been reported, the Committee emphasized that the absence of complaints on anti-union discrimination may be due to reasons other than an absence of acts of anti-union discrimination. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the competent authorities fully take into account the issue of anti-union discrimination in their prevention and control activities, and that the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the requested measures above, and that the Government indicates that there are no records of anti-discrimination acts in the country. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the prevention and control activities by the competent authorities in the area of anti-union discrimination, and any awareness-raising activities carried out to inform workers about their rights in this respect. It requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities and the decisions taken in this respect.

Article 4. Collective bargaining certification. In its previous comments, noting an absence of any relevant provision in the 2003 Labour Act and the 2007 Labour Regulations, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary legislative or regulatory measures to determine the procedure to be followed in the event that no consensus is reached between the parties concerning the mode of verification and venue of elections for the determination of the most representative union for the purpose of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indications that relevant provisions were introduced in the draft Labour Act. Recalling that the criteria to be applied to determine the representative status of organizations for the purpose of bargaining must be objective, pre-established and precise so as to avoid any opportunity for partiality or abuse, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the procedure concerning the mode of verification and venue of elections for the determination of the most representative union for the purpose of collective bargaining fully complies with the principles of the Convention.

Article 5. Prison staff. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that prison staff enjoyed the right to organize and bargain collectively whether through an amendment to the Labour Act or other legislative means.

The Committee notes the Government's observation that while this issue was considered in the review of the Labour Act, doubts were raised during tripartite consultations, as prison officers may discharge weapons in the course of their duties, and as the Security and Intelligence Act, 2020 (Act 1030) prevents prison officers from forming a union. The Government also indicates that the question of whether prison officers, immigration officers and non-security officers within the security environment can form or join a union, has been brought before the Supreme Court. The Committee has consistently emphasized that prison staff should enjoy the right to organize and collective bargaining. The Committee would like to recall in this respect that even where employees in the private or the public sector may carry a weapon in the course of their duties, but are not members of the police or the armed forces, they cannot automatically be excluded from the scope of the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 170). The Committee requests the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners and other concerned stakeholders, the necessary measures to ensure that prison officers enjoy the protection under the Convention in the new Labour Act to be adopted.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, which does not include the requested information on the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country and to provide further details in this respect, including as regards the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

The Committee expects that its comments will be duly taken into account so as to ensure that the new Labour Act is in conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide a copy thereof once adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made as regards the revision of the Labour Regulations and reminds the Government of the possibility to seek technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

Grenada

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Grenada Trade Union Council (GTUC), transmitted with the Government's report, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below.

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum membership requirements for employers' and workers' organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to reduce the number of members (ten) required for the registration of an employers' organization (sections 5(2) and 9(1)(e) of the Labour Relations Act of 1999). The Committee recalled that the minimum requirement of ten employers to form an employers' organization was excessive and capable of hindering the creation of employers' organizations, particularly given the country's relatively small size. As to workers organizations, the Committee observed that sections 5(1) and 9(1)(e) of the Labour Relations Act provide for a minimum membership of 25 members for the registration of a trade union. The Committee noted the Government's indication that these provisions were being reviewed and urged the Government to provide information as to the result of the legislative revision process in this respect. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that no revisions have been made to date in this regard and that section 5 of the Act is not currently under review. The Committee notes the concern expressed by the GTUC regarding the minimum membership requirement and its view that reducing a minimum membership requirement would give full effect to the Convention. Recalling the importance of ensuring that the minimum membership number for employers' and workers' organizations be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered, the Committee urges the Government to review the above-mentioned provisions of the Labour Relations Act in consultation with the social partners and to indicate all steps taken to that end.

Prison officers. The Committee noted in its previous comments the Government's indication that prison officers were prevented from joining organizations of their own choosing and that an organization represents the prison officers and negotiates on their behalf. The Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information in this regard, including the applicable legal provisions guaranteeing that prison officers benefit from the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention and the results of any negotiations by the identified organization on behalf of prison officers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Prison Officers' Welfare Association, which is established in section 42(1) of the Prisons Act 1980, is the representative of all ranks of officers at His Majesty's Prison; (ii) the Association has successfully negotiated on behalf of its representatives, resulting in salary increases and fringe benefits; (iii) sections 2(1) and (3) of the Prison Officers' Welfare Association Rules (SRO 30 of 1975) give directions on the conditions governing the constitutions of the Prison Officers' Welfare Association and the objects which they may legally pursue; (iv) the legal provisions which ensure that the Association shall not be liable to be dissolved or suspended by administrative authority can be found in section 42(2) of the Prisons Act, which states that the Association shall be entirely independent of and unassociated with anybody outside the Prison Department; and (v) Rule 11 of the Prison Officers' Welfare Association Rules facilitates the attending of meetings of the Association by members of the Prison Service. The Committee recalls that the right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing, as set out in Article 2 of the Convention, implies that trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases and that trade union unity imposed directly, as in the Prisons Act, is contrary to the Convention. The Committee expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the Prisons Act so as to bring it into conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guatemala

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF) received on 1 September 2024, as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 17 September 2024, referring to matters examined in the present comment.

Complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee notes that, at its 351st and 352nd Sessions, the Governing Body received a complaint concerning non-observance by Guatemala of this Convention and of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), presented under article 26 of the ILO Constitution by various worker delegates to the International Labour Conference in June 2023. After recognizing at its 351st Session the commitment of the new Government to overcome the legislative and practical difficulties in the application of Conventions Nos 87 and 98, the Governing Body at its 352nd Session deferred to its 353rd Session (March 2025) the decision to consider further action in respect of the article 26 complaint (document GB.352/INS/13(Rev.1)).

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee regrets to note that it has been examining since 2005 allegations of serious acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, including numerous murders, and the situation of impunity. In this regard, the Committee notes the examination by the Committee on Freedom of Association at its session in June 2024 of Case No. 2609 in relation to numerous murders and other acts of violence against members of the trade union movement.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the status of the investigations and court proceedings relating to the murders of 100 members of the trade union movement between 2004 and 2024, according to which, up to now: (i) in 27 cases there have been sentences handed down (21 convictions, 5 acquittals and 1 security and corrective measure); (ii) the criminal prosecutions in 6 cases were terminated due to the deaths of the persons accused; (iii) in 7 cases, arrest warrants have been issued and are still to be served; (iv) in 1 case, the hearings have begun, one is at an intermediary stage and 1 is at the stage of the public oral hearings; (v) 7 cases are at the investigation stage; and (vi) 49 cases have been shelved, in accordance with section 327 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, due to the material impossibility of identifying the perpetrators of the murders. With respect to these data, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the number of sentences and other stages of proceedings are on a par with the previous year.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the capacities of the Investigation Unit for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists have been strengthened through a budget increase from US$543,960 in 2021 to US$1.7 million in 2024. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the time needed to complete investigations and obtain convictions has been shortened from an average of three years to one year and nine months.

The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government on the security measures adopted for members of the trade union movement who are at risk: (i) between January and

July 2024, 71 protection measures were granted; (ii) the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) has set dates in 2024 to meet with the judiciary and the Ministry of the Interior; and (iii) the trade union technical working group of the Ministry of the Interior has been reactivated with the most representative trade union leaders and members of the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement of Guatemala, with a meeting held in July 2024 and another scheduled for September 2024.

At the same time, the Committee notes that the ITUC: (i) reports the persistence in law and practice of serious violations of the Convention; (ii) deeply regrets the murder in October 2023 of Doris Lisseth Aldana Calderón, of the Izabal Banana Workers' Union (SITRABI); and (iii) expresses once again its deep concern regarding the anti-union killings and other acts of violence related to the trade union activities of the victims, as well as the climate of widespread impunity in the country. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government reports the murder of Anastacio Tzib Caal, a trade union leader, on 15 June 2024.

The Committee also notes with deep concern that, during discussions held at the 352nd Session of the Governing Body on the complaint presented against the Government of Guatemala under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, the Worker spokesperson denounced the murders of six leaders and members of the trade union movement in 2024.

In light of the above, while taking due note of the action that the Government is continuing to take, the Committee firstly expresses its deep concern at the allegations of the murders of six leaders and members of the trade union movement that have occurred since 1 January 2024. The Committee recalls that the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against the leaders and members of these organizations, and that it is for governments to ensure that this principle is respected. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take, in coordination with all the competent authorities and in close consultation with the trade union movement, the necessary steps to increase the effectiveness of measures to prevent anti-union violence and to protect members of the trade union movement who are at risk, in order to prevent new loss of human lives. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on this subject.

In relation to the investigation and penalizing of the numerous murders of members of the trade union movement since 2004, while welcoming the steady increase in the budget allocated to the Special Investigation Unit for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists, the Committee notes with deep concern that: (i) there have been no further convictions and no significant progress in the proceedings since the previous year; and (ii) the great majority of the many murders of members of the trade union movement that have been reported remain without convictions and only in a very limited number of cases have the instigators of the murders been identified and punished.

The Committee once again emphasizes the importance, in cases involving anti-trade union violence, of investigations achieving specific results with reliable findings concerning the crimes committed, the motives for the crimes and those responsible so that the corresponding sanctions can be applied and action taken to avoid their recurrence in future. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to intensify, as a matter of utmost urgency, all necessary measures to investigate all acts of violence against trade union leaders and members with a view to promptly determining responsibilities and punishing the perpetrators and instigators of such acts, taking the trade union activities of the victims fully into consideration in the investigations. In relation to the specific action required in this regard, the Committee refers to the recommendations made by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 2609 and requests the Government to explore the possibility of receiving, with the support of the Office, the technical assistance of public prosecutors' offices of other ILO Member States. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing all relevant information in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to:

- amend section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires a membership of "50 per cent plus one" of the workers in the sector to establish a sectoral trade union;
- amend sections 220 and 223 of the Labour Code, which establish the requirement to be of Guatemalan origin and to work in the relevant enterprise or economic activity to be eligible for election as a trade union leader;
- amend section 241 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which strikes have to be called by a majority of the workers and not by a majority of those casting votes;
- amend section 4(d), (e) and (g) of Decree No. 71-86, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 35-96 of 27 March 1996, which provides for the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration in non-essential services and establishes other obstacles to the right to strike;
- amend sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code and Decree No. 71-86, which establish labour, civil and criminal penalties in the event of a strike by public officials or workers in certain enterprises;
- ensure that the various categories of public sector workers (hired under item 029 and other items of the budget) enjoy the guarantees afforded by the Convention.

In its previous comment, the Committee noted that, according to the information provided by the Government and the social partners, Bill No. 6162 had still not been adopted. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government on meetings between the CNTRLLS and the Parliamentary Labour Commission on 19 March and 26 June 2024 to further promote the above-mentioned Bill.

The Committee notes with regret, however, that Bill No. 6162 has still not been adopted and reiterates the importance of necessary legislative reforms to give full effect to the application of the Convention. In light of the foregoing, the Committee once again urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee firmly expects to be able to note substantial progress in this regard in the near future and recalls the availability of the Office to provide the necessary technical assistance.

Application of the Convention in practice

Registration of trade unions. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to continue providing data on the registration of trade unions, including the grounds for refusals of registration. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2023: (i) 89 applications for trade union registration were received, 44 of those were registered and 1 was rejected; (ii) in 2024 (as at 26 June) 28 applications for trade union registration were received, and in this same period, 27 trade unions were registered and 7 others were refused; and (iii) the grounds for refusing registration consisted of unmet requirements in the submission of applications, including those established in sections 216, 218, 219, 220, 221 and 222 of the Labour Code on the minimum number of workers to form a trade union.

The Committee also notes the receipt by the Government of software for the registration of trade unions, which is still to be implemented. The Committee also takes due note that, according to document GB.352/INS/13(Rev.1) submitted to the Governing Body at its session of October–November 2024, the new trade union booklet, which explains the requirements and the process for establishing trade unions, was approved on 6 September 2024 following consultation with the social partners.

With respect to the legal challenge to the registration of trade unions by employers before the labour administration, a practice criticized by the workers' organizations, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on: (i) the grounds given for the appeals; (ii) whether the filing of an appeal has the effect of suspending registration; and (iii) whether the employer has access to the identity of the members of the union that has just been registered. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: (i) in 2023, 19 appeals or challenges were brought by employers, as well as by members of other trade unions or the workers themselves, the grounds for the appeals being, inter alia, the fact that certain founding members were workers occupying positions of trust and that certain persons were no longer workers of the enterprise; (ii) the filing of an appeal indeed has the effect of suspending the registration of a trade union; and (iii) the employer has no access to the identity of the members of a union that has just been registered.

The Committee notes these various points. It notes the persistence of a high number of applications for trade union registration that do not seem to be processed in a reasonable time (from 1 January 2023 to 24 June 2024, 117 applications for registration resulted in 71 accepted and 8 rejected, and therefore 38 cases remain undecided). The Committee also notes the latest examination, in March 2024, of Case No. 3042 by the Committee on Freedom of Association, relating to the high number of registration refusals, most of which occurred between 2012 and 2016, and in which regard the Committee on Freedom of Association referred the legislative aspects to this Committee. The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association, after noting the legislative drafts adopted by the Government to streamline the registration process, also noted that substantive legislative and institutional difficulties remain that could significantly restrict the exercise of freedom of association (inability to establish sectoral unions under the requirements of section 215(c) of the Labour Code; obstacles to the registration of organizations affiliating workers employed by the public administration on the basis of civil contracts; impact of workers considered to be occupying positions of trust on the registration process; and access by unregistered trade unions to effective remedies). The Committee lastly notes that the suspensive effect of an administrative appeal filed by the employer against the registration of a trade union may obstruct the exercise of freedom of association. In light of the above, while welcoming the approval of the trade union booklet that was subject to consultation with the social partners, the Committee requests the Government to continue to ensure that the issues surrounding the registration of trade union organizations are regularly monitored and submitted for consultation with the representative national federations, and addressed in a tripartite dialogue in the CNTRLLS. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) resolve the legislative and institutional difficulties identified by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3042; and (ii) remove the suspensive effect of the administrative appeal filed by the employer against trade union registration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and to continue to provide data on the number of registrations requested and granted.

Awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association. The Committee notes that the Government has provided information on the scope of the awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association widely disseminated on social media networks, including publications in Kaqchikel. The Committee welcomes these initiatives and requests the Government to: (i) intensify the dissemination of information regarding the above campaign; and (ii) take measures to ensure that the campaign reaches sectors with the lowest trade union membership rates in the country, such as the agricultural and rural sector, and the maquila sector.

While duly noting the efforts made by the Government, the Committee notes with concern the persistence of serious violations of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government, with the participation of the CNTRLLS and with ILO technical assistance, to intensify its efforts to overcome the legislative and practical difficulties examined in the present comment, and hopes to be able to note substantial progress in the near future.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025].

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF) and of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received respectively on 30 August 2024 and on 17 September 2024, referring to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee also notes that the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), received on 17 September 2024 contain allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination and obstruction of collective bargaining in a garment factory. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Submission of a complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee notes that, at its 351st and 352nd Sessions, the Governing Body examined a complaint concerning non-observance by the Government of Guatemala of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the present Convention, submitted under article 26 of the ILO Constitution by several Workers' delegates to the International Labour Conference in June 2023. After having recognized at its 351st Session, the new Government's commitment to overcome the legislative and practical difficulties in the application of Conventions Nos 87 and 98, the Governing Body at its 352nd Session deferred to it 353rd Session (March 2025) the decision to consider further action in respect of the article 26 complaint (document GB/352/INS/13).

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination. Activities of the labour inspection services. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the number and type of penalties imposed by the General Labour Inspectorate in trade union matters. The Committee notes the Government's indication that from 1 January to 24 August 2023, 30 complaints were filed, containing reports of 15 infringements of trade union rights, with 14 penalties imposed, amounting to 287,598.92 Guatemalan quetzales (approximately US$37,101.00). The Committee takes due note of this information and requests the Government to continue to provide data on the number and type of penalties imposed by the General Labour Inspectorate in trade union matters.

Effective judicial proceedings. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to intensify efforts to ensure compliance with the reinstatement orders of dismissed trade unionists, taking into account the guidance established in the Diagnostic Study prepared by the Office. The Committee also urged the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt the new procedural rules so that all cases of anti-union discrimination are examined by the courts in summary proceedings and that the respective court rulings are implemented as soon as possible. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) on 30 April 2024, the Office presented the "Diagnostic Study on the mechanisms for enforcing reinstatement orders in cases of dismissal of trade unionists in Guatemala" to employer, worker and Government representatives, with the participation of representatives of the Public Prosecutor's Office, the Constitutional Court and the Supreme Court of Justice, in which several recommendations were made, which were taken into account by the Government; (ii) since it was established in 2024, the Collegial Peace Court in Criminal Matters, which hears cases involving non-compliance with labour decisions, has received 380 cases (166 from the public sector, 42 from the municipalities and 124 from the private sector), of which 101 have been resolved, 154 are ongoing and 84 are under investigation; and (iii) in 2021, 2,401 reinstatements were undertaken, 727 of which were successful. The Committee also notes that the Government: (i) adds that reinstatement orders are frequently rejected and subsequently challenged through constitutional actions of amparo and appeal, with the average time being approximately two years for the first and second instance, and about 18 more months for the constitutional action of amparo and the implementation phase; (ii) clarifies that eight cases were reported in 2023 associated with dismissals of members of a trade union in the process of being established or with dismissals of members of a trade union governing board; and (iii) states that Bill No. 5809, proposing a Labour and Social Security Procedural Code gave rise to an unfavourable opinion of the Justice Reform Commission of Congress, and is pending the opinion of the Labour Commission. While welcoming the outcome reached by the Collegial Peace Court in Criminal Matters in penalizing public and private officials who have refused to carry out reinstatement decisions, the Committee notes that, as stated in the Office's above-mentioned Diagnostic Study, the effectiveness of judicial protection against acts of anti-union discrimination requires the adoption of a series of measures to shorten the deadlines for decisions, avoid an abusive multiplication of appeals and effectively enforce judgments. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association has referred to the legislative aspects of Case No. 3062 (see 408th Report, October 2024, Case No. 3062), in which the Committee trusts that, in consultation with the social partners, the necessary procedural rules are adopted to ensure that all cases of alleged anti-union discrimination are examined by the courts expeditiously, and that the relevant court decisions are enforced without delay. The Committee therefore requests the Government to further intensify its current efforts to ensure compliance with reinstatement orders, taking due account of the guidance set out in the Diagnostic Study developed by the Office. In addition, the Committee once again urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures to adopt new procedural rules so that all cases of anti-union discrimination are examined by the courts in summary proceedings, and that the respective court rulings are implemented as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect and to continue to provide statistics on the specific results achieved by the new judicial body in terms of compliance with and the execution of reinstatement orders.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining in the private sector. Possibility of bargaining at all levels. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with regret the very low number of collective agreements signed and adopted in the country. The Committee also noted that section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires at least 50 per cent membership in a particular sector to be able to establish an industry union, had the effect of preventing any collective bargaining at the sectoral level. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on Convention No. 87, according to which the Subcommittee on Legislation and Labour Policy of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) requested ILO technical assistance to facilitate the tripartite discussion relating to industry unions and sectoral bargaining. The Committee also notes the Government's information that in 2023, 15 collective agreements on working conditions were signed, and between 1 January and 20 August 2024, 18 agreements were signed (covering both the private and the public sectors). Recalling that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, the Committee regrets to note the lack of progress in legislative reforms to allow for collective bargaining at the sectoral level. The Committee once again urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures to reform 215(c) of the Labour Code, and hopes that the technical assistance of the Office, referred to by the Government, will enable it to report on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in the private sector.

Approval of collective agreements in the private sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has submitted for consultation with the social partners draft regulations on the approval and denunciation of concluded collective agreements on conditions in the private sector. Recalling that: (i) approval of collective agreements is compatible with the Convention on condition that refusal of approval is restricted to cases in which the collective agreement contains flaws regarding its form or does not comply with the minimum standards laid down by the general labour legislation; and (ii) this formality must be as streamlined as possible, the Committee hopes that the proposed regulations formulated by the Government to regulate approval of collective agreements, will make a full contribution to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in the private sector.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous requests, the Committee requested the Government to carry out broad consultations with the unions concerned with a view to evaluating and guaranteeing, in the specific context of the public administration, the conformity of the approval procedure for collective agreements with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining, and identifying the reforms necessary to ensure that collective bargaining in the public sector is based on a clear and balanced regulatory framework. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) since 2019, discussions have been held in the Subcommittee on Legislation and Labour Policy of the CNTRLLS on the need for regulations that ensure conformity of the approval procedure with the principles of collective bargaining; (ii) the current Government decided in March 2024 to establish a technical round table proposing to develop a comprehensive regulation to ensure that collective bargaining in the public sector has a clear and balanced normative framework; in this regard, consultations were held with the employers and workers on draft regulations on collective bargaining in the civil service, and draft regulations on the approval and denunciation of concluded collective agreements on conditions of work in the public sector; and (iii) consultations were held in May 2024 when the employers and workers had presented their views and proposals. The Committee takes note of these aspects and also notes that the Government has requested technical assistance from the Office to determine, based on comparative law, guidelines to improve the exercise of collective bargaining in the public sector. Welcoming the initiatives taken by the Government, the Committee, recalling that Guatemala has also ratified the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), trusts that the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, will be able to develop a regulatory framework that, taking into account the specific characteristics of collective bargaining in the public sector: (i) ensures a meaningful scope for collective bargaining of the working and employment conditions of public sector workers, including remuneration; (ii) establishes clear rules on the procedures for determining available public funds prior to the signing of collective agreements; and (iii) avoids any delay in the approval process of collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The maquila sector. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government, in accordance with the campaign described in the Committee's comments on the application of Convention No. 87, to take specific measures to promote freedom of association and collective bargaining in the maquila sector and to provide updated information on the exercise of collective rights in this sector. The Committee notes the Government's indications that, in coordination with the Ministry of Economy, it has identified 942 enterprises related to the maquila sector, indicating that it will coordinate with the General Labour Inspectorate for the monitoring of labour and trade union rights. The Committee regrets to note the lack of information from the Government on specific actions to promote freedom of association and collective bargaining in the maquila sector and also notes the absence of information requested on the exercise of collective rights in this sector. Emphasizing that the violation of trade union rights in the maquila sector constitutes one of the allegations of the complaint presented under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee once again urges the Government to take specific steps to promote freedom of association and collective bargaining in this sector and to provide updated information on the number of collective agreements in force and the number of workers covered therein, as well as the number of trade union organizations active in the maquila.

Application of the Convention in municipal authorities. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to reinforce its efforts to resolve the many existing disputes in municipal authorities in accordance with the Convention, and to engage in broad dialogue with the social partners and the respective authorities with a view to finding lasting solutions, including of a legislative nature, to the issues arising in relation to the exercise of the collective rights of municipal workers. The Committee notes that the Government indicates its efforts at rapprochement with the National Association of Municipalities to address trade union-related matters. The Committee once again urges the Government to take all necessary measures, including the adoption of legislation to ensure the application of the Convention in the municipalities. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Tripartite settlement of disputes in relation to trade union matters and collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee encouraged the tripartite constituents to renew their efforts to provide the Subcommittee on Mediation and Conflict Resolution of the CNTRLLS with one or more mediators so that it can begin to discharge its functions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in the CNTRLLS meetings in November 2023, and March and May 2024, emphasis was placed on the need for ILO technical assistance to develop the profile of a mediator to manage this Subcommittee; and (ii) while progress is being made in defining and selecting a mediator, ILO technical assistance has been secured so that over the course of 2024 the capacities of the Subcommittee members are strengthened and optimized through certification courses on conflict mediation. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be able to report on the appointment of a mediator and the effective start of the work of the Subcommittee on Mediation and Conflict Resolution.

The Committee takes due note that the Government has availed itself of ILO technical assistance to address several of the serious difficulties concerning the application of the Convention that have been noted for many years. The Committee encourages and urges the Government to, with the participation of the CNTRLLS, take all necessary legislative and practical measures to resolve these issues.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1989)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of all rural workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. In its previous comment, noting that the law of Guatemala requires a minimum number of 20 workers to form a union, that small enterprises account for a large majority of companies in the rural sector, and that there are only nine workers' organizations that have currently valid legal personalities, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to amend the requirements relating to the establishment of sectoral unions set out in section 215(c) of the Labour Code (which requires a membership of "50 per cent plus one" of the workers in a sector to establish a sectoral trade union), to facilitate and extend the possibilities for the establishment of unions that cover workers in several enterprises in the rural sector. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Subcommittee on Legislation and Labour Policy of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) has requested ILO technical assistance to facilitate tripartite discussion on this matter. With reference to its comments made in respect of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee again urges the Government, after consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to amend section 215(c) of the Labour Code to facilitate and extend the possibilities for the establishment of unions that cover workers in several enterprises in the rural sector. The Committee hopes that the ILO technical assistance mentioned by the Government will enable it to report on tangible progress in the near future. The Committee also requests the Government to provide up-to-date statistics on workers' organizations with valid legal personality in the country.

In response to serious allegations of anti-union practices in the agricultural sector, the Committee also requested the Government to provide fuller information on the action and interventions of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT) in respect of freedom of association in the rural sector. The Committee notes the statistics communicated by the Government regarding the IGT activities in 18 of the country's departments between 1 January 2021 and 17 May 2024, according to which 432 complaints were received and a total of 68 penalties were imposed. The Government also indicates that 3,180 trade union leaders are registered at the Ministry of Labour and are benefitting from employment security. While noting the data provided by the Government, the Committee recalls that in conformity with Article 2 of the Convention, the term rural workers means any person engaged in agriculture, handicrafts or a related occupation in a rural area. The Committee observes that the information provided by the Government appears instead to cover all workers and economic activities in the 18 departments mentioned above, and not solely the rural workers as specifically defined by the Convention. In its previous comment, having observed that the IGT had clearly identified the substantial challenges to the protection of the exercise of trade union rights in the rural sector (seasonality of work and contracts, linguistic barriers with indigenous workers, difficulties of access to certain enterprises, weak trade union organization in the sector), the Committee requested the Government to report on action taken to assess measures and tools to reinforce the effectiveness of action by the IGT and other relevant public authorities to prevent and resolve situations of anti-union discrimination in the rural sector. The Committee regrets the absence of information from the Government in this respect. In light of the above, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide specific data on the actions and interventions of the IGT in relation to freedom of association of rural workers as defined under Article 2 of the Convention (indicating in particular of the number of complaints lodged concerning the exercise of trade union rights and the related decisions, as well as the number of trade union leaders registered so that they benefit from employment security). Recalling that Guatemala has also ratified the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1948 (No. 98), the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), and the Plantations Convention, 1958 (No. 110), the Committee once again requests the Government to proceed to an assessment of measures and tools to reinforce the effectiveness of action by the IGT and the other relevant public authorities to prevent and resolve situations of anti-union discrimination in the rural sector.

Articles 4–6. Promotion of organizations of rural workers and their role in economic and social development. In its earlier comments, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) reinforce information activities on and the promotion of freedom of association and collective bargaining through initiatives targeting the rural sector; (ii) compile the information available on the collective agreements in force that cover rural workers; and (iii) promote dialogue with the associations of rural workers, including those of self-employed workers and small producers, in mechanisms for the adoption of public decisions that affect them; and (iv) supplement the information provided on associations in the rural sector by providing further details on associations of self-employed workers and small producers, including information on solidarist associations.

The Committee notes that the Government again recalls that, with ILO support, the Campaign on Decent Work in the Agricultural Sector was launched in 2021 through digital media, and in 2023 and 2024 publications on freedom of association appeared in the national press. With regard to the collective agreements covering rural workers, the Committee notes that although the Government refers to eight collective agreements, it appears that these mostly do not correspond to the scope of application of the Convention, as they are agreements directed at public municipality employees, and moreover none of them is in force. Regarding measures and action to promote dialogue with associations of rural workers, including associations of self-employed workers and small producers, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the National Agricultural Development Council (CONADEA) of the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food (MAGA) has created a space for dialogue, consultation, coordination, exchange of information and for bringing together the MAGA and the sectors connected to agricultural activity and the working groups of 18 agricultural chains, with a view to reactivating and modernizing agriculture, as well as reactivating and modernizing the livestock, forestry and hydrological agricultural sub-sectors; and (ii) the MAGA collaborates regularly with around 30 rural organizations (list appended) on the implementation of programmes and projects, to ensure inclusion of the organizations and that they are taken into account in the design, discussion, follow-up and evaluation of policies that contribute to the well-being of the rural population. While taking due note of the information provided and observing with concern the absence of information from the Government on any collective agreement in force that covers rural workers, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) reinforce information activities on, and the promotion of, freedom of association and collective bargaining through initiatives targeting rural workers, ensuring their divulgation through the media most used in those areas and in the most spoken languages of the regions; (ii) compile the information available on the collective agreements in force that cover rural workers, as defined in Article 2 of the Convention; and (iii) continue providing details of the dialogue with associations of rural workers, including self-employed workers and small producers, in the mechanisms for the adoption of public decisions that affect them. Finally, observing that no information has been provided in this regard, the Committee again requests the Government to provide detailed information on solidarist associations in the rural sector, and on the content of their activities.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025].

Guinea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

Civil liberties and trade union rights. In its previous comment on the application of the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), the Committee noted that, by decision of 13 May 2022, the transitional government prohibited any demonstrations in public thoroughfares likely to compromise the social peace and the proper implementation of its scheduled activities, specifying that any breach of this order would entail legal consequences against the perpetrator(s). It notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee) in June 2024, the Worker Members stated that the deterioration in the human and trade union rights situation in Guinea has only worsened since 2022. They also referred to the arrest of Mr Sékou Jamal Pendessa, Secretary-General of the Guinean Press Professionals' Union (SPPG), on 19 January 2024, for participating in an "unauthorized assembly", after his union had called for protest against the media restrictions imposed by the Government since May 2023, and who was released after three days of strikes and protest on 28 February 2024. The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government in its report on the application of Convention No. 105, that his case is pending before the Supreme Court. In this respect, the Committee would like to recall that the interdependence of respect for fundamental rights and freedom of association implies, in particular, that the public authorities cannot interfere in the legitimate activities of organizations by means of arrests (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions paragraph 60). Recalling the request by the Conference Committee to quash the convictions brought against Sékou Jamal Pendessa, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the decision of the Supreme Court. Noting that the Transitional Charter foresees the rebuilding of the State and the adoption of a new Constitution by referendum, and that the 2014 Labour Code is currently under review, the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the new Constitution, the Labour Code as well as any legislative or regulatory texts fully comply with the principles recognized by the Convention, as per the Committee's comments below, and to provide the copy of any relevant texts adopted.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that on more than one occasion it has requested the Government to:

- amend section 431.5 of the Labour Code in order to limit the possibility of establishing a minimum service in the event of a strike to the following situations: (a) in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (or essential services "in the strict sense of the term"; (b) in services which are not essential in the strict sense of the term, but in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population; and (c) in public services of fundamental importance (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 136);
- amend section 434.4 of the Labour Code in order to: (i) limit recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute or a strike; (ii) limit recourse to compulsory arbitral decisions to situations in which the strike itself may be subject to restrictions, or even prohibited, namely: (a) in the case of disputes concerning public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (b) in disputes in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (c) in situations of acute national or local crisis, but only for a limited period of time and to the extent necessary to meet the requirements of the situation (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 153); and (iii) no longer empower the public authorities, in the event that one of the parties objects, to bring an end to a strike, instead of the highest judicial body.

The Committee notes the information on the existence of a draft revision of the Labour Code in the Government's report on the implementation of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). In this regard, it also notes the Government's indication that the matter of the determination of minimum services will be resolved by ministerial decree, pursuant to the provisions of the new Labour Code, once it is adopted. The Committee expects that the new Labour Code will be adopted as soon as possible, and that the comments that it has made will be taken into account in the course of the revision so as to bring the labour legislation into full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect, including with regard to the adoption of regulatory texts for the determination of minimum services in the event of strikes.

In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government for information on the measures taken to establish an independent body, which has the confidence of the parties, to resolve any disagreements with respect to the determination of minimum services, through the framework for concerted social dialogue, and on the role played by the National Social Dialogue Council (CNDS) in this regard. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the minimum services which, according to the Government, have been determined for the communication and transport services.

The Committee understands from the Government's reply that the CNDS, which has been operational since January 2023, does not include the determination of minimum services in the event of a disagreement among its regular functions, but intervenes only in the event of major disputes and manifest disagreement between the social partners. The Committee recalls that any disagreement on minimum services should be resolved, not by the government authorities, but by a joint or independent body which has the confidence of the parties (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 138). The Committee trusts that the Government will proceed rapidly to establish an independent body which has the confidence of the parties and is responsible for determining minimum services when there is no agreement between the parties on the matter. Furthermore, in view of the absence of information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the minimum services determined in the communication, transport and other sectors.

Guinea-Bissau

(ratification: 1977)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, denouncing severe impediments to the exercise of legitimate trade union activities, including the right of the National Union of Workers of Guinea – Union Center (UNTG-CS) to bargain collectively on behalf of its members. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new Labour Code was adopted by the National Assembly in July 2021 and is awaiting promulgation by the President of the Republic. Once promulgated, the Labour Code will repeal the General Labour Act No. 2/86.

Scope of the Convention. Categories of workers. For several years now, the Committee has been asking the Government to communicate information on the status of the draft legislation regarding the guarantee of the rights protected by the Convention to agricultural and dockworkers. The Committee noted the Government's indication that these matters were adequately addressed in the new Labour Code under approval. The Committee notes the Government's indication that agricultural and dockworkers are covered by the new Labour Code, However, it observes, according to section 21 of the new legislation, that the following are subject to a special regime, without prejudice to the application of the general provisions of the Code which are not incompatible with the special regimes: employment contracts issued for (a) domestic work; (b) group employment; (c) apprenticeship or training; (d) work on board commercial and fishing vessels; (e) work on board aircraft; (f) dock work; (g) rural work; and (h) work performed by foreigners. In this regard, the Committee observes that the general provisions of the Labour Code in respect of freedom of association and collective bargaining (sections 395, 396 and 397) cover only the right to establish trade union organizations, their autonomy and independence, and the prohibition of anti-union discrimination. Emphasizing all workers, with the sole exception of members of the armed forces and the police, as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State must have access to all the rights guaranteed by the Convention and, in particular, the right to collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in what manner the special regimes for the different categories of workers mentioned above regulate their collective rights.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee also requested the Government to provide information on measures taken to adopt special legislation which, under section 2(2) of Act No. 08/91 on freedom of association, was to regulate the right to collective bargaining of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the public servants who do not exercise functions directly connected to the administration of the State are also protected by the provisions of the new Labour Code. The Committee observes, in the regard, that while section 2 of the Labour Code indicates the provisions of the Code applicable to the legal relationship in public employment, without prejudice to the provisions of the special legislation, the right to collective bargaining is not included in these provisions. In the absence of other information brought to its attention, the Committee requests the Government to specify the provisions or mechanisms whereby the different categories of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State my negotiate their working conditions and terms of employment and to provide information on the different agreements signed with the public employees' and servants' organizations.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Procedures for extending collective agreements. The Committee observes that section 503 of the new Labour Code provides that the member of the Government responsible for the area of work may, by means of regulations, determine the entire or partial extension of collective labour agreements to employers of the same sector of activity and to workers of the same or a similar occupation. Recalling that the request to extend a collective agreement must, as a general rule, be made by one or more employers and workers organizations which are party to the collective agreement, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to modify the legislation to ensure that the extension of collective agreements are subject to tripartite consultations (even where they provide, as is the case in section 504 of the Labour Code, that the parties affected by the application of an extended collective agreement may submit an objection to the draft extension regulation).

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the number of new collective agreements signed and on the number of workers covered by them. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, to date, it does not have this information at its disposal, but that it will provide it as soon as it is available. Emphasizing the importance of having available statistical data in order to be able to evaluate more accurately the need to promote collective bargaining, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate the number of collective agreements concluded, the sectors covered and the number of workers concerned.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that when the 40 per cent threshold set out in the Trade Union Recognition Act, is not reached, the existing unions should be given the possibility, jointly or separately, to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 21 of the Trade Union Recognition Act allows for a union to be certified as a majority union even if it garners less than 40 per cent support, provided the secret ballot includes at least 40 per cent of the workers, when two or more trade unions have applied to be recognized as a majority union for the same bargaining unit. While taking due note of this information, the Committee remains concerned that this is the only circumstance under the Act where a union can engage in collective bargaining without meeting the 40 per cent threshold. The Committee observes in particular that according to section 20 of the Act, when only one union seeks recognition to be able to bargain collectively, it will be certified as the majority union only if at least 40 per cent of the workers comprised in the appropriate bargaining unit support it on the application date. Recalling that it has been addressing this matter since 1999, the Committee urges the Government to take, in consultation with the most representative social partners, all necessary measures to ensure that the thresholds established by legislation to become a bargaining agent effectively guarantee the promotion of collective bargaining, including by adding provisions to ensure that, if the threshold is not met, existing unions are still granted the opportunity to engage in collective bargaining, either jointly or individually, at least on behalf of their own members.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that (i) between 2020 and 2023, many collective agreements were signed in various sectors including, but not limited to, agriculture, telecommunications, security, utilities, distribution, insurance, banking, gasoline, retail, government services and manufacturing; (ii) while the exact numbers remain unavailable, approximately 9,475 workers were covered by the 22 collective agreements signed in 2021, 8,136 were covered by the 21 collective agreements signed in 2022 and 8,131 were covered by the 18 collective agreements concluded in 2023, amounting to a total of 25,742 workers; and (iii) in 2024 (until August), eight collective agreements were signed between four trade unions and eight employers. Taking due note of this information, the Committee invites the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, indicating the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

Haiti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 30 August 2023, as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, which once again refer to the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, and the repercussions this has on the exercise of trade union rights, which are already particularly under threat. Taking note of the extent of the crisis in which the country is immersed at all levels, the Committee can only refer to its previous observation and direct request of 2020 and express the hope that the Government will be able to comment on all of the issues raised in the near future. To this end, the Committee reiterates that any request for technical assistance addressed by the Government to the Office will be acted upon as soon as possible.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, which relate to the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, and which largely refer to those formulated in 2022.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which contain new allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in the textile sector, such as anti-union dismissals. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH), received on 2 November 2022, which, in the context of the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, denounce the blatant limitations on the right to organize and bargain collectively in practice. The Committee notes the extent of the crisis affecting the country at all levels and hopes that the Government will be able to comment on the issues raised in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, which has been expected since 2014, has not been received. In light of the urgent appeal made to the Government in 2020, the Committee is proceeding with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal. While being aware of the difficulties faced by the country, the Committee recalls that it raised questions concerning the application of the Convention in an observation, which particularly concerned the need to strengthen protection against anti-union discrimination as well as the penalties provided in this regard. It recalls also that its comments concern allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in practice, especially in several enterprises in textile export processing zones, and the lack of social bargaining in the country. In the absence of additional observations from the social partners and having no indication at its disposal of progress made on these pending issues, the Committee refers to its previous observation of 2020 and urges the Government to provide a complete response in 2022 to the questions raised. For that purpose, the Committee expects that any request for technical assistance, in relation with Conventions ratified by the country, that the Government may wish to address to the Office will be taken up as soon as possible.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Honduras

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 30 August 2024, and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, which relate to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comment, the Committee firmly urged, once again, the Government and all the competent authorities to: (i) take specific and rapid measures, including budgetary measures, to comply fully with the elements in the tripartite agreement of 2019 concerning action against anti-union violence, ensuring that the Committee on Anti-Union Violence holds its meetings and providing the necessary and vital impetus for it to succeed in the performance of its functions, ensuring the active involvement of all relevant authorities; (ii) institutionalize and make effective the participation of the representative trade unions in the National Council for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders; (iii) draw up a special investigation protocol to enable the Office of the Public Prosecutor to examine, systematically and effectively, any anti-union motives behind potential acts of violence affecting members of the trade union movement; (iv) ensure that the criminal courts give priority treatment to cases of anti-union violence; and (v) ensure adequate and prompt protection for all at-risk members of the trade union movement. The Committee also urged the Government to report on the progress made on each of these points, as well as the progress made in the investigations and prosecutions relating to the acts of violence that have affected members of the trade union movement.

The Committee recalls that, in its previous comment, it noted the status of the investigations and prosecutions relating to 14 cases of murder of members of the trade union movement. The Committee notes the following updated information provided by the Government: (i) a final judgment has been handed down in relation to the murder of Claudia Larissa Brizuela Rodríguez; (ii) nine cases of murder that took place between 2010 and 2020 are still under investigation (Sonia Landaverde Miranda, Alfredo Misael Ávila Cantillano, Evelio Posadas Velásquez, Juana Suyapa Posadas Bustillo, Glenda Maribel Sánchez García, Fredy Omar Rodríguez, Oscar Obdulio Turcios Fúnes, Jorge Alberto Acosta Barrientos and Roger Abraham Vallejo Soriano) and detailed information has been provided in relation to the progress made in each of the investigations; and (iii) the convictions handed down in relation to the murders of José Ángel Flores and Silmer Dionisio George were notified on 6 June 2023. The Government does not provide information on the status of the prosecutions relating to the murders of Alma Yaneth Díaz Ortega and Uva Erlinda Castellanos Vigil.

The Committee notes that the Government provides information on the status of the prosecutions relating to the murders of four other members of the trade union movement, indicating that: (i) arrest warrants have been issued in relation to the murders of Héctor Orlando Martínez Motiño and José Adán Mejía Rodríguez (murders that took place in 2015 and 2020, respectively); (ii) a conviction was handed down in relation to the murder in 2015 of Donatilo Jiménez Euceda; and (iii) the conviction in relation to the murder in 2020 of Félix Vásquez is final.

The Committee further notes the ITUC's indication that it regrets the murders on 24 June 2023 of 13 persons, including 4 trade union leaders, Xiomara Cocas, Delmer García, Lesther Almendarez and José Rufino Ortíz. The Committee notes that the ITUC indicates the murders took place the week the management of the factory where the leaders worked announced the closure of the factory and that the trade union was in early talks about the closure, which would have left 2,700 workers unemployed. The Committee notes that the Government reports that an investigation is under way, that witness statements have been taken, that ten suspects have been identified and that the proceedings so far have established that the motive was related to a territorial dispute over the sale of drugs.

While noting the updated information provided by the Government on the status of the above-mentioned investigations and prosecutions, the Committee expresses its deepest concern at the numerous murders of members of the trade union movement and at the fact that several of the investigations and prosecutions relating to murders that took place more than a decade ago are still pending. Recalling once again that justice delayed is justice denied, the Committee reaffirms the fundamental importance of ensuring that the criminal courts give priority treatment to cases of anti-union violence and that the Government ensures adequate and prompt protection for all at-risk members of the trade union movement.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while anti-union violence persists in the country and many challenges remain, social justice and dialogue are pillars of its administration and various actions have been taken to date to give effect to the tripartite agreement signed after the direct contacts mission in 2019. The Government emphasizes, in this regard, the revival of the tripartite Committee on Anti-Union Violence, which was established in 2019 and inactive from 2021 to 2023. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) on 15 March 2024, the tripartite Committee on Anti-Union Violence was revived with the attendance of representatives of the most representative workers' and employers' organizations in the country, as well as senior officials and representatives of the Presidential Secretariat, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the National Commissioner for Human Rights and the Supreme Court of Justice; and (ii) the participants reiterated the importance of that Committee as a space for the coordination of efforts and exchange of information between the tripartite constituents and judicial officials, highlighting the importance of ensuring that it meets regularly and analysing the progress made in cases pending investigation and prosecution. The Committee notes that COHEP indicates that the Committee in question was renamed the "Committee against Union Violence" and also notes that both the Government and COHEP indicate that that Committee held working meetings in April and May 2024, during which they agreed on several points, such as: (i) establishing a work schedule with monthly meetings; (ii) keeping channels of communication open between officials; and (iii) requesting ILO support to review and implement an investigation protocol at the Office of the Public Prosecutor. The Government also indicates that: (i) it has prepared draft Standing Orders and has sent them to all the participants; and (ii) changes in government staff have made it difficult to appoint a new chair of the Committee, which, combined with the absence of comments from the workers' representatives on the Standing Orders, have prevented the work from continuing.

The Committee notes that COHEP indicates that in August 2024 it requested the Government to revive the Committee against Union Violence, which was at a standstill. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it hopes to be able to appoint a new representative to chair the Committee as soon as possible in order to regain momentum and continue the work of consolidating and reviewing cases of anti-union violence. The Committee further notes that, in addition to providing information on the Committee against Union Violence, the Government indicates that, in accordance with the tripartite agreement of 2019, it has signed a collaboration agreement with the three trade union confederations to increase their technical and operational capacity, including support to raise awareness of the rights to freedom of association and freedom to organize in the country, and that the State is expected to continue to support these confederations in 2024–25.

The Committee duly notes all the above-mentioned information and welcomes the actions taken to date under the tripartite agreement of 2019. The Committee welcomes, in particular, the revival of the Committee against Union Violence in early 2024 and the Government's commitment to appointing a representative to chair the Committee so that it can regain momentum as soon as possible and continue its work. In view of the above, the Committee firmly expects that the Government will give the Committee against Union Violence the necessary and vital impetus for it to continue its activities as soon as possible and to fully carry out its objectives and functions. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government and all the competent authorities to: (i) continue to take specific and rapid measures, including budgetary measures, to comply fully with the elements in the tripartite agreement of 2019, concerning action against anti-union violence; (ii) institutionalize and make effective the participation of the representative trade unions in the National Council for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders; (iii) draw up a special investigation protocol to enable the Office of the Public Prosecutor to examine, systematically and effectively, any anti-union motives behind the acts of violence affecting members of the trade union movement; (iv) ensure that the criminal courts give priority treatment to cases of anti-union violence; and (v) ensure adequate and prompt protection for all at-risk members of the trade union movement. The Committee requests the Government to report in detail on all progress made with respect to each of these points, as well as the progress made in the investigations and prosecutions relating to the acts of violence that have affected members of the trade union movement and, in particular, relating to the above-mentioned cases.

Articles 2 et seq. of the Convention. Establishment, autonomy and activities of trade unions. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for many years to amend the following provisions of the Labour Code to bring them into conformity with the Convention:

- the exclusion from the rights and guarantees of the Convention of workers in agricultural and stock-raising enterprises which do not permanently employ more than ten workers (section 2(1));
- the prohibition of more than one trade union in a single enterprise (section 472);
- the requirement of at least 30 workers to establish a trade union (section 475);
- the requirement that the officers of a trade union must be of Honduran nationality (sections 510(a) and 541(a)), be engaged in the corresponding activity (sections 510(c) and 541(c)) and be able to read and write (sections 510(d) and 541(d));
- the prohibition on strikes called by federations and confederations (section 537);
- the requirement of a two-thirds majority of the votes of the total membership of the trade union organization in order to call a strike (sections 495 and 563);
- the authority of the competent minister to end disputes in oil industry services (section 555(2));
- government authorization or a six-month period of notice for any suspension of work in public services that do not depend directly or indirectly on the State (section 558);
- the referral to compulsory arbitration, without the possibility of calling a strike for as long as the arbitration award is in force (two years), of collective disputes in public services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term (sections 554(2) and (7), 820 and 826).

In its previous comment, the Committee encouraged the Government and all the parties concerned, with the technical support of the Office, to make every effort to revive the various technical bodies attached to the Technical Secretariat of the Economic and Social Council (CES) and to hold tripartite discussions to enable progress to be made in the implementation of the requested reforms. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the CES Assembly, the highest governance body composed of the three workers' confederations, COHEP, the Presidential Secretariat and the Secretariat of Labour and Social Security, agreed to revive the sectoral committees attached to the CES (technical bodies), specifically the Sectoral Committee on International Labour Standards (MENIT), the Sectoral Committee on Decent Employment (MSED) and the Law Commission. The Government indicates that these committees were formed with new representatives and that, in October 2023, MENIT, the MSED and the Law Commission resumed their work, addressing various issues related to the social and economic sector. The Government also indicates that, unlike MENIT and the MSED, the Committee for the Handling of Disputes referred to the ILO (MEPCOIT), which in 2019 had taken up, once again, the issue of reforms to the Labour Code, has not been able to resume its meetings. The Government estimates that the next meeting of the MEPCOIT will take place before the third quarter of 2024 and indicates that its agenda will include reforms to the Labour Code. The Committee welcomes the revival of two of the sectoral committees attached to the CES, while also deeply regretting that to date no measures have been taken to amend the above-mentioned provisions of the Labour Code to bring them into conformity with the Convention. The Committee strongly encourages the Government and all the parties concerned, with the technical support of the Office, to make every effort to ensure that the MEPCOIT resumes its activities on a regular basis and that tripartite discussions can be held to enable progress to be made in the implementation of the reforms that have been requested for many years. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard, as well as the actions taken by the sectoral committees.

New Penal Code. In its previous comments, after noting some concerns regarding the impact of certain provisions of the Penal Code adopted in 2020 on the free exercise of trade union activities, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the consultation process initiated in this respect. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, although a discussion on reforms to the Penal Code is being held in the Standing Committee and the Constitutional Affairs Committee of the National Congress, no reform bill has been submitted to date. The Committee further notes COHEP's indication that this issue has not been addressed in the meetings of the CES. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the consultation process that it previously indicated had been initiated on the impact of certain provisions of the Penal Code of 2020 on the exercise of trade union activities.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comment, the Committee recalled the essential role that the MEPCOIT could and must play in the resolution of labour disputes and urged the Government and all the parties concerned to make every effort to ensure that that Committee, which had been inactive since May 2021, resumed its activities as soon as possible. The Committee notes the Government's indication that MEPCOIT plays a fundamental role in the early resolution of disputes through social dialogue and also notes that, according to COHEP, the Standing Orders of the MEPCOIT were approved in a tripartite manner by the CES Assembly on 17 May 2024. COHEP also indicates that it will begin chairing the CES from October 2024 and that its first action will be to revive all the technical bodies attached to the CES. Recalling once again the essential role that the MEPCOIT can and must play in the resolution of labour disputes, the Committee firmly expects that all the parties concerned will make efforts to ensure that the MEPCOIT resumes its activities on a regular basis so that it can play an active role in the resolution of labour disputes. The Committee requests the Government to report on this matter and reiterates that the Office is available to offer technical assistance in relation to this and all the issues raised in this comment.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 2021. The Committee also notes the observations of COHEP received on 30 August 2024 on the issues examined by the Committee in the present comment.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Noting the progress contained in the Labour Inspection Act (2017) and in the reform of the Penal Code (2019), the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the processing of complaints of anti-union acts and on the average duration of legal proceedings in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Labour Inspection Act has had a positive impact on the exercise of trade union rights, especially in the maquila sector; (ii) between 2019 and 2022, 44 complaints of acts of anti-union discrimination were filed and not 222 as previously indicated; (iii) 3 of these complaints concern dismissals of trade union leaders, one of whom was reinstated, while the other cases are pending; and (iv) between 2022 and 2024, 174 complaints of anti-union discrimination were filed. The Committee notes that in October 2023, the Committee on Freedom of Association examined Case No. 3368 and drew its attention to the aspects concerning the application in practice of the Act in question. The Committee observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association noted the particularly lengthy nature of the administrative procedures for anti-union dismissals of up to five years and observed that certain decisions of the labour inspectorate are allegedly not being enforced (see 404th Report). The Committee also notes that, under Agreements No. 342 of 2022 and No. 433 of 2023, attached by the Government, the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (SETRASS) decided, based on the cumulative increase in the inflation index, to increase the fines for violations of freedom of association from 312,660 lempiras in 2018 (approximately US$12,400) to 391,406 lempiras in 2023 (approximately US$15,522). The Committee further notes that COHEP indicates that SETRASS has allegedly indicated that it does not have a record of the payment of fines and does not know how many have been paid. In the light of the above, and recalling that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 190), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the prompt and effective implementation of the sanctions and remedial measures applied. It also requests the Government to provide up-to-date and detailed information on the complaints filed, the number of sanctions imposed and the number and amount of fines paid. The Committee also invites the Government to provide information on the average duration of legal proceedings for anti-union discrimination (including appeals) and the outcomes of such proceedings.

In its previous comment, the Committee referred to the possibility of incorporating the content of Ministerial Agreement No. STSS-196-2015, which protects workers wishing to form trade unions, in the Labour Code reform process, which has been in the hands of the Committee for the Handling of Disputes referred to the ILO (MEPCOIT) since 2019. The Committee notes that, according to COHEP: (i) the MEPCOIT has been inactive since May 2021; (ii) in October 2023, it requested the revival of the MEPCOIT; and (iii) on 17 May 2024, its rules of operation were approved. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the workers and employers have yet to reach an agreement on the Labour Code reforms. The Committee once again encourages the Government and the social partners to consider this matter in the context of the Labour Code reform and firmly hopes that all the parties concerned will make their utmost effort to ensure that the MEPCOIT resumes its activities on a regular basis as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in relation to this and all the issues raised in this comment.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. For more than a decade, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to incorporate into the legislation explicit provisions that ensure effective protection against acts of interference by the employer, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in order to guarantee freedom of association and prevent acts of interference, SETRASS issued the above-mentioned Agreements No. 342 of 2022 and No. 433 of 2023, adjusting fines to bring them in line with inflation and thus increasing them. While noting these indications, the Committee once again recalls that in order to ensure that effect is given to Article 2 of the Convention in practice, the legislation must make express provision for sufficiently dissuasive remedies and sanctions against acts of interference by employers against workers and their organizations, including against measures that are intended to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means with the objective of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations. The Committee once again requests the Government to take due note of this matter in the Labour Code reform process, and to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Right of collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. For more than a decade, the Committee has been referring to the need to amend sections 534 and 536 of the Labour Code so that the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is duly recognized in national law. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the sectors involved in the MEPCOIT have not yet reached an agreement on the points to be addressed in the Labour Code reform and encourages the workers and employers to reach an agreement in this regard. The Committee recalls noting that, while collective bargaining is in practice possible in certain public institutions through collective agreements, collective accords, special accords, memorandums of understanding and "respectful statements", sections 534 and 536 of the Labour Code do not allow unions of public employees to submit lists of demands or conclude collective agreements. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while the above is true, the Constitution of the Republic establishes equal rights, including the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes these indications and once again recalls that a system in which public employees not engaged in the administration of the State may only submit to the authorities "respectful statements", a mechanism that does not allow for real negotiations to take place with regard to conditions of employment, is not in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 534 and 536 of the Labour Code so that the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is duly recognized in national law. It also encourages the Government, and all the parties concerned, to make efforts to ensure that this issue is addressed in the context of the Labour Code reform process and requests to be kept informed in this regard.

Article 4. Collective bargaining on trade union leave. The Committee noted that section 95(5) of the Labour Code provides that the employer is not obliged to grant more than 2 days of paid trade union leave in each calendar month, and in no case more than 15 days in the same year. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the representative workers' and employers' organizations, to review the legislation so that restrictions on the possibility of collective bargaining on remuneration for trade union leave be removed. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the Labour Code reform process has not begun. The Committee recalls that the payment of wages to full-time union officials should be up to the parties to determine, and the Government should authorize negotiation on the issue of whether trade union activity by full-time union officials should be treated as unpaid leave. The Committee once again requests the Government, in consultation with the representative workers' and employers' organizations and in the context of the Labour Code reform process, to take the necessary steps to review the legislation so that restrictions on the possibility of collective bargaining on remuneration for trade union leave be removed.

Application of the Convention in practice. Export processing zones. The Committee regrets that the Government has not provided the requested information and once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of collective agreements concluded in export processing zones and the number of workers covered by them, as well as information on the inspections carried out in export processing zones following complaints of violations of trade union rights.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee encouraged the Government to continue to provide detailed information on collective bargaining in practice and the promotion thereof, especially in the agri-export and education sectors, in which numerous allegations of violations of freedom of association in practice had been made in previous years. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between 2021 and 2024 a total of 75 collective agreements were signed and that 9 collective agreements were concluded with non-unionized workers. The Committee notes that both the Government and COHEP indicate that applications for the registration of collective agreements have decreased because workers avail themselves of the provisions of section 517 of the Labour Code, which grants them special protection from the State when they notify their employer of their intention to form a trade union. The Committee also notes that the Government reports that two requests for the submission of a preliminary draft list of demands in the agro-export sector were submitted in 2021. While noting the various information provided, the Committee again requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, indicating the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by them; and (ii) the measures taken, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining. Noting that the Government does not report the conclusion of any collective agreements in the agri-export sector, the Committee requests the Government to make specific efforts to promote collective bargaining at all levels (enterprise, sector) in this branch of activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the workers' group of the National ILO Council (hereafter the workers' group) at its meeting of 13 September 2024, included in the Government's report, which relate to the issues examined by the Committee below, and the Government's comments thereon.

Freedom of expression. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern that sections 8 and 9 of the Labour Code (2012) prohibited workers from engaging in any conduct, including the exercise of their right to express an opinion – whether during or outside working time – that may jeopardize the employer's reputation or legitimate economic and organizational interests, and explicitly provided for the possibility to restrict workers' personal rights in this regard. The Committee urged the Government to take all necessary measures, including legislative, to guarantee that the above provisions did not impede the freedom of expression of workers and the exercise of the mandate of trade unions and their leaders to defend the occupational interests of their members. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not taken any concrete steps to address its previous comments and merely indicates that a debate was held in 2021, and that a publication addressing interpretive questions on trade unions' right to freedom of expression was issued in 2022. The Committee observes, however, that according to the workers' group, the discussion held in 2021 did not amount to a consultation. The Committee must therefore once again urge the Government to take all necessary measures, including legislative, in consultation with the social partners, to guarantee that sections 8 and 9 of the Labour Code do not impede the freedom of expression of workers and the exercise of the mandate of trade unions and their leaders to defend the occupational interests of their members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on concrete steps taken and all progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Registration of trade unions. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government once again fails to provide its reply to the 2017 allegations of the International Trade Unions Confederation (ITUC) and the workers' group which concern the stringent requirements in relation to union headquarters, the refusal of registration due to minor flaws, the imposition of the obligation of including the company's name in the official name of associations, and the difficulties created for or encountered by trade unions because of the obligation to bring their by-laws in line with the Civil Code. The Committee recalls once again that, although the formalities of registration allow for official recognition of workers' or employers' organizations, these formalities should not become an obstacle to the exercise of legitimate trade union activities, nor should they allow for undue discretionary power to deny or delay the establishment of such organizations. The Committee therefore urges the Government to: (i) engage without delay in consultations with representative organizations of employers and workers to assess the need to further simplify the registration requirements, including those relating to union headquarters; and (ii) take the necessary measures to effectively address the alleged obstacles to registration in practice, so as not to impede the right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of registered organizations and the number of organizations denied or delayed registration during the reporting period, including details on the grounds for refusal of registration, so as to enable the Committee to better assess the conformity of these grounds with the Convention.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration. The Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the ITUC allegations that trade union activity was severely restricted by the power of national prosecutors to control trade union activities, for instance by reviewing general and ad hoc decisions of unions, conducting inspections directly or through other state bodies, and enjoying free and unlimited access to trade union offices. According to the ITUC, in the exercise of their broad capacities, prosecutors questioned the lawfulness of trade union operations several times, requested numerous documents and ordered additional reports if dissatisfied with the unions' financial reporting, thereby exceeding their legal authority. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government has not provided its comments on these serious allegations. Recalling once again that the acts described by the ITUC would be incompatible with the right of workers' organizations to organize their administration as enshrined in Article 3 of the Convention, the Committee expects the Government to respond to the ITUC allegations and to provide information on the type of inquiries conducted by prosecutors into trade union operations.

Deduction of union membership fees. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that in 2024, section 1 of Act XXIX of 1991 on The Voluntary Nature of Membership Fees in Workers' Representative Organizations and section 12/A of Act XXXIII of 1992 on The Legal Status of Public Employees were amended to ensure that employers are no longer permitted to deduct union membership fees from employees' wages or transfer these fees to the trade unions. The Committee notes that pursuant to the amended text of section 1 of Act XXIX of 1991, employers are obliged, except where otherwise stipulated by law, to deduct from employees' wages trade union dues upon receiving a written request from the employee and transfer them to the trade union concerned. According to section 12/A of Act XXXIII of 1992, however, notwithstanding Act XXIX of 1991, employers are prohibited from deducting or transferring such dues from the wages of public employees. The Committee notes the indication of the workers' group that the issue of a ban on union membership fees in certain sectors was placed on the agenda of the National ILO Council. The Government indicates that it has held discussions on the issue of union membership fees with the Permanent Consultative Forum of the Competitive Sector, which is the competent forum for tripartite negotiations on general economy and labour related issues. Recalling that workers should have the possibility of opting for deductions from their wages under the check-off system to be paid to trade union organizations of their choice, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussion on union membership fees within the Permanent Consultative Forum of the Competitive Sector.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities. The Committee had previously highlighted the need to amend the relevant laws (including the Strike Act, the Passenger Transport Services Act and the Postal Services Act) in order to ensure that workers' organizations concerned may participate in defining a minimum service and that, where no agreement is possible, the matter is referred to a joint or independent body. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. The Committee firmly urges the Government to take all necessary measures to amend without any further delay the Strike Act, as well as the Passenger Transport Services Act and the Postal Services Act as per the Committee's previous comments, and to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Democratic League of Independent Trade Unions (LIGA) included in the Government's report, which relate to issues examined by the Committee below, and the Government's comments thereon. The Committee also recalls that the application of the Convention was examined by the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2022. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to address significant gaps in the application of the Convention in law and in practice and to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its last comment, the Committee noted with satisfaction that the definition of employee representatives in the Labour Code now covers trade union officials, enabling them to request their reinstatement in case of unlawful dismissal. It also noted that for trade union members other than officials, the Labour Code provides, through judicial procedure, for compensation in case of unlawful dismissal and reinstatement in case of dismissal violating the principle of equal treatment (sections 82 and 83(1)(a) of the Labour Code) and that an aggrieved trade union member may demand compensation under section 166(1) of the Labour Code for damage caused by the employer in connection with the employment relationship. Regarding the Committee's request for information on the legal provisions under which anti-union discriminatory acts, other than dismissal, can be remedied and the way these provisions are applied, the Government indicates that: (1) sections 12, 231, 271 and 273 of the Labour Code, and section 2:43(3) of the Civil Code prohibit anti-union discrimination, with such discrimination constituting a violation of personality rights; and (2) section 21(g) of the Equal Treatment Act offers protection against indirect or direct discrimination, with section 12 prescribing that claims should be redressed through actions for the enforcement of personality rights, in which case a grievance award may be claimed under section 2:52 of the Civil Code. The Committee notes in this respect LIGA's allegations that the national legislation lacks sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee observes in this regard that the provisions referred to by the Government do not establish a minimum amount of compensation in case of their violation and that the Government's information does not refer to specific instances where these provisions were applied to anti-union discrimination cases. In this respect, the Committee notes that it has not received the detailed information requested on the recourse to judicial or quasi-judicial mechanisms applicable in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee therefore once again recalls that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice and if the sanctions provided for are not effective and sufficiently dissuasive (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 190 and 193). The Committee is once again bound to request the Government to: (i) provide comprehensive information on the average duration of both judicial proceedings and proceedings before the Commissioner for Fundamental Rights concerning allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination, together with details on remedies provided, the number of claims rejected and the grounds for any such rejections; and (ii) carry out, in consultation with the social partners, a comprehensive examination of the effectiveness of the existing protection mechanisms against anti-union discrimination, including anti-union discriminatory acts other than dismissal. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take steps to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting acts of interference by the employer and making express provision for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (1) section 231 of the Labour Code and section 3 of the Act CLXXV of 2011 on the Right of Association implement Article 2 of the Convention; and (2) reiterates its previous position that all state bodies, including the Constitutional Court and other courts, are obliged to interpret national legislation in a manner that is consistent with the Convention in general and with its Article 2 in particular. The Committee observes that the provisions cited above recognize freedom of association and trade union rights in general terms without specifically addressing the issue of interference. The Committee recalls that in order to ensure that effect is given to Article 2 of the Convention in practice, the legislation must make express provision for sufficiently dissuasive remedies and sanctions against acts of interference by employers against workers and their organizations, including against measures that are intended to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means with the objective of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations. The Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures, after consultation with social partners, to incorporate into the legislation explicit provisions that ensure effective protection against acts of interference by the employer, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Representativeness requirements. In its previous comments, having noted that a uniform 10 per cent threshold for the conclusion of collective agreements was established by legislation, the Committee requested the Government to examine the possibility of allowing for the coalition of trade unions at workplaces where no trade union reaches the required representativity threshold. Noting the absence of specific information from the Government on the steps taken or envisioned in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Negotiation with works councils. The Committee previously requested the Government, in consultation with the representative social partners, to review section 268(1) of the Labour Code which entitles an employer to conclude a collective agreement with a works council (except on remuneration), when no trade union meets the representativeness threshold for collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, while the Government indicates that there was no initiative from representatives of the employers and workers who are signatories of the Permanent Tripartite Dialogue Agreement (VKF agreement) to review this provision, LIGA alleges a lack of adequate Government response to their observations in this respect. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention refers to collective bargaining between employers or employers' organizations on the one hand and workers' organizations on the other hand, and that it considers that, in order to ensure an effective promotion of the negotiating capacities of workers' organizations, negotiations with non-union actors should only be possible in the absence of trade unions at the respective level. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, in consultation with the representative social partners, to review section 268(1) of the Labour Code to remove the possibility of works councils concluding works agreements when there is a union presence in the bargaining unit concerned.

Collective bargaining at levels higher than the enterprise. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it noted the position of the workers' group of the ILO National Council (NILOC) according to which: (1) there was a significant decline in the operation of Sectoral Dialogue Committees, partially due to the decrease in governmental support to their operation; and (2) recent amendments to provisions on the extension of collective agreements further complicated and increased the bureaucracy of the option of extension. The Committee also noted the existence of three extended sectoral collective agreements in the country (construction, tourism and hospitality, and the electricity industry). The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) section 17(2) of Act LXXIV of 2009 on Sectoral Dialogue Committees was amended so that the conditions for the extension of collective agreements are the same for collective agreements concluded within or outside a Sectoral Dialogue Committee; and (2) an examination is under way to identify the manner in which the regulation of the Act on Sectoral Dialogue Committees can effectively promote the right to conclude collective agreements, with a comparative legal study being prepared by a research institute that will analyse model regulations for a possible revision of the legislation. The Committee finally notes that the Government has not replied to its previous request for statistical information on the number, nature, and scope of collective agreements in force. Recalling that, under the terms of Article 4 of the Convention, collective bargaining should be possible and promoted at all levels, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, for the effective promotion of collective bargaining at all levels, including at levels higher than the enterprise level and to provide information on any progress in this respect; (ii) provide information on any developments with regard to the ongoing examination of the extension mechanism for collective agreements; and (iii) provide up to date statistical information on the number of collective agreements signed, the sectors concerned and the share of the workforce covered by collective agreements and, also, to provide the same statistics, where available, for works agreements.

Material scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities. In its previous comments, both under this Convention and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee requested the Government to initiate discussions with the social partners to revise the restrictions imposed on the material scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the information it had previously provided, that sections 204–208 of the Labour Code set out cogent and mandatory rules on employment at publicly-owned entities which cannot be derogated by an individual or a collective agreement (section 213(f) of the Labour Code). The Government also reiterates that such rules are necessitated by the special "legal status" and economic role of the employer in publicly-owned entities to ensure efficient management and prevent abuse of State assets, further adding that the rules prevent abuse and improve public perception regarding companies in public ownership. The Committee once again recalls that workers of state-owned commercial or industrial enterprises are fully covered by the Convention. While the special characteristics of the public service may allow for some flexibility, legislative measures taken unilaterally by the authorities to restrict the scope of negotiable issues are often incompatible with the Convention, and tripartite discussions are a particularly appropriate method of resolving these difficulties. While taking note of the justification reiterated by the Government, the Committee, also recalling the Conference Committee's conclusions in this respect, reiterates that it considers that the exclusions prescribed by sections 205–206 of the Labour Code on collective bargaining at publicly-owned entities go beyond the restrictions that are compatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take all the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to revise the restrictions on the material scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities, and to ensure that the above-mentioned provisions of the Labour Code do not impede the rights to collective bargaining guaranteed under the Convention.

The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee requested the Government to avail itself of the Office's technical assistance and that the Government informed it of initial contacts in this regard. The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of the Office's technical assistance in order to fully implement, in law and in practice, the various provisions of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that Act No. 11 of 2020 restricts the right to strike as it grants police officers significant discretion to imprison or fine trade union members for participating in or inviting others to participate in lawful strike action, and to provide information on the revision of this law and its regulations. The Committee notes the Government's response that Act No. 11 of 2020, or the Omnibus Act on Job Creation (Omnibus Act), was amended by Act No. 6 of 2023, and that it does not include the regulation of strikes. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that strikes and trade union demonstrations are regulated by Act No. 13 of 2003 on Manpower, Act No. 9 of 1998 on the freedom of public expression of opinion and Regulation No. 1 of 2005 of the Chief of the Indonesian National Police concerning guidelines on the conduct of the Indonesian National Police in handling law and order in industrial disputes, which the Committee examines below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee noted with concern the ITUC allegation of acts of police violence (including the use of water cannons and teargas resulting in the injury of 32 members of the Federation of Indonesia Metalworkers in Bekasi) and arrests made (of 183 workers in South Sumatra, 200 workers in Jakarta and a further 10 workers for striking outside working hours) in connection with a strike action by more than a million workers against the Omnibus Act. Recalling that in cases of strikes, the authorities should only resort to the use of force in exceptional circumstances and in situations of gravity where there is a serious threat of public disorder, and that such use of force must be proportionate to the circumstances, the Committee urged the Government to indicate all steps taken or envisaged to ensure the application of that principle, including by the introduction of concerted measures to ensure the effective implementation of a code of conduct for workers' demonstrations and industrial action. The Committee notes the Government's indications with regard to the outcomes of the tripartite discussions on a Code of Ethics on workers' demonstrations and industrial action, at a meeting of the National Tripartite Cooperation Body (LKS) held on 19 April 2024. The Government indicates in particular that the LKS, in cooperation with a Ministry of Manpower (MM) task force, will be responsible for monitoring the implementation of the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide any relevant information with regard to the work of the LKS and MM task force, including in particular the number and nature of cases examined, the development of criteria for assessing possible threats of public disorder, and any measure implemented by the above-mentioned entities in the performance of their mandate.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Penal Code was under revision and requested the Government to ensure that the revision excluded lawful trade union activities from the scope of sections 160 and 335 of the Code. The Committee notes that the revision of the Penal Code was concluded with the adoption of Act No. 1 of 2023 on the Penal Code (Act No. 1). The Committee also notes with interest the Government's indication to the effect that the reference to "unpleasant acts", under former section 335 of the Penal Code, was declared invalid by the Constitutional Court in 2013 (No. 1/PUU-XI/2013) and was no longer valid prior to its removal from the Penal Code in 2023. The Committee also notes that section 160 was replaced by section 246 of the Penal Code following the adoption of Act No. 1 and observes that this new provision establishes penalties for "incitement to commit crimes" or "violent opposition against the public authorities", without it being possible to determine the specific scope of the latter violation. Lastly, the Committee notes that section 7 of Regulation No. 1 provides that police officers, when they consider that a strike or trade union demonstration represents a real threat to public security, must take the necessary measures, in a firm and measurable manner in accordance with existing laws and regulations. Recalling that no one should be deprived of their freedom or be subject to penal sanctions for the mere fact of organizing or participating in a peaceful strike, the Committee trusts that the revised Penal Code, and more specifically section 246 of the Code, does not penalize peaceful trade union activities and requests the Government to provide all relevant information in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of civil servants. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the right of civil servants to form and join organizations of their own choosing, in accordance with the Convention, and to provide information on all steps taken to that end. The Committee notes the Government's recognition that the current structure of the Corps of Indonesian Civil Servants (KORPRI), a professional forum of which civil servants automatically become members upon entering into duty, does not allow it to be considered an organization within the meaning of Article 2 of the Convention or to offer civil servants a right of association equivalent to private sector organizations. The Committee also notes the Government's indication to the effect that, although KORPRI represents civil servants while performing their duties, their membership of this association does not prevent them from joining other professional entities and associations. The Government further indicates that it is drafting regulations to improve civil servant rights. In conclusion, the Committee notes the Government's wish, with technical assistance from the Office, to take the necessary measures to transform KORPRI into a democratic and independent organization that meets the requirements of the Convention, including by making changes to the applicable regulatory framework. The Committee welcomes this plan, invites the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office and requests it to provide any relevant information on the draft regulatory amendments announced.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee invited the Government to discuss the impact of Presidential Decree No. 63/2004 on vital national interests, and of Ministry of Industry Decree No. 466/2014, which enables enterprises or industrial zones to request assistance from the police and military in the event of disruption or threat to vital national interests in their jurisdiction. Having noted with regret, in its previous comment, that the application of the decrees indicated above had not yet been discussed with the social partners, despite the assertions of the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions (KSPI) and the Confederation of Indonesian Prosperity Trade Union (KSBSI) that these decrees serve to suppress the exercise of freedom of association, the Committee urged the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that such a discussion take place without delay. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the objectives of these decrees, but notes with concern that the announced discussion with the social partners has not yet taken place. Noting the Government's announcement that the 2025 agenda of the LKS includes discussions on vital national interests and industrial action, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that this meeting takes place and requests it to provide information on the outcome of the discussions.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations received on 17 September 2024 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), addressing issues dealt with by the Committee in this comment.

The Job Creation Law. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the 2023 conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) requesting the Government to adopt without delay the amendments necessary to bring the Job Creation Law into compliance with the Convention, as well as the allegations made by the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions (KSPI), the Confederation of All Indonesian Workers' Union (KSPSI) and the Indonesian Trade Union Prosperity (KSBSI) and the ITUC concerning the increased vulnerability of workers to anti-union discrimination and the undermining of the use of collective bargaining as a result of the Job Creation Law. The Committee notes that in its 2024 observations, the ITUC alleges that the Job Creation Law is having a disastrous impact on freedom of association and collective bargaining and that, in particular, workers are more vulnerable to dismissals and non-renewal of contracts when they attempt to join or form a union. The Committee also notes the concluding observations of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural rights (CESCR) issued on 14 March 2024 concerning the implementation by Indonesia of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee notes that the CESCR, after expressing its concern that the Job Creation Law negatively affects workers' rights, recommended that the Government review and amend it, in order to, inter alia, ensure the meaningful participation of trade unions in sectoral minimum wage decisions and regulate the use of temporary contracts.

The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to: (1) referring once again, to the adoption of Government Regulation No. 51 of 2023 concerning wages and to the consultation process that preceded it; and (2) expressing its readiness to benefit from ILO technical assistance in order to strengthen capacities concerning tripartite consultation.

Finally, the Committee notes Decision No. 168/PUU-XXI/2023 of the Constitutional Court dated 31 October 2024, which partially invalidates certain provisions of the Job Creation Law and requires the adoption of a new law within two years. In the context of the Convention, the Committee observes that the Court's decision addresses, inter alia, the need to give a greater role to wage councils in setting minimum wages, particularly at the sectoral and regional levels, and that it emphasizes the role of collective bargaining with trade unions in improving wages and working conditions. Recalling the Conference Committee conclusions requesting the Government to adopt without delay the amendments necessary to bring the Law on Job Creation into compliance with the Convention, the Committee expects that the Government, in full consultation with the representative social partners, will take the opportunity of the revision of the Job Creation Law required by the Constitutional Court to ensure that the content of the revised Law and its implementing regulations contributes effectively to the protection against anti-union discrimination and the promotion of collective bargaining in accordance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide any information in this regard. In line with the conclusions of the Conference Committee, the Committee hopes that the Government will avail itself of the Office's technical assistance.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, on the basis of the very low number of complaints of anti-union discrimination reported by the Government and the conclusions of the Conference Committee highlighting, in particular, the existence of significant gaps in law and practice with regard to protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requested the Government to review the existing system of protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, in order to ensure that full protection is provided against anti-union discrimination, including rapid remedies likely to impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information in this regard. It also notes the ITUC's observations alleging the greater vulnerability of workers to anti-union breaches of employment contracts in the context of the implementation of the Job Creation Law. On the basis of the above, the Committee requests the Government, after consulting the representative social partners, to take the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to: (i) establish rapid and effective remedies and mechanisms for imposing dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination; and (ii) in particular prevent and sanction acts of anti-union discrimination, including discriminatory non-renewal of contracts, which may affect workers on fixed-term contracts. The Committee further encourages the Government to avail itself of the Office's technical assistance in respect of this matter and to report on the progress achieved.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls once again its long-standing comments on the need to amend section 122 of the Manpower Act to prohibit the presence of the employer during a voting procedure to determine which trade union in an enterprise will have the right to represent workers in collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret that once again, the Government essentially repeats the information previously provided, including that the employer and the Government are only present at the vote as witnesses and that their presence does not affect the vote. Emphasizing once again the need to ensure adequate protection against acts of interference in practice, the Committee reiterates its expectation that the Government will amend section 122 of the Manpower Act to prohibit the presence of the employer during the voting procedure and to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take measures to amend sections 5, 14 and 24 of the Labour Disputes Settlement Act to ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration or a court to settle a collective bargaining process may only take place: (1) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (2) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (3) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; and (4) in the event of an acute crisis. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2023, mediation successfully resolved 8,236 of 10,297 industrial relations disputes (or 79.9 per cent) and, between January and March 2024, 598 out of 1,009 of those disputes (or 59.2 per cent). While taking due note of this information, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication of its intention to ensure that the current procedures for recourse to compulsory arbitration are maintained for all labour disputes. The Committee recalls once again that arbitration imposed by the authorities at the request of only one of the parties is, in general, contrary to the principles of collective bargaining and that the possibility for a single party to collective bargaining to submit the settlement of a labour dispute to the decision of a court has the same restrictive effects on the principle of collective bargaining as compulsory arbitration mechanisms. Consequently, the Committee once again reiterates its expectation that the Government will take steps to amend sections 5, 14 and 24 of the Labour Disputes Settlement Act to ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration or a court to settle a collective bargaining process may only take place in the above-mentioned situations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Recognition of a trade union as a collective bargaining partner. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the ITUC's comment on the excessively restrictive nature of the 50 per cent representativeness threshold required by the legislation in order to enter into negotiations. The Committee recalls that in previous comments it had noted, on the basis of the legislation (section 119 of the Manpower Act) and the Government's indications, that: (1) trade unions that do not reach the required percentage of affiliates but that receive more than 50 per cent support in a vote of all the workers in the enterprise may enter into negotiations; (2) trade unions may form a coalition to reach the above-mentioned thresholds. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that in March 2024 there were a total of 15,940 collective agreements throughout the country covering 3,901,644 workers. Noting that the total number of collective agreements appears to have fallen significantly since the Government's last report, from 18,144 to 15,940, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the possible reasons for this decrease. Recalling that the representativeness thresholds required to initiate collective bargaining must not be such as to hinder the promotion of collective bargaining, the Committee also requests the Government to initiate consultations with the social partners with a view to revising section 119 of the Manpower Act and making the conditions of access to collective bargaining more flexible. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements in force, specifying the sectors of activity concerned and the number of workers covered.

Collective bargaining at the sectoral level. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining at all levels, including at the sectoral and regional levels. The Committee notes that the Government : (1) states that sectoral collective agreements present a challenge due to the varying capacities of these companies and their workforce sizes; (2) emphasizes the importance of collective bargaining at the company level, considering the differences in capacities and business scales; and (3) welcomes the collaborative offer from the ILO to explore initiatives that promote the development of collective bargaining tailored to Indonesia's specific conditions. While taking due note of these considerations, the Committee recalls that, according to the Convention, collective bargaining should be possible at all levels and that in practice the issue is essentially a matter for the parties, who are in the best position to decide the most appropriate bargaining level including, if they so wish, by adopting a mixed system of framework agreements supplemented by local or enterprise level agreements (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 222). The Committee therefore trusts that the Government will take the necessary steps to promote collective bargaining at all levels, including at the sectoral and regional levels and hopes that it will seek the technical assistance of the Office in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide any relevant information.

Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2022, there were 435 active collective agreements and 188 trade unions representing workers in EPZs but does not indicate the number of workers covered by the applicable agreements. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements in force in EPZs, indicating the number of workers covered, as well as information, including statistical data, on any trends observed in the coverage of collective agreements concluded in these zones.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the tripartite consultations on a denial of the rights guaranteed by the Convention to workers in EPZs alleged by the ITUC, KSBSI and KSPI. The Committee notes the Government's reference to Regulations No. 12 of 2020 and No. 40 of 2021, establishing two dedicated tripartite bodies: (1) for consultations on wages and (2) for communication, consultation and deliberation on labour relations issues within EPZs. The Committee notes however once again the absence of information on specific consultations on the alleged denial of the rights recognized by the Convention to workers in EPZs. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the holding of such tripartite consultations and on any relevant outcome.

The Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to address the various points raised in this comment and that it will fully seek the technical assistance of the Office, as requested by the Conference Committee.

Iraq

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2018)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that following its June 2022 discussion concerning the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) by Iraq, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards invited the Government to accept a direct contacts mission, which took place in May 2023. The direct contacts mission, noting the firm commitment of the Government to bring national law and practice into conformity with Conventions Nos 87 and 98, identified two priorities: (i) the swift adoption of new legislation ensuring compliance with these Conventions to replace Law No. 52 of 1987 on Trade Unions; and (ii) active and constructive engagement between the Government and the social partners, with a view to ensuring that pending the entry into force of the new law, all trade unions and their leaders can exercise the rights enshrined in the Conventions without fear or constraint. The Committee recalls that the direct contacts mission, in view of the realization of these two priorities, proposed a road map involving the active support of the Office and providing for, inter alia: (i) the establishment of a tripartite technical committee for the elaboration of the new Draft Law on Trade Unions; and (ii) the strengthening of the "Coordination Council", which is tasked with consultation and resolution of conflicts and problems affecting trade union action. The Committee notes in this respect that while it examined in its previous comment a draft Trade Union Act prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs (the Ministry), a new draft prepared by the Labour Committee of the Chamber of Representatives has since then been circulated among the various stakeholders involved in the reform and gave rise to technical comments from the Office in August 2024. The Committee further notes that a delegation, whose composition included representatives of three trade union federations, attended a workshop in Geneva in September 2024 to discuss the new draft and the corresponding technical comments of the Office. In this respect, the Committee takes note of the Government's indications that the observations resulting from the workshop will be submitted to the House of Representatives and discussed with all the parties concerned with a view toward the enactment of the Act and the repeal of Law No. 52 of 1987 on Trade Unions. The Committee welcomes the continued collaboration of the Government and the House of Representatives with the Office. The Committee expects that this will lead to the adoption, in the near future, of a law on trade unions which will take full account of the Committee's comments, including its request to ensure that the new legislation fully recognizes the trade union rights of public servants and trade union pluralism, as well as reflecting the Office's technical guidance in order to ensure that the law recognizes trade union rights of foreign workers; does not restrict the right to form trade unions to certain professions (the only possible exception being the armed forces and the police); ensures that the minimum membership requirement for establishment of trade unions is set at a reasonable level; recognizes the right of workers to set up independent organizations at all levels; and respects the autonomous functioning of these organizations. The Committee expects that these points will be duly taken into account in the reform of the legislation so as to ensure its conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide a copy of the law once adopted.

Prosecution of union leaders for collection of union dues. The Committee previously noted the observations of the Federation of Iraq Trade Unions (FITU), alleging that the president of the General Federation of Iraqi Workers (GFIW), the monopolistic confederation under the 1987 law, had filed several complaints against the leaders and representatives of six independent federations, including the FITU, before the Court of Inquiry of the Federal Commission of Integrity ("Nazaha"). The FITU alleged that six trade union leaders were summoned to the Court in relation to their legitimate trade union activity and were accused of illegal raising of funds; were subjected to investigation and finally released on bail pending trial. The FITU alleged that these proceedings constituted a serious threat to the union leaders, putting them at risk of long prison sentences and fines. Furthermore, the Court may order the closure of the federations. The Committee noted that the complaint against the six union leaders concerned the collection of union dues by the federations. Welcoming the functioning of the "Coordination Council" that can address practical difficulties arising from the exercise of trade union rights, including inter-union disputes, the Committee firmly expected that no trade union member or leader would be subject to arrest, detention or criminal prosecution for their legitimate trade union activities and requested the Government to provide information on the outcome of the proceedings concerning the six union leaders referred to in the observation of the FITU. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information concerning the proceedings but points out that it maintains an impartial stance towards all union organizations. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it will take the required action under the new Trade Unions Act when the new draft is enacted. The Committee must therefore reiterate its request and expects the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the proceedings concerning the six union leaders referred to in the observations of the FITU.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that following its June 2022 discussion on the application of the Convention in Iraq, the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) invited the Government to accept a direct contacts mission. The Committee notes that the mission took place in May 2023 and that, after noting the Government's firm commitment to bring national law and practice into conformity with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), it identified two priorities: (i) the swift adoption of new legislation ensuring compliance with this Convention and Convention No. 87 to replace Act No. 52 of 1987 on trade union organization; and (ii) active and constructive engagement between the Government and the social partners, with a view to ensuring that pending the entry into force of the new law, all trade unions and their leaders are able to exercise the rights enshrined in the Conventions without fear or constraint. The Committee notes that the direct contacts mission, with a view to ensuring the achievement of these priorities, proposed a road map involving the active support of the Office and including provision for the establishment of a tripartite technical committee for the development of the new draft law on trade unions. In this regard, the Committee notes that: (i) while in its previous comment it examined a draft law on trade unions prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, a new draft law developed by the Labour Committee of the Chamber of Representatives was now focusing the attention of the various partners involved in the reform and gave rise to a technical opinion from the Office in August 2024; and (ii) a delegation, the composition of which reflected the recommendations made in the direct contacts mission road map (involving, in particular, the three main components of the country's trade union movement) went to ILO headquarters in Geneva in September 2024 to discuss this draft law and the corresponding opinions of the Office. The Committee welcomes the continued collaboration of the Government and the Chamber of Representatives with the Office. The Committee hopes that this will result in the adoption in the near future of a law on trade unions that will take fully into account its comments as well as the Office technical guidance in order to ensure the compliance of the national legislation with Conventions Nos 87 and 98.

Civil liberties. The Committee, having recalled the interdependence between trade union rights and civil liberties, requested the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure that trade unions, their leaders and members are able to exercise their rights under the Convention with full respect for their civil liberties. The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under Convention No. 87.

Trade union monopoly. Recalling that the possibility for workers of choosing the trade union which represents them is an important element of the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining, the Committee expressed the hope that any remaining obstacle to the possibility of trade union pluralism would soon be removed from the legislation. The Committee also refers in this regard to its comments under Convention No. 87.

Scope of the Convention. Public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State benefit from the rights enshrined in the Convention and to specify the legislative texts in which such rights are recognized. The Committee also requested the Government to clarify whether Revolutionary Council Resolution No. 150 of 1987 (which, according to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), prohibits the establishment of public sector trade unions) remained in force, and, if so, to ensure that the content thereof was in line with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) resolution No. 150 of 1987 remains in force; and (ii) the issue of the enjoyment of the rights contained in the Convention for the public servants in question will be discussed in the context of the preparation of the draft law on trade unions. While recalling that Convention No. 87 covers all public servants, regardless of whether they are engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee emphasizes the importance of taking the necessary measures to ensure that, in law and in practice, all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State are accorded the rights enshrined in the present Convention, which also have regard to the right to collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Legislative reform. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the content of the draft law on trade unions developed by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs and welcomed, in particular, the aspects relating to: (i) the guarantee of the right to establish and join trade union organizations, without any kind of discrimination; (ii) the extension of the right to organize to all sectors, subject to the provisions of section 3(2)(1) of the draft law; and (iii) the penalties applicable in the event of anti-union dismissal (including reinstatement) and the specific prohibition of acts of interference, for which there is no provision in the 2015 Labour Code.

At the same time, the Committee emphasized that it was important for the future legislation to: (i) remove any remaining obstacle to the possibility of trade union pluralism from the legislation; (ii) recognize the rights enshrined in the Convention for all workers in the private and public sectors covered by the Convention (while recalling as indicated above that Convention No. 87 also covers public servants engaged in the administration of the State); (iii) expressly prohibit all types of discriminatory measures based on trade union membership or trade union activities, at all stages of the contractual relationship (including hiring), as well as effectively impose sufficiently dissuasive penalties; (iv) make provision for swift and effective remedies concerning acts of interference; (v) create a legal framework, including through the establishment of quantitative and qualitative criteria for representativeness, that allows the free and voluntary exercise of the right to collective bargaining and the promotion thereof, since although Chapter 15 of the Labour Code is on collective bargaining, no collective agreements have yet been concluded in the country.

With respect to all these various points, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the observations from the seminar on the draft law on trade unions, held in Geneva in September 2024, will be communicated to the Chamber of Representatives and discussed, with all parties concerned, with a view to the adoption of the law. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the new draft law provides for the repeal of Act No. 52 of 1987 on trade union organization. While also referring to its comments under Convention No. 87, the Committee trusts that these various points will be fully taken into account in the current legislative reform process and requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office with regard to the organization of a seminar on collective bargaining. Having noted in its previous comment the complete absence of collective agreements in force in the country, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to carry out, with the technical assistance of the Office, awareness-raising and promotional activities on collective bargaining in the private and public sectors covered by the Convention, with all relevant stakeholders. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Italy

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1958)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL) and the Italian Labour Union (UIL), received on 18 July 2024, which allege a series of violations of the Convention with respect to the right to strike, the recognition of the representative trade unions and their participation in social dialogue, as well as acts of violence against trade union premises. The Committee notes that the CGIL and the UIL specifically allege: (i) the interference of the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Infrastructure and Transport (MIT), who reduced the duration of a strike in the transport sector in November 2023 from 8 to 4 hours, disregarding the role of the Strike Regulatory Authority by issuing a unilateral order to resume work, which is being appealed before the courts; (ii) changes to the rules governing representation on the National Economic Council (CNEL) for the period 2023–28, arbitrarily withdrawing one seat from the CGIL, the UIL and the Italian Trade Union Confederation (CISL), while increasing the presence of other non-representative trade union organizations that do not meet the required conditions, which has also given rise to legal action; (iii) the gradual deterioration of social dialogue with the Government, characterized by the exclusion of representative trade union organizations from the decision-making process in economic, social and labour matters, and (iv) numerous acts of vandalism against trade union premises between October 2021 and April 2023, in 13 regions and 40 cities.

With respect to the allegation concerning the reduction of the duration of the strike in the transport sector in November 2023, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) there was no violation of the right to strike by the order in question. The strike proclaimed by the CGIL and the UIL as a "general" strike was, on the contrary, considered by the competent administrative authority as a multi-sectoral strike and, therefore, subject to individual sectoral regulations; (ii) in these circumstances, the MIT's political authority assessed the situation in view of the excessive duration of the strike examined in the transport sectors (24 hours according to the Government) and the imminence of the date on which the strike was due to be called; and (iii) the MIT limited itself to exercising the power of intervention conferred by law No. 146/90, in order to protect the right to free movement. Concerning the rules governing representation on the National Economic Council (CNEL) for the period 2023–28, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it intended to renew the Council in such a way as to expand, in a balanced and transparent manner, the number of workers' and employers' organizations, without penalising the most representative organizations, with the sole aim of making social dialogue broader and more effective. Observing that the trade-union organizations concerned referred the two issues mentioned above to the administrative courts (reduction of strike duration by MIT and representation at the CNEL), the Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and to communicate the relevant Court decisions as soon as they have been adopted.

Regarding the allegations on the lack of involvement of the social partners in the process of adoption by the Government of a number of decree-laws in 2023 and 2024, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the decree-law is a legislative measure approved by the Government in cases of particular necessity and urgency, the timing of which often does not allow for prior discussion with the social partners. However, each decree-law must be converted into law by the Parliament within 60 days to confirm its legal effects. Therefore, during the process of examining and finally approving the decree-law, Parliamentary committees may consult the social partners through special hearings to obtain opinions and proposals on the various aspects falling within their remit. Stressing the importance of social dialogue in the process of adopting labour, social and economic legislation and public policies, the Committee invites the Government to ensure that regular consultations take place with representative employers' and workers' organizations and to provide information on all measures taken in this respect. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to address the CGIL and the UIL allegations of acts of violence against trade union premises.

The Committee further notes the concerns surrounding the introduction of the new Internal Security Bill (DDL Sicurezza) approved by the Chamber of Deputies in September 2024 and currently before the Senate, regarding its consequences for the legitimate exercise of trade union activity in the country, in that as currently drafted, it may affect the free exercise of peaceful demonstrations. The Committee observes in particular that article 14 of the bill provides for penalties ranging from six months to two years' imprisonment for demonstrators who, collectively, block roads or railways with their bodies. Emphasizing the fundamental importance of civil liberties for the exercise of trade union rights, and recalling that the peaceful exercise of these rights should not lead to arrest or imprisonment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to ensure, in consultation with the social partners, that the legislation does not contravene the guarantees established by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend section 6(4) of the Trade Union Act (TUA) with a view to ensuring that penalties are not imposed on workers for their membership and participation in activities of an unregistered trade union. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has noted the Committee's request and will keep it updated on progress made in this regard. Regretting the continuing lack of progress, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 6(4) of the TUA and to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 3. Interference in the financial administration of a trade union. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to restrict the Registrar's discretionary rights to carry out inspections and to request information with regard to trade union finances at any time as provided in section 16(2) of the TUA. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry will be undertaking a review of the TUA to identify and deal with the gaps as soon as possible. The Committee notes with regret the lack of progress in amending the legislation and once again urges the Government to take necessary measures to that end. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. For several years, the Committee has requested the Government to amend section 5(5) of the Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act (LRIDA) and section 3(1) of its regulations with a view to ensuring that the threshold required for entering into collective bargaining does not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a consultant has been engaged to review the LRIDA in the 2024–25 fiscal year and that both the threshold required for entering into collective bargaining and the limitations on collective bargaining denounced by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2015 will be taken into consideration. Highlighting the long-standing nature of its request, the Committee firmly expects that the Government will take without further delay the necessary measures, to amend, in consultation with the representative social partners, its legislation in order to: (i) ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions are given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members; (ii) recognize the right of any organization which in a previous ballot failed to secure a sufficiently large number of votes to request a new election after a stipulated period; and (iii) recognize the right of any new organization other than the previously certified organization to demand a new ballot after a reasonable period has elapsed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee previously noted the observations of the Jamaica Confederation of Trade Unions (JCTU) transmitted with the Government's report in 2021, which alleged that the adoption of negotiation protocols modified the modalities of collective bargaining by allegedly precluding direct interactions between workers' representatives and decision-makers in the public sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the negotiation protocols in the public sector, established to create a more structured and transparent bargaining process, have no new implications; (ii) in 2015, a policy was introduced to guide government entities, fostering positive relations between management and employees, trust and good faith negotiations; (iii) In 2017, a Public Sector Negotiation Framework was established. This framework facilitates the completion of negotiations and provides mechanisms for resolving impasses. Consequently, the Government asserts that the JCTU's allegation that direct interaction with decision-makers is the normal process suggests a misleading of the facts. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the mentioned negotiation protocols and policy. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded in this sector and the number of workers covered.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) there are currently 17 collective agreements in force in several industries, including transportation, financial services, aviation and manufacturing; (ii) it lacks data on the existence of Joint Industrial Councils; (iii) however, the National Minimum Wage Advisory Commission provides recommendations on minimum wage across industries; and (iv) the Industrial Relations Department supports unions and organizations in conducting Representational Rights Polls by managing claims, coordinating dates, presiding over the polls and overseeing the final ballot count. On the basis of these elements, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to effectively promote collective bargaining at all levels, including at the multi-employer level and sectoral level. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, specifying the number of workers covered.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the following observations concerning matters addressed in this comment, as well as the Government's replies thereto: the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) and of the Japan Business Federation (Nippon Keidanren), transmitted with the Government's report; the observations of the Rentai Union Suginami, the Rentai Workers' Union, Itabashi-ku Section, the Apaken Kobe (Casual/Temporary/Part-time Non-regular Workers' Union) and the Union Rakuda (Kyoto Municipality Related Workers' Independent Union), received on 1 September 2024. The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024. Finally, the Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, and the reply of the Government thereto.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2024 concerning the application of the Convention. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee requested the Government to consider, in line with the Convention and in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations: (i) further improvements of the status and labour conditions of firefighters; (ii) what categories of prison officers are considered part of the police, thus exempted from the right to organize, and those categories that are not considered part of the police, and having the right to organize; and (iii) with regard to public service employees: (a) ensure that the National Personnel Authority (NPA) procedures guarantee effective, impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration procedures; (b) continue to examine carefully the autonomous labour–employer relations system and seek solution to the various obstacles to it, in line with the Convention; and (c) review the Local Public Service Act and any other related legislation to ensure that local public sector workers enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of firefighting personnel. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize for firefighting personnel. For more than two decades, the Government has been referring to the operation of the Fire Defence Personnel Committee (FDPC) system, which it presented as an alternative to the right to organize. The role of the FDPC was to examine proposals on working conditions of personnel and to submit its conclusions to the chief of the fire department. Surveys directed to fire defence headquarters are regularly conducted to gather information on the deliberations and results of the FDPC. In its report, the Government refers to specific surveys, conducted in 2022 and 2023, aimed at assessing the operation of the FDPC system and seeking improvement. The Government also reports that, in July 2024, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications (MIC) held the twelfth consultation with the workers' representatives to discuss the issues related to the FDPC system, based on the results of the survey on the FDPC's operational status and recent efforts to improve the operation of the system. On this occasion, the MIC explained that it would conduct further analysis of the operational status, hold interviews with some fire departments and conduct a survey with new items. The MIC intends to work to streamline the operation of the system. The Government adds that through the FDPC system, about 40 per cent of the opinions which have been deliberated were decided as "appropriate to be implemented", and about 50 per cent or more of them have been realized. Those opinions are urgent needs of the fire defence personnel such as requests for countermeasures for harassment and establishment of Epidemic Prevention Work Allowance, which is paid to ambulance team members and others engaged in work to deal with COVID-19. The Government intends to continue to have social dialogue with social partners regularly and to strive for mutual understanding on the FDPC system.

The Committee notes the views of the IOE and of Nippon Keidanren that it can be argued that the firefighting service in Japan, which is responsible for dealing with natural disasters, is of similar importance for the protection of people's lives, health and property as the police in a narrower sense, given the frequent natural disasters in Japan. The organizations argue that the reasons in favour of excluding the police and armed forces from the scope of the Convention apply equally to the fire service in Japan. The IOE encourages the Government to continue to pursue an approach that combines compliance with the requirements of the Convention as well as with its specific national needs and suggests to the Government to seek further guidance and ideas from good practice in other countries with similar systems and needs.

According to the ITUC, the idea that the Government can just categorize firefighters or other public servants as police or having a command or rank structure or as gun-holding personnel to exclude them from the guarantees provided by the Convention is arbitrary and inconsistent with the scope of the Convention. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the basic functions of the Japanese police include, for example, the authority to investigate crimes, the authority to make arrests, and the carrying and use of weapons for these purposes. Firefighters do not have these powers. They are emergency workers and, to that extent, peace officers. This is the same for a majority of prison officers. Therefore, the way the Government is treating these categories of workers for the purposes of the right to organize is discriminatory. The justification for any limitations on this enabling right must find grounds in Article 9 of the Convention. In the absence of this justification, the default position should be that, in accordance with their legitimate expectation, firefighters and public servants can form or join a trade union of their choice – with any necessary limitations arising from their functions. The ITUC invites the Government to recognize that during the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic, the personnel involved in emergency services showed a high sense of mission and a high level of professionalism to protect the lives of patients without regard for the risk of infection to themselves and their families. The idea that these colleagues will be less patriotic or professional if they exercise their right to organize cannot be further from the truth and the reality. Their professionalism only increased their popularity among the population and created a real leverage for the improvement of their rights. The sanitary crisis during the COVID-19 pandemic led to worsened working conditions for emergency personnel, particularly the ambulance services. Despite clear proposals gathered from the first-responder firefighters, their organization was unable to engage with management on urgent remedial measures in the absence of a system where labour and management could cooperate. The Government has also provided information regarding the use of the FDPC system, even during the COVID crisis which enabled the review of about 5,000 opinions per year – of which 40 per cent are considered appropriate for implementation. The ITUC is of the view that soliciting opinions is not the same as having the right to be consulted or to negotiate.

The JTUC–RENGO is of the view that after the Noto Peninsula Earthquake that occurred in January 2024, the firefighting organizations established a wide-area emergency and support system, such as lifesaving and rescue operations, more rapidly than the police and the Self-Defense Forces. This is due to the high sense of mission of firefighters enabling the immediate nationwide emergency system and is completely unrelated to the approval or disapproval of the right to organize. The FDPC requires the lengthy procedures of "submission of opinions, summarizing of opinions, deliberations, report to the Fire Chief and the Fire Chief's judgment, budget request to the head of the municipality and relevant departments, and final adjustment", and the Government has done nothing to respond to this. The FDPC cannot stand as a compensatory measure for the right to organize.

The Committee is bound to recall its regularly expressed view that the implementation policy for the FDPC remains distinct from the recognition of the right to organize under Article 2 of the Convention.

It notes that views remain divergent between the Government and the workers' organizations on the meaningfulness of the consultations held under the FDPC system and notes with regret that no progress was made towards bringing positions closer together on the right to organize of firefighting personnel. The Committee expresses its firm expectation that continuing consultations with the social partners and other stakeholders concerned will contribute to further progress towards ensuring the right of firefighting personnel to form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on developments in this regard.

Right to organize of prison staff. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize of prison staff. The Committee notes that the Government recalls its position that prison officers are included in the police, that this view was accepted by the Committee on Freedom of Association in its 12th and 54th Reports, and that granting the right to organize to the personnel of penal institutions would pose difficulty for the appropriate performance of their duties and the proper maintenance of discipline and order in the penal institutions, especially in cases of an emergency, when it is required to bring the situation under control, by force if necessary. Following the Government's decision to grant expanded opportunities for the personnel of penal institutions to express their opinions in the eight regional correctional headquarters across the country, sessions took place with the participation of 230 general staff members (from 78 penal institutions) in 2023. The participants exchanged opinions on improving the work environment, on staff training and on the reduction of the workload. Furthermore, the Government introduced "consultation services for staffs", accepting anonymous consultations/complaints, with the Correction Bureau, Regional Correction Headquarters and Training Institution. The Government promoted work–life balance by setting a "Strengthening Consultation Period" not only within the correctional organizations, but also through various services provided by external organizations such as the National Personnel Authority (NPA). Since April 2024, mental health counsellors have been assigned to all penal institutions to enhance mental health measures for correctional staff.

The Committee notes the IOE and Nippon Keidanren's observations supporting the Government's view that prison officers should be considered part of the police. The IOE considers, however, that it is important to improve the working conditions and treatment of prison officers, and therefore encourages the Government to further strengthen its efforts to ensure that the measures function effectively as an alternative to not granting the right to organize.

The Committee notes that according to JTUC–RENGO, the various measures described by the Government to provide opportunities for the personnel of penal institutions to express their opinions on their working conditions is not equivalent to guaranteeing them the right to organize. In addition, JTUC–RENGO deeply regrets that no action was taken by the Government to consult the social partners on the classification of prison officers considered part of the police and the classification of prison officers not considered part of the police, as called for in the 2018 conclusions of the Conference Committee.

While appreciating the information on the Government's latest initiatives to give opportunities to the personnel of penal institutions to provide their opinions on various aspects, including on their working conditions, and on measures taken in the past year to enhance welfare for the correctional personnel following consultation of the staff, the Committee is bound to repeat its view that these initiatives remain distinct from the recognition of the right to organize under Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has again failed to engage in consultation with the social partners to determine the categories of prison officers that may form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests. In this regard, the Committee again recalls that, in previous reports, the Government referred to the following distinction among staff in penal institutions: (i) prison officers with a duty of total operations in penal institutions, including conducting security services with the use of physical force, who are allowed to use small arms and light weapons;

(ii) penal institution staff other than prison officers who are engaged directly in the management of penal institutions or the treatment of inmates; and (iii) penal institution staff designated, by virtue of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to carry out duties of judicial police officials with regard to crimes which occur in penal institutions and who have the authority to arrest, search and seize. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to engage without further delay in consultations with the social partners and other stakeholders concerned to determine the necessary measures to ensure that prison officers, other than those with the specific duties of the judicial police, may form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests, and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard.

Article 3. Denial of basic labour rights to public service employees. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments on the need to ensure basic labour rights for public service employees, in particular that they enjoy the right to industrial action without risk of sanctions, with the only exception being public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and workers employed in essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes the general information provided once again by the Government on its overall approach, which remains to continue to hear opinions from employee organizations. The Government refers once again to the procedures of the NPA presented as an effective and impartial compensatory guarantee for public service employees whose basic labour rights are restricted. The Government indicates that the NPA held 186 official meetings with employees' organizations in 2023 and 111 meetings in 2024 (as of September), making recommendations enabling working conditions of public service employees to be brought into line with the general conditions of society. In preparation of its 2024 recommendation on the "Improvement of remuneration system in response to the change of society and civil service" (comprehensive revision of various remuneration systems including salaries and allowances), the NPA has heard employee organizations' opinions from the early phases of the process. The recommendations include, inter alia, measures to improve the salary of young employees, especially those working in rural areas and who are new high school graduates, and to raise the maximum amount of the commuter allowance. The Government reiterates that these compensatory measures are appropriate to maintain working conditions of public service employees.

The Committee notes the Nippon Keidanren observations reiterating its support for the Government's intention to continue to carefully review and consider measures for an autonomous labour–employer relations system, taking into account views from employees' organizations.

The Committee notes the observations from the JTUC-RENGO regretting that the Government's position on the autonomous labour–employer relations system has not evolved and the Government's failure to initiate consultation with the organizations concerned. Furthermore, JTUC-RENGO reiterates that the NPA recommendations system is an extremely incomplete mechanism in which the drafting of the relevant legislation is left to political decision, making it obvious that such a mechanism falls short as a compensatory measure. JTUC-RENGO deplores that the reality of the "hearing and exchange of opinions with employee organizations" at meetings is limited to simply taking note of the opinions of the employee organizations. JTUC–RENGO regrets that on all occasions. the Government merely and invariably repeats its statement made in 2013 in the House of Representatives that "an autonomous industrial relations system would have a wide range of issues and as citizens' understanding has not been gained yet, it will be necessary to continue to consider this carefully". JTUC–RENGO once again deplores the evident lack of intention on the part of the Government to reconsider the legal system regarding the basic labour rights of public service employees.

Deploring the fact that the Government again fails to provide any sign of progress on the matter, the Committee urges the Government to engage without further delay in consultations with the social partners and other stakeholders concerned to determine the necessary measures to ensure that public service employees, who are not exercising authority in the name of the State, enjoy fully their basic labour rights, in particular the right to industrial action. Moreover, in the absence of information on tangible measures in this regard, the Committee again urges the Government to resume consultations with the social partners concerned for the review of the current system with a view to ensuring effective, impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration procedures, in which the parties have confidence and can participate at all stages, and in which the awards, once made, will be fully and promptly implemented. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on meaningful steps taken in this regard.

Local public service employees. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, representative organizations in the local public sector had referred to the adverse impact of the entry into force of the revised Local Public Service Act in April 2020 on their right to organize on the following grounds: (i) non-regular local public service employees and their unions are not covered by the general labour law that provides for basic labour rights and their ability to appeal to the labour relations commission in case of alleged unfair labour practice; (ii) the new system, which aimed at limiting the use of part-time staff on permanent duties (through special service positions appointed by fiscal year just as regular service employees), has the effect of increasing the number of workers stripped of their basic labour rights; (iii) the conditional yearly employment system in place has created job anxiety and weakens union action; and (iv) these situations further call for the urgent restoration of basic labour rights to all public service employees. The Committee observes that, in its latest observations, JTUC–RENGO reiterates its submission made in 2021 that, while the legal amendments are a step to ensure proper appointment of special service personnel and temporary appointment employees, the basic labour rights of local public service employees remain unaddressed and should be addressed as early as possible in the overall framework of the restoration of basic labour rights to all civil servants.

In addition, in their observations, the Rentai Union Suginami, the Rentai Workers' Union, Itabashi-ku Section, the Apaken Kobe (Casual/Temporary/Part-time Non-regular Workers' Union) and the Union Rakuda (Kyoto Municipality Related Workers' Independent Union) inform of a lawsuit filed in March 2023 by a joint labour union in Tokyo that includes foreign nationals (Tozen Union) against the Tokyo Metropolitan Government, claiming that the deprivation of basic labour rights violates the Constitution. As the MIC has agreed to participate in the case as a party to the lawsuit, the trade unions consider that this case will raise public awareness about the situation in which non-regular local government civil servants have been placed, demonstrating the connection between the protection of fundamental labour rights and the maintenance and improvement of working conditions. More generally, the trade unions call on the Government to disseminate the recommendations made by the ILO supervisory bodies on the Local Public Service Act to national and local government officials and legislators, and to inform the public at large. This dissemination could include posting on the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare website and press release.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates that it will carefully examine what the basic labour rights of local public service employees should be in a manner consistent with the measures for the labour–employer relations system of national public service employees, as prescribed by the supplementary provision of the Civil Service Reform Act. To this end, it will continue to exchange views with employees' organizations concerned. The Committee notes Nippon Keidanren's observations supporting the position of the Government for careful examination regarding the basic labour rights of local public service employees. It also notes the IOE's encouragement to continue these consultations.

Noting with regret the absence of any concrete action by the Government to address the matter, the Committee is once again bound to observe that the legal amendments to the Local Public Service Act that entered into force in April 2020 for local public service employees had the effect of broadening the category of public sector workers whose rights under the Convention are not fully ensured. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to expedite without further delay its consideration of the autonomous labour–employer relations system, in consultation with the social partners concerned to ensure that municipal unions are not deprived of their long-held trade union rights through the introduction of these amendments. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on meaningful steps in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3. Consultations on a time-bound action plan of measures for the autonomous labour–employer relations system. The Committee deeply regrets that since 2018, the Government has failed to take any concrete step to follow-up on the specific request of the Conference Committee to define with the social partners concerned a time-bound plan of action to give effect to the Conference Committee's recommendations. In its report, the Government once again merely repeats that it continues to carefully examine how to respond to the conclusions and recommendations formulated by the Conference Committee. The Government states its intention to conduct new exchanges of opinion with the employers' and workers' organization based on the June 2024 conclusions of the Conference Committee. Observing that JTUC–RENGO calls for setting a two-year limit for the formulation of an action plan to address the matter, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO) provided with the Government's report, as well as the Government's reply thereto. It also notes the observations of the Japan Business Federation (NIPPON-KEIDANDREN), communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the steps taken to engage in consultations with the social partners so as to ensure collective bargaining rights for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes that the Government once again merely recalls that: (i) the fundamental rights at work of public service employees are, to some degree, restricted, due to the distinctive status and the public nature of their functions, performed in the common interest of citizens; (ii) the measures for an autonomous labour–employer relations system are issues that should be considered carefully while continuing to exchange opinions with workers' organizations, since a wide range of issues remain to be understood by the public, making further in-depth discussion of those issues necessary; and (iii) public servants benefit from the National Personnel Authority (NPA) recommendation system as an effective and impartial compensatory measure for public servants whose fundamental rights at work are restricted. In particular, the Government indicates that the NPA held 186 official meetings with employees' organizations in 2023 and 111 meetings in 2024 (up until September) to develop recommendations to align the working conditions of public service employees with the general conditions in the private sector. For example, in preparing its 2024 recommendation on "Improvement of the pay system in response to changes in society and the public service" (a comprehensive review of the different pay systems, including wages and allowances), the NPA heard the views of employees' organizations from the initial stages of the review and submitted the elements to be considered in the planned review for their opinions. The Government therefore reaffirms that these compensatory measures maintain appropriately the working conditions of public service employees.

The Committee notes the observations of the JTUC-RENGO which complains that the Government has not engaged in any meaningful consultations on the autonomous labour–employer relations system. In these circumstances, the employers simply play a minimal role when required to enter into in negotiations under section 108–5 of the Public Service Act (which provides that the competent authorities concerned shall place themselves in the position to respond to any proposal by a registered trade union organization to negotiate on the remuneration of public servants, their hours of work or other conditions of work, or in connection therewith, on matters pertaining to lawful activities, including social and welfare activities). The Committee also notes the observations of NIPPON KEIDANREN, which reiterates its support for the Government's intention to continue to carefully examine and consider measures for an autonomous labour–employer relations system, taking into account the views of employees' organizations.

The Committee recalls that it drew the Government's attention to the need to ensure the promotion of collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State for the first time in its observation of 1994. The Committee regrets to note once again that the Government's report does not contain any information on substantive measures in this respect. The Committee is bound to reiterate its comments and therefore firmly expects the Government to make every effort to expedite its consultations with the social partners concerned and adopt measures for the establishment of the autonomous labour–employer relations system that will ensure collective bargaining rights for all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning of the NPA recommendation system as a compensatory measure for the denial of collective bargaining rights to public servants.

Collective bargaining rights of national forestry project staff. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the steps taken to ensure that national forestry project staff are afforded all guarantees under the Convention, including the right to bargain collectively. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of the JTUC–RENGO, which indicates that no progress has been achieved in this respect and denounces the lack of will on the part of the Government to resolve the issue. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it conducts an annual exchange of opinions with workers' organizations with regard to working conditions in the forestry sector. The views and requests received are communicated promptly to the ministries and agencies responsible for the supervision of the working conditions system, and those that can be adopted are swiftly implemented. Thus in 2021, a centralized consultation system was established to promote measures to prevent harassment; in 2022, maternity and postnatal leave was paid in order to improve the salary of part-time employees; and in 2023, the wage regulations of the Forestry Agency were amended to increase the applicable wages.

While noting the implementation of measures to improve working conditions in national forestry projects, the Committee is bound to recall once again its view that the staff of these national projects are not among the category of workers that may be excluded from the scope of the Convention and should therefore enjoy the right to collective bargaining. Regretting the lack of progress in this respect, the Committee expects the Government to engage without further delay in substantive consultations with the representative organizations concerned in order to ensure that national forestry project staff are afforded all guarantees under the Convention, including the right to collective bargaining.

Full guarantee of the Convention for local public servants. The Committee previously noted that legal amendments that entered into force in 2020 for local public servants have the effect of broadening the category of public sector workers whose rights under the Convention are not fully guaranteed. It requested the Government to expedite its consideration of the autonomous labour–employer relations system so as to guarantee that the rights provided by the Convention cover local public servants without distinction, and that the right to collective bargaining of municipal unions is not impaired by the legal amendments introduced. The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that the fundamental rights of local public servants must be taken into consideration at the same time as measures for the labour–employer relations system for national public service employees, in order to ensure consistency. Recalling that the measures relating to the autonomous labour–employer relations system for the national public service are confronted by a wide range of issues and have not yet been understood by the public, the Government indicates again that it is a matter that must be considered while continuing to exchange opinions with employees' organizations. The Government reiterates that it will conduct a full review of the fundamental rights of local public servants on the basis of the national public service reform review.

Once again, the Committee is bound to recall that the Convention covers all workers and employers, and their respective organizations, in both the private and public sectors, regardless of whether the service is essential. The only exceptions authorized concern the armed forces and the police, as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State. It also recalls that the rights and safeguards set out in the Convention apply to all workers irrespective of the type of employment contract, regardless of whether or not their employment relationship is based on a written contract, or on a contract for an indefinite term (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 168). The Committee expects the Government to provide information on tangible progress in the consideration of the autonomous labour–employer relation system so as to ensure the full enjoyment by all local public service officials of the rights contained in the Convention, including the right to collective bargaining. Furthermore, the Committee expects this review to ensure that the right to collective bargaining of municipal unions is not undermined by the introduction of legal amendments.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 6 of the Convention. Scope of application of the Convention. Foreign workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the legal restrictions to the freedom of association of foreign workers, in addition to the existing union monopoly, have strongly contributed to a situation where, in many sectors foreign workers have no access to collective bargaining, while in some others, their bargaining power is significantly constrained in practice. On that basis, the Committee urged the Government to repeal section 98(e)(1) of the Labour Code (pursuant to which foreign workers do not have the right to establish trade unions) and section 7(a) of the Jordanian Teachers' Association Act (hereinafter the JTA Act) (pursuant to which foreign workers cannot join the JTA) and requested it to promote collective bargaining in the sectors where foreign workers are highly represented. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that pursuant to sections 98(e) and (f) of the Labour Code, while non-Jordanian workers may join trade unions, they do not have the right to establish trade unions, and that amending section 98(e) would lead to a violation of the Constitution, which grants the right to establish trade unions only to Jordanians. Regarding section 7(a) of the JTA Act, the Government reiterates that in accordance with section 19(d) of the JTA Act, amendments may be proposed only by the board of the union to the central authority of the association, which is then forwarded to the Minister to take the necessary legal measures. The Committee also notes the Government's reference to the fact that the collective agreements concluded (46 in 2023 and 16 the first half of 2024) cover both Jordanian and non-Jordanian citizens). Noting the Government's reiterated arguments concerning the legislative review of the above-mentioned provisions, the Committee once again recalls that States have an obligation to take effective measures in their domestic legislations as well as in practice to comply with the Conventions they have ratified. In view of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal the legal provisions that exclude foreign workers from the right to directly engage in collective bargaining, in particular section 98(e)(1) of the Labour Code and section 7(a) of the JTA Act. It also requests the Government to promote collective bargaining in all sectors where foreign workers are highly represented and to provide detailed information on collective agreements concluded therein, specifically indicating the number of migrant workers covered by them.

Domestic workers. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on measures taken to amend the Labour Code or Regulation No. 90 of 2009, as amended by Regulation No. 64 of 2020 on domestic work, which, as previously noted, do not grant domestic workers the rights to organize and bargain collectively. It notes the Government's indication that no domestic workers have joined the pre-existing sectoral union, the Union of General Services and Free Professions, which, pursuant to Decision No. 2022/45 of the Minister of Labour dated 18 July 2022, domestic workers have the right to join. The Committee once again urges the Government to take appropriate measures to revise the Labour Code or the Regulation on domestic work with a view to expressly recognizing the right of domestic workers to organize and bargain collectively. It once again requests the Government to promote collective bargaining in the domestic work sector and provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Agricultural workers. Concerning the Committee's request on measures to promote collective bargaining in the agricultural sector, the Committee notes the Government's reiterated reference to activities undertaken by the pre-existing sectoral union, the General Trade Union for Workers in Water, Agriculture and Food Industries, aimed at organizing agricultural workers and training them on the basics of union work. In this context, the Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that the first collective labour contract for workers in the agricultural sector was deposited in March 2024. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the promotion of collective bargaining in the agriculture sector, and, also, to provide information on the number of workers covered by the collective agreement referred to above as well as a copy of the agreement.

Workers aged between 16 and 18 years. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that minors between 16 and 18 years of age have access to employment but are prohibited from joining trade unions as per section 98(f) of the Labour Code and requested the Government to amend the law in this respect. Noting that the Government reiterates its previous indications which relate to questions of legal liability for holding trade union office or being a founder of a trade union, the Committee emphasizes that minors who have reached the minimum legal age for admission to employment, both as workers and apprentices, should be able to join trade unions and to exercise their collective bargaining rights. The Committee notes with regret that there has been no progress in this respect. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 98(f) of the Labour Code to grant the rights under the Convention to all workers having reached the legal age of admission to work. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Education sector workers. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that members of the Jordanian Teachers Association (hereinafter the JTA), including public sector teachers (making up the majority of its members and being governed by the JTA Act, which does not provide for collective bargaining rights) and private sector teachers (who make up the minority of its members), did not appear to enjoy the right to collective bargaining. It also noted that at least two cases concerning executives and members of the JTA were pending before the court, including: (1) the case concerning the dissolution by judicial decision of the JTA executive board; and (2) a penal case involving charges of incitement to hatred, disturbing the order at an educational institution, instigating an unlawful assembly, and misuse of authority and wasting public money. The Committee also noted the ITUC's observations alleging persecution of the members of the JTA by the authorities, and the arrest and detention of 14 of its leading members. It also noted the ITUC's indications that although the organization had restarted its activities, its leadership had been replaced and its members faced restrictions in organizing collective actions.

Recalling that the right to collective bargaining must be guaranteed for workers in both public and private educational institutions, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government does not provide information on any measures taken in this respect for members of the JTA, including any new information on the above-mentioned cases before the courts. While it notes the Government's reference to a reply by letter in November 2023 to the observations made by the ITUC, this letter was not attached with the Government's report. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to: (i) take all the necessary measures, including legislative measures, to effectively recognize in law and effectively respect in practice the right to collective bargaining of the members of the JTA and all workers in public and private educational institutions; and (ii) provide information on the outcome of all penal and civil cases pending against the JTA and its members, including the identities of workers charged in the aforementioned cases, the trade union offices assumed by them, and the concrete acts that have led to these charges. Finally, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the ITUC.

Workers not included in the 17 sectors recognized by the Government. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 98(d) of the Labour Code, which provides for a closed list of industries and economic activities in which one trade union per sector may be established, is incompatible with the principles of the Convention, as it will inevitably have the effect of excluding entire categories of workers from the right to establish and join organizations, and therefore from exercising the right to collective bargaining.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to provide information on any progress made as regards to its request to review and repeal section 98(d) and take measures to ensure that workers in all sectors covered by the Convention have the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Committee recalls that establishing a limited list of occupations with a view to recognizing the right to associate freely is contrary to the right of workers without distinction whatsoever to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to resolve this long-standing issue by repealing section 98(d) of the Labour Code and taking effective measures without further delay to ensure that workers in all sectors without distinction can exercise their right to organize and bargain collectively through the organization of their choosing. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously noted that following amendments to section 139 of the Labour Code in 2023, fines for employers in breach of the Code including acts of interference had increased to up to 1,000 Jordanian dinars (US$1,410). It noted that these fines, which can neither be adjusted with inflation nor adapted in proportion to the size of the enterprise, may not be sufficiently deterrent in the long term and in cases in which the interfering employer disposes of considerable financial resources.

The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates its previous response and refers to the above-mentioned increase of the fines through the legislative amendments in 2023. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to review section 139 of the Labour Code, in full consultation with the social partners, with a view to effectively strengthening the penalties for acts of interference, so as to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive and requests it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Trade union monopoly. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that there is a situation of union monopoly in Jordan, where 17 sectoral unions all affiliated to a single confederation, are the only recognized workers' organizations. It noted that this situation is based on sections 98(d) and 102(c) of the Labour Code and Decision No. 2022/45 of the Minister of Labour, which classifies the industries and economic activities in which trade unions may be established.

The Committee notes that the Government once again reiterates that the objective of such a classification of recognized sectors and non-recognition of new trade unions in any of the sectors with an already existing trade union is to avoid fragmentation and conflict of interest. The Committee notes with regret the lack of progress on this very important and long-standing issue and recalls that the right of workers to free and voluntary collective bargaining should include the right to be represented in collective bargaining by the organization of their choice. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to remove all obstacles to trade union pluralism or the right of workers to establish and join trade unions of their own choosing, by: (i) repealing section 98(d) of the Labour Code and Decision 2022/45 of the Minister of Labour; and (ii) taking effective measures to promote trade union pluralism and the freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining of all workers. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the absence of a legal framework explicitly recognizing the right to collective bargaining of public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State. It also noted the Government's indications that Government employees may establish unions for the defence of their interests, provided that that they are established through special laws, but that no such special legislation had been issued besides the JTA Act.

In response to the Committee's request for legislative measures in this respect, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information or copies of any special regulations or legislations adopted for the creation of trade unions by public sector employees. Recalling the need for measures to guarantee the right to organize and collectively bargain for all workers in the public sector except those engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) adopt legislation enabling all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to establish organizations to defend their interests; (ii) ensure that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State have an effective framework in which they may engage in collective negotiations over their working and employment conditions through the trade union of their choice, for example, by revising Civil Service Regulation No. 9 of 2020, or by extending the scope of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance regarding the issues raised in this comment.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

In its previous comment, the Committee welcomed the Plan of Action, elaborated with the participation of the social partners, to give effect to the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies and expected that all measures to that end would be taken within the time limits set. While noting the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in May 2023, as examined below, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government's latest report contains no new information on the measures taken to address the Committee's previous comments. The Committee therefore expects that the Government's next report will contain information on the effect given to the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, as outlined below.

In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information in relation to: (i) the situation of Mr Yerlan Baltabai and Ms Larisa Kharkova, two former trade union leaders who had served their respective sentences (after they had been found guilty of the alleged misappropriation of funds) but remained prevented from holding a trade union office pursuant to the provisions of the Criminal Code; and, in this respect, (ii) on the proposals to amend the relevant sections of the Criminal Code so as to remove an additional punishment in the form of a ban on holding a public office (including trade union leadership posts) or a prohibition to engage in "public activities". The Committee notes with regret from the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee in May 2023 that this proposal was not supported by the interdepartmental working group on monitoring the application of the Criminal and Criminal Procedure Codes. The Committee further notes with regret that the Government provides no information on the situation of Mr Baltabai and Ms Kharkova. Noting the Government's indication to the 2023 Conference Committee that despite the lack of support for amendment of the Criminal Code by the interdepartmental working group, the work towards the amendment of the relevant provisions will continue as part of the implementation of the Plan on Further Measures in the field of human rights and the rule of law, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on all progress made in that respect.

The Committee further notes with regret the absence of progress made in investigating the assault, in 2018, on Mr Dmitry Senyavsky, a former trade union leader. Recalling that the Plan of Action included steps to be taken with a view to finding the perpetrators before the end of 2022, the Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts in investigating the incident with a view to bringing the perpetrators to justice, and to report on all progress in this regard.

In its previous comment, the Committee observed with concern that the Government had not responded to the statements made by several speakers during the discussions at the 2022 Conference Committee that the extremely brutal repression of the Zhanaozen strike (in 2011) had resulted in 17 deaths and some 100 injuries among the strikers, and urged the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to establish an independent investigation into the events in Zhanaozen, with a view to elucidating all facts and determining responsibilities so that healing and reconciliation can begin to take place. The Committee notes with deep regret the absence of any new information in this regard. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide information on any measures taken in consultation with the social partners.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish organizations without prior authorization. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to take additional steps to resolve the issue of registration of the affiliates of the Sectoral Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex (Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers). The Committee notes from the information submitted by the Government to the Conference Committee in 2023 that the amendments to the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers' charter (to change the union's legal address) was registered and regrets that no further information was provided by the Government in respect of the Committee's previous request. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide information on the status of registration of the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers and its affiliates.

The Committee previously requested the Government to amend the Law on Trade Unions so as to ensure that the requirements imposed on trade unions to be recognized as sectoral did not impede, in practice, the establishment of unions at that level. The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee in 2023 that the requirements for the establishment of a sectoral trade union were being reconsidered and that contrary to the current obligation imposed on sectoral trade unions to have representative offices in more than half of the country's regions, it is proposed to provide that a sectoral trade union should have representative offices in the territory of more than half of the regions where enterprises in a particular industry are located. The Committee regrets that no further information has been provided by the Government in this respect. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to amend the Law on Trade Unions, in consultation with the social partners, so as to ensure that the establishment of sectoral trade unions is not impeded, and to inform it of all progress made in this regard.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on developments with regard to a proposal to amend the national legislation, by the first quarter of 2023, to simplify registration by replacing the current procedure with a notification procedure for trade unions wishing to acquire legal personality or allowing trade unions to function without registering and thus, without obtaining legal personality. Noting with regret that the Government provides no new information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its request and expects the Government to provide information on all progress made, including a copy of the amendments once adopted.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged to review section 402 of the Criminal Code so as to ensure that simply calling for a strike action, even one declared illegal by the courts, does not result in detention or imprisonment. The Committee notes from the information submitted by the Government in 2023 that it was considering to convert the criminal offence covered by section 402(1) of the Criminal Code to an administrative offence while still criminalizing actions provoking continued participation in a strike, recognized by the court as illegal, if they cause significant harm to the rights and legitimate interests of citizens or organizations or the legally protected interests of society or the State, or caused mass riots. The Committee regrets the absence of any new information on the review of section 402 of the Criminal Code. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Article 5. The right of organizations to receive financial assistance from international organizations of workers and employers. In its previous comment, the Committee expected that the necessary measures would be taken, without delay, to ensure that workers' and employers' organizations were not prevented from receiving financial or other assistance from international workers' and employers' organizations. While noting the Government's indication to the 2023 Conference Committee that the International Trade Union Confederation and the International Organisation of Employers will be included in the list of international organizations which can provide grants to their Kazakhstani affiliates, the Committee regrets the absence of information on whether the expressed intention has resulted in an amendment of the relevant Ordinance. The Committee reiterates its request and expects the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any new development in relation to the draft law on employers' organizations.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 145 and 154 of the 2014 Criminal Code, under which acts of interference in the functioning of social organizations and/or trade unions are punishable by a fine or imprisonment. The Committee notes with regret that, once again, the Government does not provide information in this respect. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the application of the above-mentioned legislative provisions in practice.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 20 of the Labour Code, in order to ensure that the position of a representative union, even if it does not represent 50 per cent of the workforce, is not undermined by elected representatives. Noting with regret the absence of a Government's reply, the Committee requests once again the Government to amend section 20 of the Labour Code in consultation with the social partners in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention and so as to eliminate the contradiction with other provisions of the Labour Code, notably section 1(44) providing that workers are represented by trade unions or, in absence thereof, by other elected representatives. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all steps taken to that end.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that pursuant to section 97(2) of the Code on Administrative Breaches (2014) and 158(5) of the Labour Code, an unfounded refusal to conclude a collective agreement is punishable by a fine of 400 monthly calculation index (MCI). The Committee recalled that legislation that imposes an obligation to achieve a result, particularly when sanctions are used in order to ensure that an agreement is concluded, is contrary to the principle of free and voluntary negotiation and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance of the legislation with the above-mentioned principle and to provide information on the application in practice of the referred provisions, in particular on offences committed and penalties applied. Noting with regret the absence of a Government's reply, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure the full conformity of the legislation with the principle of free and voluntary negotiation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application of the above-mentioned provisions in practice, in particular on the offences committed and the sanctions applied.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Kuwait

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Migrant workers. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that section 99 of Labour Law No. 6 of 2010 (hereinafter the Labour Law) restricted the right to form trade unions to Kuwaiti workers, and Ministerial Order No. 1 of 1964 laid down the conditions of possession of a work permit and a minimum of five years' residence in Kuwait for the exercise of the right to form trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministerial Order has been cancelled through Administrative Decision No. 846 of 2015 and observes that the removal of these conditions constitutes a first step in recognizing the trade union rights of migrant workers. However, the Committee notes that section 99 of the Labour Law has not been amended and there is no provision allowing all labourers, Kuwaiti and non-Kuwaiti alike, the right to form trade union organizations. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to amend section 99 of the Labour Law and take all necessary measures in law and in practice to ensure that all migrant workers enjoy the right to form trade unions without distinction whatsoever.

Domestic workers. In its previous comment, noting that section 5 of the Labour Law excludes domestic workers from its scope and Law No. 68 of 2015 on Employment of Domestic Workers does not contain any provisions on their right to organize, the Committee urged the Government to revise its legislation to ensure the full recognition in law and in practice of the right of domestic workers to establish and join organizations. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates that Law No. 68 of 2015 protects the rights of domestic workers but fails to provide any information on the measures taken to recognize, in law and in practice, their rights under the Convention. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this regard.

Article 3. Restrictions to the right to draw up union constitutions and rules. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to amend the model rules included in Ministerial Order No. 1 of 1964 which contained conditions for union membership that were incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministerial Order has been repealed by Administrative Decision No. 846 of 2015 and notes the new guiding rules contained under Administrative Decision No. 1470 of 2015, both of which have been submitted with the Government's report. The Committee observes that article 8 of Administrative Decision No. 1470 of 2015 mandates organizations to submit reports of meetings of their general assembly and board of directors to the competent authority for the issuance of a certificate, entailing a risk of interference in the internal administration of organizations by public authorities, which is incompatible with the Convention. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to amend Administrative Decision No. 1470 of 2015 and to take all necessary measures to ensure that the model rules therein are in conformity with the Convention.

Financial administration of organizations. The Committee notes that, in response to its request to review section 104(2) of the Labour Law that prohibits trade unions from investing their funds in financial, real estate and other speculation, the Government indicates that the restrictions under section 104(2) exist for public interest. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that legislative provisions that restrict the freedom of trade unions to administer, utilize and invest their funds as they wish for normal and lawful trade union purposes, including through financial and real estate investments, are incompatible with Article 3 of the Convention, and that the control exercised by public authorities over trade union finances should not go beyond the requirement for the organization to submit periodic reports. It therefore once again urges the Government to review section 104(2) of the Labour Law in order to allow trade unions to freely administer and invest their funds in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention.

Overall prohibition on trade union political activities. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to revise section 104(1) of the Labour Law to allow for legitimate political activities of trade unions The Committee notes the Government's indication that the prohibition prevents trade unions from deviating from their primary purpose of protecting workers and pursuing workers' rights. The Committee recalls once again that the right of trade unions to organize their activities includes the right to organize protest action, as well as certain political activities, such as expressing support for a political party considered more able to defend the interests of members (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 115). Sweeping bans on trade union political activities give rise to serious difficulties with regard to the exercise of these rights and are therefore incompatible with the Convention. Noting with regret that the Government has not taken any measures in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide information on all measures taken to that end.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 131 of the Labour Law which gives the Ministry of Labour the power to intervene in a labour dispute without the request of the parties to the dispute and submit the dispute to the arbitration tribunal or the conciliation commission, and section 132 of the Labour Law which prohibits strikes during such proceedings initiated due to the intervention of the Ministry. The Committee notes the Government's indication that sections 131 and 132 are an exception aiming to safeguard the interests of society and to ensure the functioning of public utilities in order to maintain social peace, and further that all sections of the Labour Law are being examined in consultation with social partners. The Committee recalls once again that recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike is only acceptable when: (i) both parties to the dispute agree; or (ii) the strike in question may be restricted or even prohibited, which is limited to: (a) cases concerning public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (b) conflicts in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (c) situations of acute national or local crisis (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 153). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to amend sections 131 and 132 of the Labour Law in consultation with social partners, and to inform it of any developments in this regard.

Dissolution of executive boards. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 108 of the Labour Law, which provides that an organization's board of directors can be dissolved by judicial order, in case the board engages in an activity that violates the provisions of the Labour Law or "laws relevant to the preservation of public order and morals". The Committee notes the Government's indication that dissolution is done only through a ruling of the court and that the law lays down conditions for filing a lawsuit, namely a violation of the law or of public order or morals. The Committee recalls once again that a violation of "public order or morals" as a ground for filing a lawsuit is too broad and vague and could subject the executive board of the organization to an excessive amount of control by the Ministry, entailing a serious risk of interference in the organization's internal administration. While noting the Government's indication that no cases have been filed thus far under section 108, the Committee recalls the need to ensure nonetheless that national legislation is in conformity with the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise section 108 of the Labour Law, in order to make it compatible with the guarantees provided in the Convention and to provide information on all measures taken to that end.

Articles 2 and 5. Limitation to a single confederation. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 106 of the Labour Law which provides that "there should not be more than one general union for each of the workers and employers". The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that this provision was a demand by workers' representatives to protect the unity of the labour movement and avoid its division and dispersal. The Committee recalls once again that although the Convention does not make trade union diversity an obligation, it does require this diversity to remain possible in all cases and at all levels. Although it is generally to the advantage of workers and employers to avoid proliferation of competing organizations, trade union unity directly or indirectly imposed by law is contrary to the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 92). Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take necessary measures to amend section 106 of the Labour Law to ensure the right of workers and employers to establish organizations of their own choosing at all levels, in particular the possibility of forming more than one confederation (general union). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2007)

Previous comment

Scope of application of the Convention. Migrant and domestic workers. The Committee refers to its observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), with respect to the restrictions to the trade union rights of migrant workers. The Committee stresses once again that these restrictions seriously affect the ability of migrant workers to exercise the rights recognized in the present Convention. Concerning domestic workers, the Committee recalls that they are excluded from the scope of the Labour Law and that Law No. 68 of 2015 on Employment of Domestic Workers does not contain any provisions concerning the right to organize and collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret the absence of progress in this respect.

While duly noting the information concerning the establishment of an employment office for migrant workers in affiliation with the Kuwait Trade Union Federation, and the Government's signing of bilateral memoranda of understanding with labour-sending countries to protect migrant workers, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on trade union organizations established and collective agreements in force for the mentioned workers. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures, in consultation with the representative social partners, to reform its legislation in order to ensure the full recognition of the rights enshrined in this Convention for migrant and domestic workers; and (ii) provide information on the way in which these workers exercise in practice the rights set out in the Convention, including information on trade unions established and collective agreements concluded.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee previously noted that beyond the general provisions found in article 43 of the Kuwaiti Constitution and section 46 of the Labour Law, national legislation did not provide adequate protection from anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 119 of the Labour Law prohibits discrimination which leads to termination of service based on trade union membership or activity. The Committee observes, however, that section 119 concerns workers' exclusion or withdrawal from trade unions and not termination of their service by employers.

The Government further indicates that workers under the Labour Law enjoy protection from mistreatment, termination of service or conditions for employment as a result of their trade union affiliation, and that trade unions are also protected from interference from the Government in law and in practice. The Committee notes however that the legislation does not contain explicit provisions that: (i) protect workers against anti-union discrimination acts other than dismissals, such as using trade union affiliation as a cause for mistreatment during employment or as a condition at the time of recruitment; and (ii) protect workers and employers organizations against any acts of interference by each other, such as acts aiming to place workers' organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations by financial or other means.

The Committee once again recalls that the Convention requires the adoption of specific legislative provisions in relation to anti-union discrimination and interference, which include sufficiently dissuasive sanctions and notes with regret the lack of progress by the Government in this regard. In view of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government to: (i) take all necessary measures to ensure that national legislation provides for the prohibition of and adequate protection from all acts of anti-union discrimination and interference; and (ii) ensure that there are adequate redress mechanisms and effective procedures in place to protect workers from acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 131 of the Labour Law, which gives the Ministry the right to unilaterally refer a dispute to a conciliation committee or arbitration board, is an exception used solely to ensure the functioning of public utilities and to protect the interests of society. The Committee reiterates that compulsory arbitration is acceptable only in cases of: (i) essential services, the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or a part of the population; (ii) disputes involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) the situation of a deadlock after protracted and fruitless negotiations; or (iv) an acute crisis (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). Duly noting the Government's indication that all provisions of the Labour Law are being examined in consultation with social partners, the Committee urges the Government to amend sections 131 and 132 of the Labour Law as well as other provisions allowing compulsory arbitration to ensure their full conformity with the above-mentioned principles and to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that 26 collective agreements have been concluded so far between 2003 to 2021 in the petroleum and petrochemicals sector. Recalling that the Convention applies to the private sector as a whole and to the public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government to take effective measures to promote and encourage collective bargaining across all sectors covered by the Convention and to continue providing information on any collective agreements concluded, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered therein.

Lebanon

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL) received with the Government's report, which refer to matters addressed in the present comment.

2015 and 2016 observations of Education International. Wage increases through collective bargaining in the education sector. In its previous comments, the Committee had encouraged the Government to continue promoting collective bargaining to enhance the working conditions of teachers.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that negotiations by trade unions led to a wage increase to US$600 per month in the public sector, and an increase in pensions in the private sector to 18 million Lebanese pounds (around US$200), both of which remain insufficient. The Committee further notes the CGTL's observation that wages should be negotiated with economic bodies to improve the salary basis which remains grossly low. Welcoming the information provided by the Government on the wage increase for public sector professors and pensioners in private education through negotiations with unions and associations, the Committee once again encourages the Government to continue to promote and strengthen collective bargaining, in law and in practice, to improve the working conditions of teachers in public and private sectors.

Legislative amendments. Review of the Labour Code. The Committee had previously noted that a draft Labour Code was submitted to the Cabinet of Ministers in 2022 after consultations with employers and workers and that, according to the Government, one of its objectives was to address the issues raised by the Committee. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code remains unapproved due to successive political, economic and social crises and that the draft law should be referred to the Cabinet of Ministers again once the new Government is formed. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any developments on the adoption of the draft Labour Code and hopes the legislative reform will take its comments into consideration.

Scope of application of the Convention. Domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code proposed to amend sections 7 and 8 of the Labour Code to make foreign and Lebanese domestic workers alike subject to its provisions. It also observed that the procedures in force to address violations of domestic workers' individual rights did not refer to the possibility to join organizations and be represented by them. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 228 of the draft Labour Code read with section 229 allows foreigners who are licensed to work and reside in Lebanon to join a trade union as long as they are practising their profession at the time of submitting their application to join the trade union, have reached 18 years of age and have not been convicted of a felony or a heinous misdemeanour, but prohibit foreign workers from running for trade union elections. The Committee further takes note of the CGTL's observation that domestic workers should be included in the proposed draft Labour Code.

The Committee takes due note of the inclusion of sections 228 and 229 in the draft Labour Code allowing foreign workers to join trade union organizations of their choosing and to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee observes however that: (i) the legal incapacity of foreign workers to hold office in trade unions, even after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, may constitute an obstacle to the autonomous exercise of the rights recognized by the Convention, in particular the right to collective bargaining; and (ii) it has always emphasized the need to guarantee that minors who have reached the minimum legal age for admission to employment, both as workers and as apprentices, can exercise their trade union rights. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code, once adopted, guarantees the trade union rights of domestic workers, both Lebanese and foreign, so that they can fully exercise their right to collective bargaining as enshrined in the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure the enjoyment of these rights in practice, and once again requests the Government to provide information in this regard, including the names of relevant workers' organizations and the number of collective agreements concluded with domestic workers.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee observed, on the basis of the draft Labour Code submitted by the Government, some issues of compatibility with the Convention, such as control by the authorities of the subject of collective bargaining previously agreed to by the parties (section 106), excessive quorum requirements for the validation of collective agreements (section 110) and the extension of collective agreements (sections 118 and 121).

Noting that the Government has not clarified the issues raised by the Committee in its previous comment, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to engage in further consultations with the social partners to ensure that all provisions of the draft Labour Code, including those on collective bargaining, are in line with the Convention. Recalling the importance granted to the involvement of workers and employers in the process of extension by Paragraph 5(2)(c) of the Collective Agreement Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), the Committee requests the Government to provide clarification on the concerns raised in relation to the extension of collective agreements and to provide further information on the special provisions and penalties regulating violations of collective agreements, referred to by the Government (section 128 of the draft Labour Code). The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Excessive restrictions on the right to collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, based on the rules still in force in the country (sections 3 and 4 of Decree No. 17386/64 according to which employees' representatives must have the approval of at least 60 per cent of the Lebanese workers concerned to be able to negotiate and that a collective agreement must be approved by two thirds of the general assembly of trade unions party to the agreement), it has for many years been requesting the Government to ensure that a trade union which fails to secure an absolute majority is not denied the possibility of negotiating on behalf of its own members.

In its last comment, the Committee also noted the Government's indication that, under sections 108 and 110 of the 2022 draft Labour Code: (i) the discussion, amendment or cancellation of a collective agreement (but not its renewal without change) require workers' representatives to obtain the mandate of at least 51 per cent of members of the body; and (ii) the approval of a collective agreement by a two-thirds majority of the participants in a general meeting of the body is required, which brings together at least half of its members and associates.

With regard to article 108 of the draft Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether: (i) the vote referred to concerns only workers who are members of the trade union organization ready to enter into negotiations; (ii) this provision is also likely to apply to trade unions covering several undertakings or to sectoral trade unions; and (iii) article 108 applies to any trade union organization regardless of the percentage of workers in the bargaining unit who are members of it. The Committee also reiterates that article 110 should be amended so as not to impede the promotion of collective bargaining and not to hinder the autonomy of trade union organizations in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Right to collective bargaining in the public sector and the public service. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that section 15 of the draft Labour Code provided that employers and workers at all establishments of all kinds are subject to the Labour Code and that public servants are subject to their own system or special staff regulations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 14 of the draft Labour Code specifies the categories excluded from its scope, including public servants, salaried employees and contractors in public administrations, public administrative institutions, members of armed forces and educational bodies prescribed by their applicable regulations. The Committee recalls that all workers in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State (such as employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized institutions, teachers in the public sector and personnel in the air transport sector) are covered by the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172) and the right of such workers to bargain collectively should therefore be recognized. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that, either through the new Labour Code, when adopted, or through other pertinent normative instruments, public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State are able to enjoy their right to collective bargaining and requests the Government to provide information on the exercise of this right in practice by public sector workers.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Decree No. 13896 of 2005, replacing Decree No. 2952 of 1965, provided that all private and public sector investment enterprises charged with managing a public facility on behalf of the State or privately would be subject to section 47(a) of the Law of Collective Labour Contracts, Mediation and Arbitration (put into effect by Decree No. 17386 of 1964), imposing arbitration if mediation fails. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) Decree No. 13896 of 2005 remains applicable for the resolution of disputes in certain institutions, namely, all public and private institutions of an investment nature entrusted with the management of a public facility for the benefit of the State or on its own; (ii) section 183 of the draft Labour Code of 2022 provides that arbitration and mediation shall be free and voluntary; and (iii) section 193 of the draft Labour Code of 2022 provides for recourse to arbitration if necessary when no agreement is reached. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that sections 197 and 202 of the draft Labour Code also provide for recourse to arbitration if mediation fails, but that in practice, no arbitration committee has been formed and that mediation is relied on in the majority of cases. The Committee further notes that sections 197 and 202 of the 2022 draft Labour Code do not seem to request the agreement of the two parties to have the dispute submitted to arbitration. Recalling once again that compulsory arbitration if parties have not reached an agreement is generally contrary to the principles of collective bargaining and is acceptable only in cases of: (i) essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) disputes involving public servants in the administration of the State; (iii) a deadlock after protracted and fruitless negotiations; or (iv) an acute crisis, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code and Decree No. 13896 of 2005 are in line with the principles enshrined in the Convention.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had previously noted that the last collective agreement adopted was between the Association of Banks in Lebanon and the Federation of Unions of Bank Employees in Lebanon. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that collective bargaining occurs as follows: (i) at the sectoral level, in the banking (23,000 employees) and petrochemicals (285 employees) sectors; (ii) at the institutional level, in the port of Beirut with 190 employees, the American University Hospital with 4,000 employees and a company. It further notes the indication that collective bargaining is not widespread in Lebanon due to the reluctance of employers, social and political instability and the weakness of unions. Taking due note of this information and while being cognizant of the current situation in the country, the Committee encourages the Government to take measures to promote and strengthen collective bargaining in all sectors of the economy and requests it to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded, the sectors and number of workers covered.

The Committee reminds the Government that it can continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office with regard to the draft Labour Code.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the entry into force of the Labour Act of 2024, which repealed the Labour Code.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that section 198F of the Labour Code granted specific advantages (access to premises to meet representatives of the employer to recruit members, to hold a meeting of members and to perform any trade union functions in terms of a collective agreement) to trade unions representing more than 35 per cent of employees, and that section 198G(1) of the Labour Code provided that only members of registered trade unions representing more than 35 per cent of the employees in enterprises employing ten or more employees were entitled to elect workplace union representatives. The Committee encouraged the Government to include in its revision of the Labour Code the consideration of measures to amend these provisions to ensure that workers' free choice of organization was not unduly influenced by such privileges. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the above-mentioned provisions were deleted, and that the above-mentioned rights are now granted to all trade unions (sections 114, 116 and 117 of the new Labour Act). The Committee notes, however, that section 115 of the Labour Act grants check-off facility only to a trade union which represents more than 35 per cent of the employer's workers. The Committee considers that workers should have the possibility of opting for deductions from their wages under the check-off system to be paid to trade union organizations of their choice, even if they are not the most representative. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Act is amended accordingly and to provide information on all steps taken to that end.

Articles 2, 3 and 5. Public officers' associations. The Committee previously noted that section 14(1)(b), (c) and (d) of the Societies Act required registered societies to supply to the Registrar-General, upon his or her order at any time, a list of office bearers and members of the society, the number and place of meetings held within the preceding six months, and such accounts, returns and other information as he or she thinks fit. The Committee expected that the review of the Public Service Act would be conducted in the near future and would ensure that organizations of public officers were exempted from the application of the above provisions and that their supervision was limited to the obligation of submitting periodic financial reports or where there were serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization were contrary to its rules or the law. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new Labour Act applies to public officers and its section 221 has the effect of exempting organizations of public officers from the application of the above-mentioned provisions of the Societies Act. The Committee notes with interest that by virtue of its section 3(1), the Labour Act applies to any employment relationship in the private and public services.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken, within the framework of the labour law reform, to ensure that public officers were allowed to establish and join federations and confederations and to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that, under the new Labour Act, public officers are no longer prohibited from establishing and joining federations and confederations and affiliating with international organizations. In this regard, the Committee observes with interest that sections 81 and 82 of the new Labour Act provide for these rights.

Penalties or imprisonment for trade union representatives upon failure to provide information required by the Registrar. The Committee notes with concern, however, that failure by an applicant for registration to comply with a request for further information from the Registrar constitutes an offence and is punishable by a fine and/or by imprisonment (section 75(8) of the Labour Act). Also punishable by a fine or imprisonment are: failure by a chairperson of a registered trade union or an employers' organization to notify an affiliation or establishment of a branch within three months (section 78); failure by an officer of a trade union or employers' organization to notify a location and postal address of a registered office, as well as the change thereof (section 90); and failure by the secretary and treasurer to supply annual returns or accounts (sections 94(4) and 98). Considering that sanctioning by imprisonment a failure to provide information within the specified time constitutes a serious infringement of the right of workers and employers to organize and of the right of such organizations to organize their administration, the Committee requests the Government to take necessary measures to amend the Labour Act so as to eliminate such penalties and to provide information on all steps taken to that end.

Financial autonomy. Books of account. The Committee observes that sections 73(e) and 95(b) of the Labour Act concerning the inspection of the accounts of workers' and employers' organizations, as well as section 97 concerning the power to require a detailed written account of their funds "at any reasonable time where suspicion (or reasonable suspicion) of fraud exists" are drafted in a way that may not exclude a broad power of the Registrar to inspect the activities of trade unions. The Committee recalls that the supervision of the financial management of organizations should not go beyond the obligation to submit annual financial reports, and that the verification of accounts should only be carried out if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of the organization are contrary to its rules or the law, or if a significant number of members file a complaint (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 109). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Labour Act to ensure that administrative authorities are only allowed to control and inspect the financial management of organizations in cases in which serious grounds of unlawful activity or the initiative of a significant number of members warrant such an intervention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken to that end.

Right to elect trade union representatives in full freedom. The Committee notes that although, according to the national Constitution, the age of majority is 18 years, section 87(2) of the Labour Act provides that a person may not be a member of the executive committee or trustee of a trade union or employer's organization until he or she attains the age of 21 years. The Committee further notes that the Labour Act stipulates that: (i) no person shall hold the post of secretary or treasurer of a trade union, employers' organization or bargaining council if, in the opinion of the Registrar, he has not attained a standard of literacy sufficiently high for the effective performance of his duties (section 88(1)); and (ii) no person shall be an officer of a trade union, employer's organization or bargaining council if, within five years or less of his appointment to the post, he has been convicted of a crime involving fraud or dishonesty (section 88(2)). In this regard, the Committee recalls that it considers to be incompatible with the Convention the requirements that candidates for trade union office should have reached the age of majority, or be able to read and write (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 104). It also recalls that conviction for an act the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 106). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the above-mentioned provisions so as to fully guarantee the right of workers' and employers' organizations to freely elect their representatives.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Liberia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, deploring the lack of concrete steps taken by the Government to address the longstanding serious issues raised by the Committee on the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, which reiterate the comments made at the discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 on the application of the Convention by Liberia. It further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2023 and referring to the issues addressed by the Committee below. While noting the Government's indication that there has been progress in the resolution of the frictions in the trade union movement in Liberia and, in particular, that with the election of a new leadership of the Liberia Labour Congress (LLC), supported by a majority of its member organizations, the labour dispute caused by the elections was being resolved, the Committee notes the ITUC's allegation of the Government's interference in the election process. The Committee requests the Government to reply to this serious allegation of violation of trade union rights.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. The Conference Committee, noting the long-standing nature and the prior discussion of the case, most recently in 2022, expressed its regret that the Government had not implemented its previous recommendations and requested it to take urgent steps, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention and in particular to: (i) ensure that all workers are able to exercise their labour rights under the Convention in an environment of respect for civil liberties, including the right to freedom of association, freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and protest without interference and fear for their personal safety and physical integrity; (ii) ensure that trade union leaders and members are not jailed for engaging in trade union activities and that threats against trade union leaders for their trade union activities are fully investigated and the perpetrators duly punished; (iii) put in place measures, including effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, to ensure that trade unions can only be dissolved following due process and by a judicial authority only as a last resort; (iv) register the National Health Workers' Union of Liberia (NAHWUL) as a trade union organization without further delay and provide additional information to the Committee of Experts on any pending allegations; (v) review the Decent Work Act and any other related legislation to ensure that all workers are able to exercise the right to form or join a trade union of their choice and in particular, ensure that public sector workers and civil servants enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention; (vi) ensure that the rights enshrined in the Convention are afforded to maritime workers, including trainees, and that any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged cover this category of workers; and (vii) ensure that foreign workers are entitled to form and join unions of their own choosing in line with the Convention. The Conference Committee urged the Government to provide information to the Committee by 1 September 2023 on all the measures taken to implement these recommendations and to comply with its obligations under the Convention and on any developments in this regard. The Conference Committee also called on the Government to continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and to accept a direct contacts mission.

The Committee recalls that it previously urged the Government to conduct an independent investigation into the allegations by the African Regional Organization of the ITUC (ITUC – Africa) denouncing the dissolution of a trade union by a state-owned company; the use of police force to break up peaceful strikes; and the arrest of union leaders and wrongful dismissal of workers for their participation in strike actions and that it requested the Government to provide information on the outcome. The Committee further requested the Government to provide its comments on the ITUC's recurring allegations pertaining to the increasing intolerance towards workers exercising their civil liberties and rights under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no trade union leaders are currently in the custody of the national security forces and that preventive measures have been taken. The Committee regrets that the Government does not indicate whether an independent investigation has been conducted into the above-mentioned allegations with a view to punishing the perpetrators, as requested by the Conference Committee. Noting with concern the ITUC's most recent observations denouncing the continuously shrinking space for the exercise of trade union rights, the Committee urges the Government to investigate all of the above-mentioned allegations and to provide detailed information on the outcome. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the nature and scope of the preventive measures it referred to in its report.

Scope of application. The Committee previously requested the Government to grant full recognition to NAHWUL through the harmonization of the Decent Work Act 2015 and the Civil Servant Standing orders. In this respect, it requested the Government to provide specific information on developments regarding the creation of a framework for the harmonization of the Decent Work Act and the Civil Service Standing orders for the enjoyment by public sector workers of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there was a sequence of meetings scheduled with legislators, beginning 31 August 2023, to facilitate the creation of exemptions through amendments of the Decent Work Act that would grant both NAHWUL and the National Teachers Association in Liberia recognition. The Committee notes the ITUC's allegation that there has been no progress with the harmonization of the law to ensure the right of civil servants and public servants to form or join a trade union. Recalling that all workers, with the sole possible exception of the police and the armed forces, are covered by the Convention, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that necessary measures will be taken to that end without further delay. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to harmonize the Decent Work Act and the Civil Servant Standing orders in order to enable NAHWUL to register as a trade union organization and grant it full statutory recognition in law and in practice without further delay, in accordance with the Committee's previous request and the most recent call to this effect by the Conference Committee, and expects the Government to provide detailed information on the developments, including any legal measures adopted or envisaged in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations. The Committee previously noted that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Decent Work Act excludes from its scope of application, maritime workers, including trainees, and requested the Government to provide information on the application of the rights enshrined in the Convention for such workers and on any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged covering this category of workers. The Committee reiterates its deep regret at the lack of information in this respect and firmly expects that the Government's next report will contain the relevant information.

The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to amend section 45.6 of the Decent Work Act to guarantee foreign workers their right to work, and that, having taken note of the Government's indication that discussions had been opened with existing foreign workers' bodies with regards to their rights to organize and defend their occupational interest, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussions. The Committee notes the Government's indications that there were no requests received in connection with trade unions for foreign workers or any complaints made to the Government regarding the refusal of existing unions to admit such workers. Noting with regret that the Government provides no information pertaining to the discussions which it previously indicated it had commenced or regarding any legislative measures taken to guarantee foreign workers the right to organize, the Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures, in the near future, including through the amendment of section 45.6 of the Decent Work Act, to fully guarantee, in law and in practice, foreign workers their right to organize. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of developments in this regard.

Article 3. Determination of essential services. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on how the designation of essential services by the National Tripartite Council operates in practice, to clarify whether the President is also bound by the definition of the notion of essential services set out in section 41.4(a) of the Decent Work Act (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or any part of the population of Liberia), and to provide information on any presidential decisions concerning the designation of essential services and how such designation operates in practice. The Committee notes the ITUC's indication that, although according to section 4.1 of the Act, recommendations by the National Tripartite Committee inform the designation of certain services as essential, the final decision on such designation is taken by the President who is not bound by the recommendations of the National Tripartite Committee. Noting with regret that the Government provides no information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide the relevant information.

Noting the Government's indication that it avails itself of the offer of ILO technical assistance, the Committee expects that all of the above-mentioned issues will be addressed without further delay so as to bring the national law and practice into full conformity with the Convention. Like the Conference Committee, the Committee calls on the Government to accept a direct contacts mission.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations made by the African Regional Organisation of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC-Africa), received on 31 August 2021, alleging acts of anti-union discrimination and interference in trade union internal affairs by a state-owned company and its refusal to bargain collectively. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Scope of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Decent Work Act of 2015 (the Act) excluded from its scope of application work covered by the Civil Service Agency Act. Furthermore, the Committee had noted the Government's indication in 2012 that the legislation guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining of public servants and employees in state enterprises (Ordinance on the public service) was under revision with the technical assistance of the Office, and had requested it to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee notes that the Government acknowledges that the Act does not cover workers in the mainstream public sector and indicates that a national labour conference was convened in 2018 to create a framework for the harmonization of the Act and the Civil Service Standing Orders. Recalling that all workers, except the armed forces and the police, as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State, are covered by the Convention, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the legislation will soon be brought into conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee had also noted that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Act also excludes from its scope of application, officers, members of the crew and any other persons employed or in training on vessels. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to indicate how the rights enshrined in the Convention apply to these workers, including any laws or regulations, adopted or envisaged, covering them. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Liberia's Maritime Regulations 10-318.3 incorporate by reference the terms of the Maritime Labour Convention (MLC) as inherent parts of the conditions of work on flagged vessels and that a further review of how these provisions are applied in practice is planned in line with the report on the MLC, which is due in 2022. Noting that Liberia's Maritime Regulations 10-318.3 refers to shipboard living conditions and recreational facilities, the Committee requests the Government again to detail how, both in law and in practice, the rights enshrined in the Convention are ensured to maritime workers.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted the various provisions of the Act that guarantee the protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had requested the Government further information on the sanctions applied in cases of acts of anti-union discrimination and to provide statistics on the number of cases of discrimination examined, the duration of the procedures and the type of penalties and compensations ordered. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry ruled in favour of the workers in the three cases of anti-union discrimination brought up during the period under review and ordered the reinstatement of the workers. While noting that section 14.10 of the Act provides for dissuasive sanctions in the event of termination of employment due to violations of the worker's or the employer's rights under the Act, including the possibility for Ministry or court to order the reinstatement of the worker, the Committee recalls that adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination should not be confined to penalizing dismissal on anti-union grounds, but should cover all acts of anti-union discrimination (demotions, transfers and other prejudicial acts) at all stages of the employment relationship, regardless of the employment period, including at the recruitment stage. The Committee requests the Government to take, after consultation with the representative organizations of workers and employers, necessary legislative and regulatory measures to guarantee the application of sufficiently dissuasive penalties against all acts of anti-union discrimination. It also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed statistics on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination received by the relevant authorities, the average duration of the proceedings and their outcome, and the types of remedies and sanctions imposed in those cases.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to introduce in the legislation provisions guaranteeing adequate protection for workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers and their organizations, including sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour has issued directives against interference with the activities of workers' organizations and that it desires to ensure that the workers and employers' interests coexist harmoniously. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Ministry of Labour's directives against interference in trade union's activities. Furthermore, noting the observations made by the ITUC alleging acts of interference, and recalling the importance of the effective prohibition by the national legislation of all of the acts of interference covered by Article 2, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to include in the relevant legislation provisions explicitly prohibiting acts of interference and providing for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions and rapid and effective procedures against such acts.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had noted that, under the Act, trade unions that represent the majority of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit are able to seek recognition as exclusive bargaining agents for that bargaining unit (section 37.1(a)), and that if the trade union no longer represents this majority, it must acquire a majority within three months, otherwise, the employer shall withdraw recognition from this trade union (section 37.1(k)). The Committee recalled that while it is acceptable that the union which represents the majority or a high percentage of workers in a bargaining unit should enjoy preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, it considers that, if no union reaches the required majority to be designated as a bargaining unit, minority unions should be given the possibility to bargain collectively, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee therefore requested the Government to indicate whether, if no union represents this majority the minority unions in the same unit enjoy collective bargaining rights, at least on behalf of their members. In the absence of information from the Government in this respect, the Committee reiterates its request.

Settlement of disputes affecting national interest. The Committee had noted that section 42.1 of the Act underlined prerogatives of the President, Minister and National Tripartite Council with regard to disputes affecting the national interest. The Committee had requested the Government to provide additional information regarding those prerogatives, and to indicate the extent to which section 42.1 of the Act provides the parties with complete freedom of collective bargaining and does not alter the principle of voluntary arbitration. The Committee notes the Government's information that while the Ministry has not formally classified any dispute addressed since the advent of the Act as a dispute affecting the national interest, the process of voluntary arbitration is being protected in all disputes. In the absence of a response with regard to the exercise of the prerogatives granted to the public authorities by section 42.1 of the Act, the Committee reiterates its request.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country and to indicate the sectors and levels concerned as well as the number of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to report any progress achieved in the implementation of the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee). The Committee recalls that in June 2023 the Conference Committee requested the Government to:

- take all necessary steps in order to ensure that the new Maritime Code guarantees to seafarers the right to freely establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization;
- organize as soon as possible the elections for the designation of workers' representatives;
- refrain from intervening in the activities of workers' and employers' organizations, including in the designation process of their representatives in the various social dialogue bodies;
- ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration as a way to avoid free and voluntary collective bargaining is employed only in very limited circumstances and take the necessary measures to amend sections 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code to bring them into conformity with the Convention;
- immediately and unconditionally quash the conviction of Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento;
- refrain from using the criminal law to target trade unionists;
- amend all provisions of the Criminal Code hindering the right to freedom of association of workers and employers; and
- provide a copy of the Maritime Code once adopted and detailed information to the Committee of Experts before 1 September 2023 on the outcome of any meeting concerning allegations of anti-union acts in the maritime sector, on any developments in the adoption of the Maritime Code and on the factors that have prevented the holding of elections for staff representatives since 2015.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on these matters, to which it refers below in the context of its examination of the points raised in its previous comments. The Committee also takes note of Law 2024-014 of 14 August 2024 on the Labour Code.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to quash the conviction of Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento to a sentence of imprisonment for having posted on social media the results of meetings held with the management of an enterprise in the textile sector in the course of the performance of his trade union functions. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report does not contain any information on the action taken in this regard, and instead emphasizes that Mr Sento's prison sentence is not related to his status as a trade union leader. Under these conditions, the Committee once again firmly recalls that the resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties adopted by the Conference in 1970 reaffirms the essential link between civil liberties and trade union rights, which was already emphasized in the Declaration of Philadelphia (1944), and enumerates the fundamental rights that are necessary for the exercise of freedom of association, which include: the right to freedom and security of person and freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention; freedom of opinion and expression and in particular freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontier; and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to immediately and unconditionally quash the conviction of Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento.

Article 2 of the Convention. Workers governed by the Maritime Code. The Committee previously noted that a new Maritime Code was to be adopted and requested the Government to ensure that it provided for the right of seafarers to establish and join trade unions. The Committee notes the ratification in 2023 of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, in its amended version (MLC, 2006), and the Government's indication that the draft Maritime Code has been referred to the Council of Ministers for adoption. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the adopted Maritime Code and to indicate the specific provisions setting out the right of seafarers to establish and join trade unions.

Articles 2 and 3. Right to organize and free exercise of trade union activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) concerning allegations of restrictions on the right to organize, and the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that the right to organize is not fully guaranteed and that the legal provisions on the election of staff representatives are ineffective. The Committee also previously requested the Government to provide explanations concerning the absence of elections of staff representatives since 2015 and the measures taken to ensure the effective application of the legislation on the promotion of trade union rights (sections 136 et seq. of the Labour Code and Decree No. 2011-490 and its implementing order No. 28968-2011). The Committee notes the Government's indications that: the application of these texts requires the adoption of orders on representativeness, and the adoption of the last order on representativeness was suspended due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and the adoption of a new representativeness order for the period 2022–24 is under way, following the receipt of the reports on the election of staff from the labour inspection services. However, the Committee notes that the period 2022–24 is coming to an end and that the Government had already indicated during the discussion in the Conference Committee that a representativeness order was to be published in June 2023. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the procedures for the adoption of the new representativeness order.

Representativeness of workers' and employers' organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the serious allegations made by the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA) concerning the unilateral changing of the names of its representatives by the Government, and by the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance that the Ministry of Labour: (i) refused to validate the result of the staff delegate elections in favour of the Alliance in an enterprise in the sugar industry; (ii) encourages candidates who are not members of trade union organizations to occupy trade union posts; and (iii) unilaterally appointed new administrators in the National Social Welfare Fund. The Committee notes that the Government denies that it modified unilaterally the names of the FISEMA representatives, indicating that this issue arose from an internal dispute in the union, which first sent the Ministry of Labour two separate proposed nominations, before sending a third common proposal, on which the appointment was then based. While noting this information, the Committee observes that, according to the FISEMA, the matter was referred to the Council of State, which ruled in favour of the FISEMA. The Committee also notes that the Government does not reply to the allegations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance. The Committee accordingly reminds the Government that it must refrain from interfering in the activities of workers' and employers' organizations, including in the process of the designation of their representatives on the various social dialogue bodies. The Committee therefore requests the Government to respond to the allegations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance, provide information on the holding of elections for the designation of workers' representatives and on the process for the appointment of representatives of workers and employers on the various social dialogue bodies. The Committee also refers in this regard to its comments adopted in 2023 on the application of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144).

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code, which provide that if mediation fails, the collective dispute shall be referred by the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation to an arbitration procedure, whose award brings an end to the dispute and the strike, and which provide for the possibility of requisitioning striking employees in the event of the disruption of public order. The Committee notes that the aforementioned articles were amended as part of the reform of the Labour Code enshrined in Act No. 2024-014 of 14 August 2024. In this respect, the Committee notes with interest that: (i) the matter may only be referred directly to the arbitration body by the local Inspector of Labour and Social Legislation if the collective dispute concerns one of the essential services in the strict sense of the term or in the event of an acute national crisis (new section 288); and (ii) with regard to the possibility of requisitioning striking employees, the condition of "disruption of public order" has been replaced by that of "acute national crisis" (new section 296). While welcoming these improvements, the Committee notes that although recourse to compulsory arbitration to put an end to a collective labour dispute can no longer be imposed by the public authorities on their own initiative, the wording of new section 288 does not rule out recourse to arbitration at the request of only one of the parties, which remains incompatible with the Convention. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend new section 288 to ensure that recourse to compulsory arbitration, outside cases where strikes can be limited or even prohibited, is only possible if both parties to the dispute so agree.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA), received on 31 August 2024, concerning questions of representativeness of trade union organizations at the national and regional level. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee also notes Act No. 2024-014 of 14 August 2024 issuing the Labour Code.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to comment on the observations of the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors alleging anti-union discrimination measures against its members following a strike. The Committee notes the Government's general indication that the transfer decisions taken against striking inspectors have not been implemented and that if persons have been assigned to new posts, this is unrelated to any sanction. In the absence of further information brought to its attention, the Committee reminds the Government that, when allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination are brought to its attention, it must ensure that the events reported are the subject of investigation by the public authorities and, if acts of anti-union discrimination have been committed, they will give rise to full compensation for the damage suffered and to the imposition of penalties that constitute an effective deterrent. In this regard, the Committee notes the provisions of section 353 of the Labour Code, which now provide for specific penalties in the event of violations of the Labour Code relating to freedom of association (a fine of 1 to 4 million Malagasy ariary, doubled in the event of a repeat offence and accompanied in this case by a prison term of one to six months). In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information such as reports or findings of investigations carried out by the public authorities following the strike, any reassignments made, as well as any subsequent communications from the trade union concerned.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government's indication that it did not know the exact number of anti-union discrimination cases examined by the regional labour services and the labour courts. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its reply to the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) and the International Trade Union Confederation alleging acts of anti-union discrimination, the Government acknowledges that it does not currently have a sufficiently effective data collection system, but does not, however, deny the persistence of the alleged acts. Recalling the fundamental importance of ensuring effective protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to gather the requested information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination examined by the labour inspection services and the labour courts, as well as the penalties imposed in those cases. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the provision of section 353 of the Labour Code.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee underlined the need to adopt formal provisions clearly recognizing the various protections established by the Convention of all public servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee noted that a draft General Statute on Public Servants and a draft General Statute on contractual public employees were being drawn up. The Committee notes that the Government emphasizes that this process of legislative reform was interrupted, notably by the electoral timetable, but that it can now resume, and that the Office's technical assistance is requested in this regard. The Committee expects that the above-mentioned draft legislation will be adopted in the near future and will contain provisions providing for protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and the right to collective bargaining for all civil servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Collective bargaining in sectors subject to privatization. The Committee previously noted the information provided by the Government on the situation of collective agreements in the energy sector, particularly that of the Malagasy Electricity and Water Company (JIRAMA), and the observations of SEKRIMA alleging that privatizations have resulted in the collective agreements in force being discarded. With regard to JIRAMA, the Committee notes that the draft collective agreement was submitted to the labour inspectorate and the Antananarivo Labour Court in October 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the status of this collective agreement in the energy sector, as well as on the steps taken or envisaged to promote the full use of collective bargaining mechanisms in privatized sectors, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Collective bargaining for seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Code excluded maritime workers from its scope of application and expressed the expectation that the new Maritime Code would recognize for these workers the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the draft reform of the Maritime Code will be submitted for adoption by Parliament before the end of 2024. Noting that Act No. 2024-014 of 14 August 2024 issuing the Labour Code excludes from its scope workers governed by the Maritime Code (section 1), and recalling that the Government has been referring to the draft Maritime Code since 2008, the Committee expects that the Code will be adopted in the near future and that it will contain provisions giving full effect to the Convention in respect of maritime workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, as well as a copy of the Maritime Code as soon as it is adopted.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee takes note of the summary information provided by the Government based on the activity reports provided by certain regional inspectorates. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the response of the Government to the 2022 Observations of the National Union Bank Employees (NUBE) concerning, to a large extent, issues considered by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3401.

Legislative reform. The Committee previously noted the comprehensive technical assistance provided by the Office in the context of the Labour Law and Industrial Relations Reform project (2016–26). It also noted the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee) in 2022, requesting the Government to amend without delay the national legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In this respect, the Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government about the coming into force, on 15 September 2024, of several amendments to the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), the Industrial Relations Regulations, the Trade Unions Act (TUA) and the Trade Union Regulations.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the observations by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on ineffective remedies for anti-union discrimination and lengthy procedures. The Committee also noted that the Conference Committee in 2022 requested the Government to ensure, in law and practice, adequate protection against anti-union discrimination, including through effective and expeditious access to courts, adequate compensation and the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government that the majority of cases filed in 2023 under section 8 of the IRA (concerning anti-union discrimination) were resolved at the Industrial Relations Department, that the conciliation and mediation procedure at the Industrial Relations Department facilitates the expeditious settlement of cases, and that cases referred to the Industrial Court might involve a lengthy procedure. It notes however with regret that the Government has not provided the requested information on the outcome and duration of the procedures concerning anti-union discrimination cases. In this respect, the Committee also notes with regret that despite the recent legislative amendments, no changes have been made to section 8 of the IRA, which provides for discretionary powers of the Director-General of Industrial Relations to refer or not a complaint on anti-union discrimination to the Industrial Court, without the workers having the right to access the courts directly. The Committee once again recalls that effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination requires rapid and effective procedures and remedies through reinstatement and adequate compensation, as well as sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the number of cases of anti-union discrimination filed and pending under section 8 of the IRA (concerning anti-union discrimination), and sections 20 and 59 of the IRA (concerning anti-union dismissals); (ii) the outcome of these proceedings, including the remedies provided (such as compensation, reinstatement and penalties imposed); and (iii) the duration of cases dealt with by the Industrial Relations Department, the Industrial Court and other courts. It also once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who are victims of anti-union discrimination have the right to directly lodge a complaint before the courts, and to provide information on the criteria followed by the Director-General of Industrial Relations to determine the actions to take in the treatment of anti-union discrimination cases, including to refer or not the matter to the courts. In this context, it also recalls its recommendation to consider the reversal of the burden of proof once a prima facie case is made.

Articles 2 and 4. Trade union recognition for the purposes of collective bargaining. Criteria and procedure for recognition. The Committee noted that the Conference Committee in 2022, having observed the concerns expressed during the discussions concerning ongoing challenges including instances of undue interference during the procedure, requested the Government to ensure that effective protection against undue interference is adopted and that the procedure for trade union recognition is simplified.

The Committee notes the Government's reference to improvements in the recognition procedure. In this respect, it notes with satisfaction the coming into force of a number of amendments, including: (i) the removal of several provisions in the TUA, that provided for the possibility to refuse registration of a trade union in respect of a particular establishment, trade, occupation or industry, where another trade union exists, thereby allowing for the plurality of trade unions, and (ii) the removal of the restrictive definition of trade unions, pursuant to which workers employed in different industries were prohibited from establishing a single union or joining the same organization. Moreover, it notes that, in conformity with the provisions in the IRA and the Industrial Relations Regulations that have now come into force, the Director-General of Industrial Relations is competent to take a decision based on the conduct of a secret ballot in the following cases: (i) claims concerning the recognition of a trade union in the event that an employer refuses recognition (section 9(4)(A) of the IRA); (ii) applications concerning the recognition of the sole bargaining right to represent a group of workers, in the event that an employer has granted recognition to more than one trade union, and that there is no agreement between the trade unions as to which trade union shall exercise that right (section 12(A) of the IRA). The Committee notes the Government's information, in response to its request on the application in practice of the recognition procedure, that 116 cases were handled by the Department of Industrial Relations, of which 96 were resolved. It notes however that the Government has not provided the requested information on whether recognition was granted (or not granted) in relation to these cases. Concerning the Committee's reiterated request to ensure effective protection against undue interference in the recognition process, the Committee notes with regret that the Government limits itself to referring, once again, to the possibility to raise complaints with the Director-General of Industrial Relations (under sections 4, 5, 7 and 8 of the IRA), and that it does not provide information on any such claims that have been successfully brought, or on the measures taken, such as any competences entrusted to the Department of Industrial Relations or other competent authorities, to prevent and address, at their own initiative, acts of interference that may take place during the recognition process. Recalling that the recognition processes should provide safeguards to prevent acts of employer interference, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any specific measures taken to prevent or repress acts of interference during the recognition process. It also requests the Government to specify whether any claims were actually brought against employer inference during the recognition procedure under sections 4, 5, 7 and 8 of the IRA, and provide information on their outcome. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application in practice of the recognition procedures (under sections 9(4)(A) and 12(A) of the IRA), including as regards the number of processes for trade union recognition filed and those that remain pending, and their outcome (i.e. the number of recognitions granted or not granted, specifying the reasons for these decisions).

Duration of recognition proceedings. The Committee recalls its reiterated request, in light of the discussions in the Conference Committee in 2022 and a considerable number of cases considered by the Committee on Freedom of Association over the years, to ensure that that the duration of the recognition process is reasonable. Having previously noted that the average duration of the recognition procedure at the Department of Industrial Relations was four to nine months, and that a decision of recognition may be appealed before the courts, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any up-to-date information on the duration of the recognition procedure, especially as regards those cases that were subject to an appeal before the courts.

In this context, the Committee observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association examined the issue of administrative and judicial delays in the context of challenges to the recognition of a union by an employer, in Case No. 3414 and referred the legislative aspect of this case to it (401st Report, March 2023, paragraph 595). Concerning potential delays as a result of certain particularities in the recognition procedure, the Committee notes with interest the removal of the possibility of a "competency" check of a trade union seeking recognition (see mainly former sections 9(4)(A)(a) and 9(4)(B)(b) of the IRA). It notes however that the Committee on Freedom of Association observed that disagreements on the meaning of the terms of section 9(1) of the IRA (which was not amended and prohibits the representation of workers employed in managerial, executive, confidential and security capacities together with other workers in a bargaining unit), had entailed excessively long administrative and judicial procedures under section 9(1)(A) of the IRA on the question of whether workers were entitled to vote in the secret ballot. Noting that section 5(2)(b) and (c) of the IRA gives the right to employers to require a worker promoted to a managerial, an executive or a security position to cease membership of a trade union (except as in unions representing those categories of workers), the Committee also recalls that the NUBE, in its 2022 Observations alleges pseudo-promotions of their members to managerial positions to restrict union membership. In respect of the above, the Committee observes that there are no provisions providing for any definition of the categories under section 9(1) of the IRA but that the question of whether a particular occupation falls into any of the above-mentioned categories is a matter to be determined by the Director-General of Industrial Relations, and that a relevant decision can be appealed before the courts. While recalling that these categories of workers are covered by the Convention, the Committee stresses that the exclusion of managerial and executive staff from the vote concerning the recognition of a trade union should be limited to those persons who genuinely represent the interests of the employer to avoid any risks of interference by the employer. As a result, the determination of the categories, aimed at avoiding any risks of interference by the employer, should be limited to those persons who genuinely represent the interests of the employer. As a result, the determination of the categories of workers excluded from the vote should be expeditious and the possibilities for the employer to challenge the decision strictly delimited and swiftly examined so that the said determination does not become an obstacle to the exercise of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee once again firmly expects the Government to take measures to ensure that the administrative and judicial proceedings for the recognition of trade unions for the purpose of collective bargaining are reasonable. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the duration of the recognition proceedings, under sections 9(4)(A) and 12(A) of the IRA, including those that were treated administratively by the Department of Industrial Relations and those that were appealed and dealt with by the courts, with particular information as regards the number and duration of complaints filed and treated under section 9(1)(A) of the IRA. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the recent legislative amendments on the duration of the recognition procedure, and to further review the legal framework governing the procedure for recognition of unions for collective bargaining purposes, including as regards the above-mentioned issues in relation to section 9(1)(A) of the IRA, with a view to significantly simplifying and expediting the administrative and judicial processes.

Exclusive bargaining rights. Minority unions. The Committee notes that the IRA and the Industrial Relations Regulations, as amended, require: (i) for a trade union seeking recognition in the event that an employer refuses recognition: a simple majority of votes cast by not less than half of the total number of workers entitled to vote (see section 2(1)(a) and 11 of the Industrial Relations Regulations); and (ii) for a trade union seeking sole bargaining rights: to obtain the highest number of votes (see section 12(A)(2), (3) and (4) of the IRA and section 2(1)(b) of the Industrial Relations Regulations). The Committee welcomes certain amendments to the formula in section 2(1)(a) and 11 of the Industrial Relations Regulations for a trade union seeking recognition (as regards the mode of calculation, namely the division in the number of votes in favour of a union by the number of votes cast, instead of, as in the former version, a division by the number of votes in favour of a union by the number of workers entitled to vote). It considers however that the new formula still requires broad support by the workers in a bargaining unit, which might be difficult to achieve. As highlighted in its previous comments, the Committee therefore requests the Government, to take, in consultation with the social partners, measures to ensure that, in situations where no union is declared the exclusive bargaining agent, all unions in the unit are able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Migrant workers. The Committee notes the reiterated indications of the Government that foreign workers are eligible to hold office upon approval of the Minister of Human Resources if it is in the interest of such a union and should the circumstances request as such. It also notes the Government's reference to a schoolteachers' union as an example of a trade union with most officers being non-Malaysian citizens. However, the Committee notes with regret that despite its reiterated requests, section 28(1)(a) of the Trade Union Act still provides that a person who is not a citizen of the Federation of Malaysia may not be elected to be a member of the executive entity of a trade union, unless the Minister of Human Resources considers that this is necessary for the representation of persons or interests of persons not residing within the Federation of Malaysia. Recalling that the requirement of prior approval of the Minister of Human Resources for foreign workers to hold trade union office may hinder the right of trade unions to freely choose their representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that foreign workers are able to run for trade union office without prior authorization.

Scope of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 13(3) of the IRA provides for restrictions on the inclusion of subject matters in collective agreements relating to: (a) promotions; (b) transfers; (c) appointment of workers in case of vacancies; (d) termination of services due to redundancy; (e) dismissal, reinstatement; and (f) assignment or allocation of work. It also noted that the same section provides that trade unions can raise questions of a general character in relation to these matters.

The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indications, in response to the Committee's request, that section 13(3) is not compulsory and that if both parties agree, they may negotiate and include those matters in relevant collective agreements. The Government further contests the ITUC's previous observation that section 13 of the IRA permits employers to dismiss questions of a general character raised by trade unions, and it indicates that in the event of a dispute on this matter, the aggrieved party may file a complaint under section 18 of the IRA as a trade dispute. The Government also indicates that the Department of Industrial Relations has not received any complaints regarding questions of a general character under section 13(3) of the IRA, and that the Department does not currently have data on the number of collective agreements that include the above-mentioned subject matters as this matter has not been specifically analysed. Taking due note of the above-mentioned indications, the Committee nevertheless observes that there appears to remain legal uncertainty on the practical application of section 13(3) of the IRA and its effect on the scope of negotiable issues. The Committee reiterates its invitation to the Government to consider lifting the broad legislative restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining, so as to promote the right to bargain freely between the parties, without any intervention by the Government. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements that include the above-mentioned subject matters as negotiated subjects, as well as any complaints raised in this respect, and the outcome of relevant disputes as decided by the Industrial Relations Department and the courts.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee had previously noted with interest that following amendments to certain provisions of the IRA (which have now entered into force) compulsory arbitration had been restricted to instances generally compatible with the Convention. However, it had also noted that section 26(2) provides that: trade disputes concerning "any Government service" and "the service of any statutory authority" may be referred to compulsory arbitration (with the consent of the King or State Authority); and it had also noted that the designation of a number of Government services in point 8 of the First Schedule of the IRA, may not be considered as services composed solely of public servants engaged in the administration of the State. It also noted that point 10 of the First Schedule, qualifies as essential services businesses and industries connected with the defence and security of the country (and recalled in this context that while the armed forces may be exempt from the provisions of the Convention, businesses and industries connected with them should be afforded the full guarantees of the Convention). Noting an absence of information in relation to any legislative developments as regards the issues noted above, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to: (i) further delimit the categories of Government services in section 26(2) of the IRA and point 8 of the First Schedule of that Act, so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration may only be imposed on those public servants engaged in the administration of the State; and (ii) remove businesses and industries mentioned in point 10 of the First Schedule of the IRA from the list of essential services so that their workers can be afforded the full guarantees of the Convention.

Restrictions on collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the exclusion of public sector employees from the chapter in the IRA on collective bargaining (see section 52(1), read in conjunction with Part IV of the IRA). In this respect, it also noted the ITUC's allegations that public servants are only consulted, but not integrated in processes of collective bargaining. The Committee also noted that the National Joint Council (NJC) and the Departmental Joint Council appeared to have a consultative status as opposed to being used as a platform for collective negotiation on issues relating to terms and conditions of employment of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its view that the NJC is not a forum for mere consultations with public sector unions. To corroborate this view, the Government refers to a number of elements, including that: (i) the minutes of the meetings in the NJC are signed by the parties of the NJC, implying a binding effect of any mutually-agreed decisions; (ii) the Government/employer is required, subject to financial and social implications, to transpose any decisions taken in the NJC into rules and regulations (i.e. service circulars); (iii) as a result of negotiations and bargaining in the NJC in 2022, three new service circulars were issued, which provide for improvements for public sector employees as regards their remuneration and benefits. While taking due note of all the elements above, including the advanced level of consultations, the Committee observes that the functions of the NJC as provided for in section 10 of Service Circular No. 6 are to "give opinions and discuss", "enable employees to propose changes for consideration by the Government", and "make recommendations", and that the functions of the Departmental Joint Council, pursuant to section 3 of Service Circular 7 are to "enable employees to express opinions" and "actively participate in discussions". The Committee therefore considers that the elements considered do not demonstrate the existence of a complete bargaining machinery on issues relating to the terms and conditions of employment of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Also recalling the conclusions of the Conference Committee in 2022 in this respect, the Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in law and practice, to enable collective bargaining machinery for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

Collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with concern the very low coverage of collective bargaining and observed that according to public statistics available in ILOSTAT in 2018, the collective bargaining coverage rate in Malaysia was 0.4 per cent. The Committee considered that this very low coverage could be related to the restrictive requirements in law and practice to engage in collective bargaining as discussed in its previous observation.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to measures taken to increase the membership of trade unions in the country (including legislative amendments, the allocation of a special budget and training activities), as well as to the total number of trade union members (which had reached 1 million in 2024). The Committee notes however with regret, that the Government has still not provided any statistical information in relation to collective bargaining in the country. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

While welcoming again the above-mentioned amendments that entered into force on 15 September 2024, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary action to remove all the remaining legal and practical obstacles to collective bargaining addressed in this comment and to take concrete measures to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining. In this respect, it strongly encourages the Government to continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office to work towards the full conformity of the national legislation with the principles of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that some cases of anti-union dismissals of workers were still pending before the courts nearly ten years after they had occurred. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's reply simply takes note of the Committee's observations and commits to taking the necessary measures without providing any details. The Committee urges the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that disputes concerning anti-union discrimination are addressed in a far more rapid manner and to continue providing specific information in this regard.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Determination of the representativeness of trade union organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the urgent need to determine the procedures for occupational elections in order to give full effect to the provisions of the Labour Code relating to collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, according to the Government: (i) the elections did not take place as expected in 2021 and that they will finally take place in 2025; (ii) the holding of two workshops in 2023 with trade union confederations, organized with the support of the ILO, enabled the confederations to agree on a representativeness threshold of 17 per cent, above which organizations will be considered representative; and (iii) Order No. 2024-1586/MTFPDS-SG of 31 May 2024 lays down the rules and procedures for the organization of occupational elections for the representativeness of workers' trade unions and trade union confederations. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, to enable occupational elections to be held in the public sector, the Social Stability and Growth Pact provides for the revision of the general conditions of service of public servants. While duly noting the progress made, the Committee reiterates the firm hope that the Government will soon be able to report on the holding of occupational elections, both in the private and public sectors, and that the results will make it possible to determine clearly the representative organizations for the purpose of collective bargaining at all levels. The Committee once again reminds the Government that it may request technical assistance from the Office in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide it with a copy of Order No. 2024-1586/MTFPDS-SG of 31 May 2024.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. With regard to the scope of application of the Convention and the exceptions concerning public servants, the Committee wishes to recall the distinction to be drawn between, on the one hand, public servants who by their functions are directly employed in the administration of the State (for example, civil servants in government ministries and other comparable bodies, as well as their auxiliaries) who may be excluded from the scope of application of the Convention and, on the other hand, all other persons employed by the Government, by public enterprises or by autonomous public institutions, who should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention. This second category of public employees includes, for instance, employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, as well as air transport personnel, whether or not they are considered in national law as belonging to the category of public servants (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). The Committee notes the Government's indication that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State are governed by the Labour Code, like employees in the private sector. In view of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is exercised in practice, on the legal mechanisms which enable this right to be exercised, and on any collective bargaining conducted in the public sector.

Promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) there are 16 sectoral collective agreements and 153 collective agreements in force within enterprises and establishments in the various sectors of activity; (ii) it still does not have statistical data on the number of workers covered; (iii) the work of the National Directorate of Labour (DNT) has led to the conclusion of a new collective agreement in the hotel industry and two in finance; (iv) discussions are under way with the social partners with a view to revising collective agreements in the commerce, pharmaceutical and community health sectors; and (v) 11 establishment agreements have been forwarded by the DNT to the Minister of Labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements and accords concluded in the country, including not only the sectors concerned but also the number of workers covered. Also noting the involvement of the DNT in the processes of revising and negotiating collective agreements, the Committee requests the Government to provide details of the DNT's mandate and the role it plays in such processes.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention Protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes once again with regret that the Government still has not included any explicit provisions on protection against anti-union discrimination and interference in the General Civil Service Regulations, even though it has indicated its intention to do so. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps in the near future to ensure that the legislation includes explicit provisions providing adequate protection against anti-union discrimination for public employees and against all acts of interference by the public authorities in the formation, functioning and administration of public employees' organizations, all of which should be accompanied by rapid and effective remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Article 7. Procedures for determining terms and conditions of employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that it was not established that public employees' organizations may participate in the determination of their terms and conditions of employment through negotiation or other methods within the joint administrative committees, as their competence is confined to individual issues. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on how, in practice, organizations representing public employees participate in the determination of their terms and conditions of employment. As to the right to collective bargaining of organizations representing public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Malta

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comment

The Committee previously took note of the observations of the General Workers' Unions (GWU), which had denounced violations of the right to organize in practice. The GWU alleged that various employers and contractors circumvent the legislative provisions on freedom of association by depriving their workers of their right to join trade unions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its reply thereto, and in particular, on the work carried out by the Department of Employment and Industrial Relations in relation to the alleged violations, which included conciliation meetings and inspections.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish organizations without previous authorization. The Committee had previously observed that section 51 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act, 2002 (EIRA) provides that a trade union or an employers' association and any member, officer or other official thereof, may not perform any act in furtherance of any of the purposes for which it is formed unless such union or association has first been registered, and that the penalty for contravention of this provision is a fine not exceeding €1,165. The Committee requested to the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal section 51 of the EIRA. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates the information it has previously provided on the importance of registration. The Committee recalls once again that the official recognition of an organization through its registration constitutes a relevant aspect of the right to organize, as it is the first measure to be taken so that organizations can fulfil their role effectively. At the same time, the Committee also recalls that the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent upon registration, nor should the exercise of such legitimate activities be subject to penalties. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal section 51 of the EIRA, in consultation with the social partners, and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to modify section 74(1) and (3) of the EIRA – according to which, if an amicable settlement of a trade dispute and conciliation has not resulted in a settlement, one of the parties may notify the Minister, who shall refer the dispute to the Industrial Tribunal for settlement – so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration may only take place with the approval of both parties or in circumstances in which a strike can be restricted or prohibited. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates that the mechanism provided by the above-mentioned section is to be used in case of failure of conciliation and that the purpose of the Industrial Tribunal would be gravely undermined if a party could not challenge another party unless the latter agrees. It further points out that this arrangement has never been disputed by trade unions. The Committee once again recalls that recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute is only acceptable when the two parties to the dispute so agree, or when a strike may be restricted or prohibited – that is, in the case of disputes concerning public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term or situations of acute national crisis. It further recalls that the failure of conciliation does not justify the imposition of compulsory arbitration. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to modify section 74(1) and (3) of the EIRA to ensure that compulsory arbitration may only take place with the approval of both parties or in circumstances in which a strike can be restricted or prohibited. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Article 9. Armed forces and the police. The Committee previously noted with interest the adoption of the Various Laws (Trade Union Membership of Disciplined Forces) Act, 2015 which amended the EIRA by adding a new section 67A, which gave members of the disciplined forces the right to become members of a registered trade union of their choice. It invited the Government to continue providing information on the practical application of section 67A of the EIRA. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that 2,099 members have registered with the Malta Police Union, 1,411 members have registered with the Police Officers Union and 95 members have registered with the Union of Civil Protection.

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous observations, given that, pursuant to the Employment and Industrial Relations Act, 2002 (EIRA) public officers, port workers and public transport workers are excluded from the jurisdiction of the industrial tribunal, the Committee had requested the Government to: (i) indicate before which body the public officers and the port workers may appeal against decisions taken by the Public Service Commission (PSC) and the Port Workers Board, respectively, in case they consider they were subject to anti-union dismissals; and (ii) indicate the specific procedures applicable for the examination of allegations of anti-union dismissals concerning scheduled public transport workers. With respect to public officers, the Committee notes that, the Government refers to sections 27–30 of the PSC Disciplinary Regulations but has not provided a response to the request. Regarding port workers, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that they are already members of and represented by the Malta Dockers Union (MDU). With respect to scheduled transport workers, the Committee notes that the Government informs that: (i) the Industrial Tribunal, which is regulated by the EIRA (Cap 452), is tasked to examine such allegations; (ii) the tribunal is free to regulate its own procedures but it is expected to observe the rules of natural justice and to decide on the substantive merits of the case in front of it; (iii) awards or decisions are binding on both parties; and (iv) in cases of unfair dismissal, the tribunal may order re-instatement of the employee or award compensation.

The Committee reiterates its request for the Government to indicate before which body the public officers and the port workers may appeal against decisions taken by the PSC and the Port Workers Board, in case they consider they were subject to anti-union dismissals.

The Committee also previously observed that the general sanctions set by section 45(1) of the EIRA might not be sufficiently dissuasive, particularly for large enterprises, and requested the Government to take the necessary measures, to provide for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that no changes are envisaged in section 45(1), but that employees can lodge a case with the industrial tribunal or civil court should they want to take further action against the employer. The Committee reiterates its request for the Government to take the necessary measures within the framework of the revision of the EIRA to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention by ensuring that sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are provided for acts of anti-union discrimination.

Articles 2 and 3. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to introduce in the legislation an explicit prohibition of acts of interference, as well as sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely indicates that sections 63 and 64 of the EIRA provide for immunity of trade unions and employers' associations against acts in contemplation or furtherance of trade disputes. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention requires the prohibition of acts of interference by organizations of workers and employers (or their agents) in each other's affairs, designed in particular to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt specific provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union interference, coupled with rapid appeal procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining in law and in practice. The Committee notes that the Government highlights that unions representing more than 50 per cent of employees or workers in any given establishment are normally granted recognition by employers and eventually are invited to negotiate collective agreements governing the employees of that establishment. The Committee recalls that in a previous report, following a request for clarification in this respect, the Government had indicated, that nothing in the law precludes employers from negotiating with unions representing less than 50 per cent of employees. Recalling that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativity to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining and that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide exhaustive information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the level in which they are concluded (national/sectoral/enterprise-establishment levels), the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered; and (ii) indicate the number of collective agreements signed with unions that do not reach the 50 per cent threshold.

Civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and of the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM) from 2017, concerning the violent repression resulting in deaths and the systematic arrests during trade union demonstrations. Deeply regretting the absence of information in this regard in the Government's report, the Committee once again urges the Government to provide its comments in response to the serious allegations above.

Article 3 of the Convention. Trade union elections. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Public Service and Labour has launched an inclusive process to determine which trade union organizations are the most representative. The Committee notes with interest the establishment of a technical committee created by the Ministry and the road map drawn up for the committee, including the adoption of regulations regarding the determination of representativity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments related to the reform of the electoral process for determining representativity with a view to holding the elections of workers' representatives.

Articles 2 and 3. Legislative amendments. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the following points:

- Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without prior authorization. The Committee emphasized the need to amend section 269 of the Labour Code, which makes the exercise of the right to organize by minors having access to the labour market as workers or apprentices (at 14 years of age, according to section 153 of the Labour Code) subject to permission from their parents or guardian.

- Right to organize of magistrates. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the legal basis ensuring that magistrates enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and to provide information on the organization in which magistrates exercise their trade union rights.
- Right of workers' organizations to freely elect their representatives and to organize their administration and activities in full freedom, without interference from the public authorities. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) review sections 268 and 273 of the Labour Code in order to make the conditions less rigid for eligibility as trade union leaders or officers, for example by removing the requirement to belong to the occupation for a reasonable proportion of leaders; and (ii) amend section 278 of the Labour Code, which makes any change in the administration or leadership of a trade union subject to approval by the competent authorities before it can take effect.
- Compulsory arbitration. The Committee emphasized the need to amend section 350 of the Labour Code, to restrict recourse to compulsory arbitration in the event of collective disputes only to cases involving an essential service in the strict sense of the term, that is a service the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population, and situations of acute national crisis.
- Duration of mediation. The Committee recommended amending section 346 of the Labour Code to reduce the maximum duration of the mediation phase (120 days) before a strike may be called.
- Strike pickets. Finally, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 359 of the Labour Code which prohibits the peaceful occupation of workplaces or their immediate surroundings and imposes penal sanctions against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike, with the possibility of prison sentences for such acts.

The Committee notes that the only legislative development mentioned by the Government concerns section 346 of the Labour Code. In this regard, the Committee notes that the draft amendment to this section reduces the period of mediation from 120 days to 60 days which, in the Committee's opinion, remains excessive. Otherwise, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information requested, and limits its response to indicating its intention to take up the revision of the Labour Code, without supplying details of the amendment of the provisions in question. Recalling that the matters raised above have been the subject of comments it has made over many years, the Committee expects that the current revision of the Labour Code will take due account of the recommendations it has made on the whole range of points set out above and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to conclude the revision of the Labour Code very shortly. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard, and requests the Government to continue to report on all developments.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Free Confederation of Mauritanian Workers (CLTM), which specifically reported intimidation, pressure and interference by the Government in trade union affairs, and threats and acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's assertion that all the necessary measures have been taken to initiate investigations into the above-mentioned allegations and that the appropriate measures will be taken if the trade union rights recognized in the Convention are found to have been impaired. The Committee requests the Government to provide details on the above-mentioned investigations and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the necessary measures would be taken, with a view to amending sections 350–356 of the Labour Code so as to limit recourse to compulsory arbitration, in the event of a collective dispute, to essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes with regret that the Government confines itself to reiterating that it will take the necessary measures to ensure that these sections do not pose an obstacle to recourse to arbitration and to guarantee that this stage of the dispute proceedings is not left simply to the discretion of the Minister of Labour. Recalling that compulsory arbitration, in the context of collective bargaining, is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), to essential services in the strict sense of the term (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) and to situations of acute national crisis, the Committee trusts that sections 350–356 of the Labour Code will be amended very soon, and requests the Government to provide detailed information on any measures taken in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee repeatedly insisted on the need to take the necessary measures without delay, with a view to adopting the Decree establishing the list of public establishments covered by section 68 of the Labour Code, which provides that, where the personnel of public services, enterprises and establishments is not governed by specific conditions of service set out in legislation or regulations, collective agreements may be concluded in accordance with the provisions applicable to simple collective agreements. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any information on the adoption of this Decree. Recalling the importance of ensuring that, in accordance with the Convention, the right to collective bargaining is effectively recognized for all public servants and employees not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee firmly expects the Decree establishing the list of public establishments covered by section 68 of the Labour Code to be adopted in the near future, and requests the Government to provide detailed information on any specific measures taken in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements. It urges the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote the use of collective bargaining mechanisms.

Duly noting the Government's indication that it wishes to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO, the Committee trusts that the Government will do its utmost to bring its legislation and practice into line with the Convention.

Mauritius

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), submitted with the Government's report, and the Government's reply.

Noting that the amendment, in 2019, of section 28(j) of the Employment Relations Act (ERA), provides for the establishment of a national tripartite council mandated to make recommendations to the Government on issues relating, inter alia, to the review of the operation and enforcement of labour legislation, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the recommendations made by the Council in relation to matters covered by the Convention, including any discussion and recommendations related to giving effect to the Committee's comments. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the first meeting of the National Council took place on 20 April 2023 and that two committees were subsequently established on the themes of "training, reskilling and employability" and "employment situation and challenges". Trusting that the work of these committees will cover the topics covered in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide any recommendation made by the Council or the committees on topics covered by the Convention or aimed at giving effect to the Committee's comments.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with regret that the work permit requirement provided for under the 2008 ERA had not been repealed and recalled that this requirement was not in conformity with the right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, which must be guaranteed for every worker residing in the territory of a State, whether or not they have a work permit. The Committee notes with interest the amendment introduced, in 2024, to section 13 of the ERA, allowing any worker linked to a Mauritian employer to join a trade union.

Self-employed workers. In its previous comment, the Committee emphasized the importance for all workers, including self-employed workers, to be able to establish and join trade union organizations and expressed regret that the law of Mauritius still does not allow this possibility to self-employed workers. It therefore again requested the Government to hold consultations with the social partners, including organizations representing self-employed workers, if such organizations exist, with the aim of ensuring that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, enjoy this right. The Committee notes with regret that no legislative amendments have been made and that the Government merely reiterates that self-employed workers enjoy the right to establish associations under the Registration of Associations Act. The Committee once again urges the Government to hold consultations with the social partners, including organizations representing self-employed workers, if such organizations exist, with the aim of ensuring that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, including self-employed workers, enjoy the right to establish and join organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 28 June 2024, and the National Trade Unions Confederation (NTUC) received on 4 September 2024 which are related to matters examined in the present comment.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the recommendations made by the National Tripartite Council (established by a reform of the Employment Relations Act (ERA) of 2019) in relation to matters covered by the Convention. The committee takes due note that the first meeting of the National Council took place on 20 April 2023. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any recommendations made by the Council in relation to matters covered by the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with interest the entry into force of the changes to the ERA, made in 2019:

- new section 31(1)(b)(iii) provides that no person shall discriminate against, victimize or otherwise prejudice a worker or an accredited workplace representative on any employment issue on the ground of his trade union activities;

- new section 64(1A) provides for stringent conditions to curb any decision to terminate workers' employment in relation to trade union membership or activities; and
- in section 2 of the ERA, the definition of labour dispute has been broadened to include reinstatement of a worker where the employment is terminated on the grounds specified in section 64(1A) (above-mentioned).

The Committee requested the Government to indicate the impact in practice of these amendments and to provide statistical data in that regard. The Committee notes the repeal of section 64(1A) of the ERA and its replacement by section 69 of the Worker's Rights Act (WRA), as well as the role given, under this new complaint mechanism, to the supervising officer appointed by the Minister of Labour. The Committee further notes with interest that the definition of harassment prohibited by section 114(1) of the ERA includes forms of harassment on grounds of the exercise of trade union rights (see section 114(7) of the Act); the fact that article 64(1)(d) expressly prohibits the termination of an employment relationship on the grounds of the exercise of trade union rights; and that section 69A provides that a worker dismissed on such grounds may claim reinstatement in his or her functions. The Committee notes, however, that under sections 69 and 70 of the WRA, the possibility for a worker to obtain compensation in the event of violation of trade union rights is limited to cases of dismissal of workers having been in continuous employment for a period of at least 12 months with an employer, and that the anti-union nature of the dismissal does not figure among the criteria for awarding additional damages. Moreover, the Committee also notes that the imposition of penalties for anti-union acts is restricted solely to cases of anti-union harassment, by virtue of section 114(1)(a), (5) and (7) of the WRA. The Committee recalls that anti-union discrimination is one of the most serious violations of freedom of association and all acts of discrimination related to employment must therefore be prohibited and sanctioned in practice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend the WRA to ensure that all acts of anti-union discrimination, regardless of whether they are directed at workers that have been in continuous employment for 12 months or constitute harassment, result in the imposition of specific penalties or in the payment of additional damages to be paid by the perpetrator. The Committee requests the Government to communicate all relevant information in this regard.

The Committee also notes the statistics provided by the Government concerning the number of disputes addressed by the competent authorities and that between 2021 and May 2024: (1) no cases of dismissal on anti-union grounds were registered; and (2) only two cases of anti-union discrimination were registered by the authorities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the two disputes were resolved to the satisfaction of the workers involved. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the nature of the provisions applied in the two cases of alleged anti-union discrimination. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed data on the number of complaints for anti-union discrimination, in particular for anti-union dismissal, that have been filed with the competent authorities (the labour inspection and the courts) and their outcomes, As well as the number and nature of the penalties imposed, or compensation granted.

In its previous comment, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the various amendments made to the ERA in 2019 would contribute to improving the rapidity and efficiency of the conciliation procedures undertaken by the Commission for Conciliation and Mediation (CCM) in respect of disputes involving allegations of anti-union discrimination. In this regard, the Committee notes the statistics supplied by the Government on the number of disputes submitted to the CCM between 2021 and May 2024, and notes that a large number of cases appear to have achieved resolution each year. The Committee requests the Government to clarify what becomes of the conciliation cases that are classified, each year, as "pending", and to indicate why in 2024, only 15 out of 230 conciliation cases achieved resolution, and why only 147 of the remaining cases, rather than 215, were classified as pending.

The Committee also reiterated its request to the Government to take measures with a view to accelerating judicial proceedings and to provide statistical data on their average duration, including with respect to cases that may arise in EPZs. The Committee notes that the Government restricts itself to indicating that the time limits applied to the treatment of files come under the State judiciary, and that the fixing of rules to be respected by the legal institutions, and in particular regarding time limits, come under the legislative authority. In this regard, while noting the Government's indications regarding legal amendments imposing maximum time limits to be respected for addressing certain complaints by different competent authorities established by the ERA and WRA (by virtue of sections 69A and 73 of the WRA and section 87 of the ERA), the Committee also notes the CTSP's observation that the absence of clear rules on time limits for legal proceedings opens the door to unreasonable delays of which the victims are the trade unions. Noting with regret that the Government has not supplied the statistical data requested in its previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to accelerate judicial proceedings and to provide statistical data on the average duration of judicial (or quasi-judicial) proceedings in respect of trade union rights, including with regard to cases arising in EPZs.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to clarify: (i) whether the revised section 69(9)(b) of the ERA allows for compulsory arbitration at the request of one of the parties; (ii) the rationale behind the removal of consultations with the social partners provided under section 87(2) of the ERA; and (iii) the impact in practice of the legislative amendments made to sections 69(3), 87(2) and 88(4) of the ERA on improving collective bargaining:

- With regard to section 69(9)(b), the Committee notes the Government's indication that the mechanism permitting, in case of deadlock in the CCM, one of the parties to refer the dispute to the employment relations tribunal, respects the spirit of collective bargaining, and that its underlying intention is to protect the more disadvantaged party in a negotiation. While noting that the two parties to negotiation both effectively enjoy the right to request compulsory arbitration in case of deadlock noted by the CCM, the Committee recalls that recourse to compulsory arbitration can only be compatible with the Convention in the following circumstances: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all necessary measures to amend section 69(9)(b) to bring it into conformity with the Convention.
- With regard to the removal of the consultations provided under section 87(2) of the ERA, that required the minister to hold consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers regarding the appointment or conciliators or mediators, the Committee notes the Government's indications, which concern the process of appointment of conciliators and mediators, but do not clarify the reasons for the removal of consultations. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to indicate the rationale for removing the consultations with the social partners provided by section 87(2) of the ERA.
- With regard to the impact of legislative amendments in practice, the Committee notes the Government's indications that 214 agreements were registered with the Ministry of Labour between January 2021 and December 2023 (new collective agreements and amendments to existing agreements). The Committee requests the Government to continue to indicate the impact in practice of the new provisions of the ERA, specifying in what particular manner they contribute to strengthening collective bargaining in Mauritius.

In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to strengthen inspection and awareness-raising activities in respect of collective bargaining, in particular in EPZs, the textile sector, sugar industry, manufacturing sector and other sectors employing migrant workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) 55 awareness-raising activities were conducted between 2021 and May 2024, reaching 808 EPZ and textile sector workers; and (ii) 151 inspections were carried out in EPZs, concerning 17,854 local workers, and 1,458 inspections were carried out in the manufacturing sector, concerning 70,155 migrant workers. Noting a sharp fall in activities and workers reached by them in comparison with the 2017–20 period, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the reasons for this decrease.

In its previous comment, the Committee also requested the Government to continue to provide statistics on the functioning of collective bargaining in practice, especially in EPZs. The Committee notes the registration of 214 collective agreements between 2021 and May 2024, but observes that it is not able to ascertain whether some of these agreements are applicable in EPZs and whether they apply to migrant workers. The Committee also notes the observations of the CTSP that at present no migrant worker is covered by a collective agreement. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's response to the CTSP, to the effect that migrant workers may, under section 13 of the ERA, become members of a union. In the light of these elements, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures rapidly, in consultation with the social partners, to greatly strengthen awareness-raising and inspection activities in respect of collective bargaining, especially in EPZs and in the economic sectors in which migrant workers are employed. It also requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, specifying the different sectors concerned – including EPZs – and the numbers of workers covered. Finally, noting the CTSP's observations in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the existence of collective bargaining at sectoral level, and of possible steps taken to promote such bargaining.

Article 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its last comment, the Committee requested the Government to transmit a copy of the regulation for the Employment Relations Committee once it had been adopted. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the Ministry of Public Services, Administrative and Institutional Reforms is still working on a draft regulation, and that it is still awaiting receipt of the written proposals and comments requested from the three principal public sector trade union federations. Considering the length of time passed since the announcement of the draft regulation for the Employment Relations Committee, the Committee expects that it will shortly be adopted and again requests the Government to transmit a copy once it has been adopted.

The Committee also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to effectively recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the Government's indications regarding the functioning of the authorities responsible for taking action in respect of the labour relations of all State officials, namely: the Wage Research Bureau and the Employment Relations Unit (ERU), but it was unable to ascertain, from this information, which were the mechanisms enabling public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to bargain collectively in respect of their working conditions. The Committee also notes the observation of the NTUC, which considers that the Government has decided to exclude trade unions representing all public servants from the possibility of engaging in collective bargaining. The Committee therefore requests the Government to respond to the observations of the NTUC and, once again, to take the necessary measures, together with the professional organizations concerned, to effectively recognize the right to collective bargaining for all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls, in this regard, that Mauritius has also ratified the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), which also covers public servants engaged in the administration of the State, and refers the Government to its comments under that Convention.

Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received with the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention. Public service. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which negotiations in the public service take place. The Committee notes the Government's indications regarding the functioning of the authorities responsible for taking action in respect of the labour relations of all public servants, namely, the Pay Research Bureau (PRB) and the Employment Relations Unit (ERU), but was unable to ascertain, from this information, which were the mechanisms enabling public servants' trade unions to engage in collective bargaining. While recalling that, under Article 1(3) of the Convention, as regards the public service, special modalities of application of this Convention may be fixed by national laws or regulations or national practice, the Committee emphasizes, once again, that the institution of simple consultations is not sufficient to give effect to the Convention, which applies to all workers and employers in all branches of economic activity, including in the public service as a whole. Consequently, recalling its similar observations adopted in the context of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), specifically in respect of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government, together with the professional organizations concerned, to take the necessary measures to effectively recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any new elements in this regard.

Article 5. Definition of labour dispute. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to indicate to what extent the definition of the term "labour dispute", stipulated in section 2 of the Employment Relations Act, and excludes disputes reported more than three years after the act or omission that gave rise to the dispute, is applied to collective labour disputes. The Committee duly notes the Government's response, indicating that in respect of the mandates accorded to the Conciliation Service of the Ministry of Public Services, Administrative and Institutional Reforms, all disputes are examined on their substance, regardless of the time limit of three years provided under section 2 of the Act. The Committee notes however, that the decision of the Labour Relations Tribunal (RN156/3), submitted by the Government to illustrate this principle in the context of the competence of the same tribunal, does not support this, as it concerns a decision on the modalities for applying the limitation period, and not for the non-application of that period. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on how it ensures that all collective labour disputes can be covered by measures aimed at their resolution.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government concerning the collective agreements registered in the public and private sectors, the resolution of disputes before the Commission for Conciliation and Mediation (CCM) and trade union recognition for the purpose of collective bargaining, and observes in particular that 254 collective agreements were registered between 2017 and April 2024 and that the CCM had dealt with 3,538 cases of trade union representation during the same period. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide these statistics, specifying the total number of workers covered by the collective agreements in force.

Mexico

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1950)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Mexico (CTM), the Authentic Workers' Confederation of the Republic of Mexico (CAT), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers and Employees of Mexico (CATEM) and the International Confederation of Workers (CIT), provided with the Government's report, on matters examined below.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Union of Workers in Positions of Trust of the Autonomous University of Chiapas (SITRACOUNACH), received on 19 September 2023 and 15 July 2024, and the observations of the National Federation of Workers (UNT), of 13 September 2024, also on matters raised below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee previously noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the UNT of 2018 alleging acts of anti-union violence, including the murder on 18 November 2017 of two miners who were participating in a strike in the state of Guerrero, attacks on over 130 unionized university workers in San Cristóbal de las Casas on 9 February 2017, as well as the death of a trade union activist in January 2018 after receiving threats relating to the promotion of a new union. The Committee notes that the Government requested specific and updated information from the organizations concerned on the cases referred to in order to be able to investigate them in consultation with the parties involved and adopt the necessary measures. It also notes that the CTM, in its observations, encourages the Government to proceed with the necessary investigations and inquiries. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate the allegations, and to punish and eradicate all acts of anti-union violence. It also once again invites the organizations concerned to provide the Government with any additional specific information that they have.

Article 2 of the Convention. Conciliation and arbitration boards. Constitutional reform of the labour justice system. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government and the concerns expressed by the social partners, and encouraged the Government to continue ensuring that the subsequent stages of the constitutional reform of the labour justice system are submitted to broad and effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) in October 2022, the third and final stage of the reform started with the commencement of activities by federal and local conciliation centres and labour tribunals, and the closing down of the conciliation and arbitration boards; (ii) the transition was made to a system based on alternative means for the settlement of disputes, the intensive use of new technologies and guarantees of the principles of impartiality, neutrality and independence in the administration and delivery of labour justice; (iii) there are 114 labour conciliation centres in the 32 federative entities, with a conciliation rate of 78 per cent at the national level and an average duration of the conciliation procedure of 23 days; (iv) 160 seats of local labour courts were established in the 32 federative entities, with a settlement rate of 48 per cent at the national level and an average period for settlement of 273 working days; (v) the National Concertation and Productivity Committee (CNCP) was established as an advisory body composed of representatives of employers, labour and academia, with the purpose of improving conciliation procedures, registration, trade union representation and collective bargaining, as well as promoting social dialogue; and (vi) the Secretariat of Labour and Social Insurance (STPS) has participated in negotiation and conciliation round tables with independent and minority unions and has established the General Social Dialogue Department to facilitate negotiation and voluntary dialogue between the parties.

The Committee also notes the following observations from the social partners in this regard: (i) the CATEM indicates that access to the labour justice system has improved significantly as a result of the new independent labour courts, which have resolved over 30,000 cases since their creation, many of them related to the defence of the right to organize and collective bargaining; (ii) the CAT indicates that the public officials responsible for the procedures that have to be followed by trade unions within the context of the reform lack training; and (iii) the CTM indicates that it has proposed the holding of meetings with the Federal Conciliation and Labour Registration Centre (CFCRL) to assess the progress of the labour reform and its implementation with a view to determining what needs to be corrected and strengthened, and the need for improved application. Welcoming the substantial progress reported, the Committee encourages the Government to continue submitting developments in the implementation of the labour reform to effective and continuous tripartite consultations, including through the CNCP and with the participation of the CFCRL, with a view to addressing the remaining concerns and providing the necessary training to ensure full compliance with the Convention in both law and practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee also notes that in 2023 the ILO Office for Mexico and Cuba commenced the implementation of the project on observation and commitment to the realization of the rights of freedom of association and collective bargaining (OBSERVAR), which seeks to provide technical assistance and training to employers' and workers' organizations and to the Government on the basis of the comments of the supervisory bodies and the respective Conventions. In this context, the Committee encourages the Government to have full recourse to ILO technical assistance.

Trade union representativity. Trade unions and protection contracts. In its previous observation, the Committee encouraged the Government to take additional measures to ensure that the legal validation processes for collective agreements were fully in accordance with freedom of association and urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to address the continuing problems of protection unions and contracts which were affecting the right of workers to establish and join unions of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) during the four-year period that was granted to unions to validate collective labour agreements, which elapsed on 1 May 2023, a little over 30,500 collective labour agreements were validated, with 663 being rejected, while 108,000 collective labour contracts lapsed as their own signatory unions failed to put them forward for consultation with their members; (ii) as a result of this extraordinary effort, for which the unions were responsible, supported and monitored by the STPS and the CFCRL, protection contracts were invalidated and unrepresentative unions revealed; (iii) all new collective labour agreements, as well as agreements that have been completely revised and agreements setting new wage levels are put to a vote by the workers; (iv) as a result of these consultations, by May 2024, some 3,101 new collective agreements had been registered, as well as 10,720 fully revised agreements and 14,988 agreements setting revised wage levels; (v) the new labour model guarantees the personal, free, secret and direct votes of workers for the election of trade union leaders as well as the documents confirming representativity; and (vi) with a view to ensuring transparency and confidence in trade union democratic processes, the CFCRL is empowered to carry out electoral verification prior, during and following consultations.

In relation to the observations of the trade unions, the Committee notes CATEM's indication that the reform has provided an incentive for a significant increase in independent unionization, and that the establishment of the CFCRL has been fundamental in ensuring that unions and collective labour agreements are democratic and transparent. At the same time, the CIT indicates that there are still employers and union leaders who are continuing to operate as they did under the former model, and whose illegal and corrupt practices are not always challenged by the Government or the responsible institutions and officials; and the UNT alleges that there remain protection unions close to employers, as well as anomalies in the procedures for confirming representativity in practice. While welcoming the progress achieved by the Government in the legitimation of collective labour agreements, and its commitment to the transparency of trade union democratic procedures, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to intensify its efforts to combat and eliminate the persisting practices associated with the former model with a view to guaranteeing the right of workers to establish and join the organizations of their own choosing.

Publication of the registration of trade unions. In its previous observation, the Committee took due note of the progress made in the implementation of a single register of trade unions and collective agreements at the national level under the responsibility of the CFCRL, as well as allegations of the persistence of difficulties in practice in accessing information on existing trade unions and collective agreements, and requested the Government to follow up on these allegations. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) it has no statistical data on complaints or requests relating to difficulties of access to information on trade unions; (ii) the CFCRL has fully complied with the transparency requirements established at the national level, and has not been issued with any observations or recommendations in this regard by the responsible body, the National Institute for Transparency, Access to Information and the Protection of Personal Data; and (iii) as a support to the public, to jurisdictional, governmental and private bodies, and social institutions, two electronic platforms have been created based on data provided by the CFCRL. These platforms are the Directory of Labour Registration Information, through which it is possible to have access to documents related to accreditation procedures, collective labour agreements, internal rules and other procedures, and a webpage of validated collective agreements. The Committee also notes the CTM's indications in its observations that the CFCRL has not yet digitalized all of the records of the local conciliation and arbitration boards. Welcoming the establishment of the electronic platforms referred to above to facilitate access to trade union information, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full digitalization of the records of the local conciliation and arbitration boards and to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3. Public sector workers. In its previous comment, the Committee reiterated its request to the Government to amend sections 72 and 75 of the Federal Act on State Employees (LFTSE), and the legislative declaration establishing the trade union monopoly of the National Federation of Banking Unions (FENASIB), which restrict trade union pluralism in State institutions and the possibility of the re-election of trade union leaders. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has confined itself to indicating that it is continuing to analyse the legislative changes requested and will assess whether it is opportune to implement them as a function of national circumstances and the priorities of the legislative agenda. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the amendment of sections 72 and 75 of LFTSE, as well as the legislative declaration of the trade union monopoly of the FENASIB, with a view to ensuring that all workers in the public sector, with the sole possible exception of the police and the armed forces, enjoy the guarantees set out in the Convention.

Personnel in positions of trust. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegations made by IndustriALL Global Union (IndustriALL) on the persistence in the centralized public sector of the model of union control through union organizations whose leadership is close to those in political power, and on the unlawful classification of rank-and-file workers as "personnel in positions of trust", and to specify whether workers in positions of trust covered by the LFTSE have the right to join a union or to establish their own trade unions. The Committee notes that the Government: (i) requests IndustriALL to provide precise information and specific cases of the persistence of the model of union control in order to be able to respond to the allegations; and (ii) indicates that, although section 8 of the LFTSE excludes workers in positions of trust from its scope of application, the provisions of the Federal Labour Act (LFT) are instead applicable and, although section 183 of the Federal Labour Act provides that workers in positions of trust may not join the unions covering other workers, it does not prevent them from organizing to establish their own unions. The Committee also notes that the SITRACOUNACH, in its observations, denounces a series of rulings by the Local Conciliation and Arbitration Board of the state of Chiapas denying trade union registration and recognition of legal status prior to the labour reform. The Committee requests the Government to: indicate the criteria for the determination of whether a worker is in a position of trust; take the necessary measures to ensure that this characteristic of "trust" is not used for the purpose of restricting freedom of association; and provide statistical data on the number of unions of workers in positions of trust that exist in the country in the sectors covered by both the Federal Labour Act and the LFTSE. The Committee also invites IndustriALL to provide the Government with any additional information that is at its disposal in relation to the allegations referred to above. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the concerns raised by the SITRACOUNACH regarding trade union protection in the state of Chiapas have been addressed under the labour reform.

Registration of trade unions and accreditation of elected trade union representatives ("toma de nota"). The Committee previously encouraged the Government to effectively monitor and follow up on the allegations of obstacles to the establishment and recognition of independent unions and the procedure for their accreditation ("toma de nota"), as described by IndustriALL and the ITUC. The Committee notes that the Government: (i) reiterates that the functions of the registration of trade unions have been transferred to the CFCRL, which is responsible for the procedure, except in the case of organizations of workers in the service of the State, in respect of whom the competence is vested with the Federal Conciliation and Arbitration Tribunal; and (ii) indicates that, under the new labour model, the principles of autonomy, equity, democracy, legality, transparency, certainty, provision free-of-charge, immediacy and respect for freedom of association and its guarantees have been applied. The Committee also notes the allegations by the UNT in its observations that there are various obstacles in the procedures for obtaining the registration of a trade union in the transport sector, as well as the unjustified refusal to provide accreditation for the leaders of a union in the education sector. Regretting that the Government has not specifically addressed in its report the allegations made by IndustriALL and the ITUC, the Committee once again encourages it, in consultation with the social partners, to effectively monitor and follow up on these allegations, as well as those made by the UNT, and to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Article 3. Right to elect trade union representatives in full freedom. Prohibition on foreign nationals becoming members of trade union executive bodies (section 372 of the Federal Labour Act). The Committee previously requested the Government to amend section 372 of the Federal Labour Act, which prohibits foreign nationals from being members of trade union executive bodies. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that this provision is not applied in practice, as the Federal Labour Act does not establish any penalty for non-compliance and the authorities do not verify the nationality of trade union leaders, adding that there are trade union statutes which recognize the possibility for foreign nationals to participate in executive bodies. It also notes the indication by the CTM in its observations that this amendment lies within the competence of the legislative authority, which needs to assess whether it is appropriate. Recalling once again the need to ensure the conformity of the legislative provisions with the Convention, even where they are in abeyance or are not applied in practice, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 372 of the Federal Labour Act with a view to making explicit the tacit repeal of the restriction on foreign nationals being members of trade union executive bodies.

Montenegro

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Union of Free Trade Unions of Montenegro (UFTUM) received on 31 August 2021, referring to the matters addressed below.

The Committee takes note of the adoption of the Law on Civil Servants and State Employees (2018), the Labour Law (2019), a revised Rulebook on the Registration of Trade Unions (2019) and a Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations (2019), as well as the Government's indication that there have been no legislative changes or other measures that significantly affect the application of the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right to organize activities in full freedom. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that under section 18 of the Law on Strikes, 2015, the police, employees of state bodies and the public service could organize a strike in a way that would not endanger national security, safety of persons and property, the general interest of citizens or the functioning of government authorities and that in such occupations, minimum services must be ensured. Having noted that it was the prerogative of the state authority responsible for national security to determine whether the organization of a strike endangered the general interest of citizens and functioning of government authorities, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Law on Strikes in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that responsibility for declaring a strike illegal rests with an independent body that has the confidence of the parties involved. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in line with section 7, work disruption not organized in accordance with the provisions of the Law on Strikes shall be considered an illegal strike; (ii) section 31 of the Law provides that the employer, the representative association of employers, the representative trade union or the strike committee can initiate a procedure for determining the illegality of a strike or unlawful dismissal, which will be decided upon by the competent court within five days of such a request (this provision applies to any organized strike regardless of the area of activity in which it is organized); and (iii) the assessment under section 18 of whether the organization of a strike for the above employees endangers the general interest of citizens and functioning of government authorities is done by the public authority responsible for national security. While taking due note of this indication, the Committee understands that even if section 18 does not, in its wording, refer to the determination of the legality of a strike (which is regulated by section 31, providing for a judicial determination irrespective of the area of activity in which the strike is organized), section 18 provides for an assessment by a public authority of whether a strike endangers the general interest of citizens and functioning of government authorities and thus, whether it can lawfully take place under section 18 or not. The Committee notes in this regard the observations made by the UFTUM that: (i) at the drafting stage, a representative from the UFTUM warned that section 18 was not sustainable as the National Security Agency was a security intelligence service whose work implied the secrecy of information; (ii) the National Security Agency may declare that a strike endangers the public interest, and is therefore illegal, without prescribed clear criteria, acting in its own discretion and without the possibility of objections from the initiators of the strike; and (iii) the UFTUM submitted an initiative to review the constitutionality of section 18 of the Law on Strikes after its entry into force but has not yet received a response from the Constitutional Court. While noting the Government's submission that Article 9 of the Convention leaves it to Members States to determine the extent to which the guarantees of the Convention apply to members of the armed forces and the police, the Committee observes that section 18 of the Law on Strikes also regulates the right to strike of employees of state bodies and the public service who are not excluded from the scope of the Convention under Article 9 and who, unless they are engaged in essential services in the strict sense of the term or exercising authority in the name of the State, should benefit from the right to strike. In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Law on Strikes in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that any determination of whether a strike organized under section 18 endangers the general interest of citizens and functioning of government authorities, and is therefore illegal, is the prerogative of an independent body that has the confidence of the parties involved. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the current status of the initiative to review the constitutionality of section 18 filed to the Constitutional Court by the UFTUM.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension by administrative decision. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate whether suspensive effect was granted to an appeal, made pursuant to the Law on General Administrative Procedure, of a decision to delete a trade union organization from the register pursuant to section 10(3) of the former Rulebook on the Registration of Trade Union Organizations – deletion if the registration was based on inaccurate data from the applicant or on the application of an unauthorized person (possibility currently also provided under section 12(3) of the revised Rulebook and section 13(3) of the Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations). The Committee notes the Government's indication that an appeal filed against a decision of the Ministry of Labour to delete a union from the register does not have suspensive effect in that it does not delay the execution of the decision. Recalling that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations and should only take place following a normal judicial procedure which should have the effect of a stay of execution, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including any necessary legislative amendments, to ensure that the procedure to delete a trade union organization from the register (pursuant to section 12(3) of the revised Rulebook on the Registration of Trade Unions and section 13(3) of the Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations) provides such safeguards.

The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that while the revised Rulebook on the Registration of Trade Unions did not modify the reasons for deletion of a trade union from the register, it introduced a new sub-paragraph stipulating that the procedure for deleting a trade union under section 12(3) (previously section 10(3)) – if the registration was based on inaccurate data from the applicant or on the application of an unauthorized person – can be initiated by a registered trade union (section 13 of the Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations provides for the same possibility). The Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the effect of the new sub-paragraph is simply to allow the concerned union to initiate the procedure for deleting it from the register in the previously described circumstances, or whether it enables any registered trade union to request deletion of another union from the register under section 12(3) of the Rulebook and section 13(3) of the Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations, and if so, to indicate the grounds for having introduced this possibility.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Union of Free Trade Unions of Montenegro (UFTUM) received on 31 August 2021, alleging lack of adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Law on the Representativeness of Trade Unions (2018), the Labour Law (2019), the Rulebook on the Registration of Representative Trade Union Organizations (2019) and the General Collective Agreement (2019), as well as the Government's indication that there have been no changes in legislative or other measures that significantly affect the application of the Convention. The Government adds that the Committee's previous comments were presented to the tripartite working group which drafted the Labour Law and were largely respected and that further amendments to the Labour Law are foreseen for which the technical assistance of the Office would be useful.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to pursue its efforts to amend the legislation so as to ensure the provision of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination against union members and officials. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) section 189 of the new Labour Law prescribes voluntary membership in a trade union or employers' association and stipulates that no one can be placed in a less favourable position due to membership in such organizations and participation or failure to participate in their activities; (ii) section 7 prohibits direct and indirect discrimination against persons seeking employment, as well as employees, on the ground of, among others, trade union membership; (iii) section 8 details what constitutes direct and indirect discrimination; (iv) section 13 prohibits discrimination on the basis of membership and participation in organizations of employees and employers; and (v) section 209(1)(1) stipulates fines for violations of sections 7, 8 and 13 by a legal entity in the amount of EUR 1'000 to 10'000. The Committee also observes that a fine ranging from EUR100 to 1,000 shall be imposed on the responsible person in the legal entity for violations of sections 7, 8 and 13 (section 209(2)). It further notes that section 173(5) stipulates that acting as a representative of employees in line with the law does not constitute a justified reason for termination of employment, that section 196 provides protection against anti-union discrimination against trade union representatives during their mandate, as well as six months after its termination, and that section 180(5) stipulates the possibility of reinstatement and compensation in case of illegal dismissal. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the above provisions. The Committee observes, however, the concerns raised by the UFTUM in this respect, alleging lack of adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in practice, in particular numerous cases of discrimination against trade union representatives and the absence of prosecution of employers. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 209(1)(1) of the Labour Law concerning anti-union discrimination cases, in particular the type of violations identified, the nature of the remedies and the amount of the fines imposed.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting acts of interference by the employer or employers' organizations and making express provision for rapid appeal procedures, accompanied with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's statement in this regard that, under section 197(1) of the Labour Law, the employer is obliged to provide employees with the free exercise of trade union rights and that freedom of trade union organization creates positive and negative obligations for the employer towards the trade union: the positive obligation is to provide conditions for trade union work and to sanction all persons who prevent or hinder trade union activities, whereas the negative obligation implies the absence of any administrative or other barriers by the employer that could prevent or hinder the exercise of trade union rights. The Government adds that the Law on the Representativeness of Trade Unions prescribes general conditions for determining the representativeness of trade unions, which include independence from public authorities, employers and political parties, and it clarifies that in order to establish a quality social dialogue, it is essential to ensure the independence of trade unions from public authorities, employers and political parties. While taking due note of the general obligations of the employer vis-à-vis trade unions and the importance of trade union independence invoked by the Government, the Committee observes that the Government does not point to provisions which provide specific protection against acts of interference by employers or employers' organizations in the establishment, functioning and administration of trade unions, and vice versa, as established in Article 2(2) of the Convention, in particular acts designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to place workers' organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations through financial or other means. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to take measures to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting acts of interference by the employer or employers' organizations as established in Article 2(2) of the Convention and making express provision for rapid appeal procedures, accompanied with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. General Collective Agreement. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend sections 149 and 150 of the Labour Law so as to ensure that the Government may only participate in the negotiation of a general collective agreement on issues linked to the minimum wage and that matters relating to other terms of employment are subject only to bipartite collective bargaining between employers and their organizations and workers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that many issues previously regulated by the General Collective Agreement (certain rights concerning the employment relationship, salaries, disciplinary responsibilities, termination of the employment contract and conditions for trade union activities) are now governed by the Labour Law and that the General Collective Agreement will thus mainly contain provisions relating to the determination of wages and the calculation of salaries. The Committee observes however the Government's statement that the General Collective Agreement will also regulate other issues (such as the limitation of overtime work, and increases in annual leave and unpaid leave) in some sectors where branch collective agreements have not been concluded so as to protect the rights of employees (the banking and trade sectors). The Committee further notes that, under section 183 of the revised Labour Law, a general collective agreement defines, in addition to elements for the determination of wages, also the scope of the rights and obligations arising out of employment and that section 184(1) provides for the Government's participation in the conclusion of a general collective agreement. While emphasizing the importance and relevance of concertation between the Government and the social partners on matters of common interest, the Committee recalls that the Convention tends essentially to promote bipartite negotiation and to limit the participation of public authorities to issues which are broad in scope, such as the formulation of legislation and economic or social policy, or the fixing of the minimum wage rate. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, the necessary measures to amend the relevant provisions of the Labour Law to ensure that the general collective agreements are concluded in full compliance with the Convention.

Representativeness of employers' federations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to either substantially reduce or repeal the minimum requirements for an employers' federation to be considered as representative (under the current legislation, it must employ a minimum of 25 per cent of employees in the economy of Montenegro and participate in the gross domestic product of Montenegro with a minimum of 25 per cent). While taking due note of the Government's indication that the tripartite working group that drafted the Labour Law agreed to retain the current legal provision and that, as a result, the conditions for determining the representativeness of employers' associations have not been changed (section 198 of the revised Labour Law), the Committee wishes to recall that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativeness to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee therefore invites the Government to continue to assess, together with the social partners, whether the current minimum requirements for representativeness of employers' associations continue to be adapted to the specific characteristics of the country's industrial relations system, with a view to ensuring the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining.

The Committee also previously noted that the affiliation of employers' associations to international or regional employers' confederations was a prerequisite for them to be considered as being representative at the national level and requested the Government to pursue consultations with the social partners concerned to ensure that the prerequisites for employers' organizations to bargain at the national level are in line with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while the Rulebook on the manner and procedure of registration of employers' associations and detailed criteria for determining the representativeness of authorized employers' associations (2005) is still in force, further amendments to the Labour Law and the Rulebook should be made in 2022, in particular to create a complete legal basis for the procedure of establishing the representativeness, the manner and the procedure for registration of employers' associations, as well as detailed criteria for determining their representativeness. Welcoming this information, as well as the Government's indication that the Committee's comments will be presented to the tripartite working group so as to achieve full compliance with the Convention, the Committee recalls once again that, for an employers' association to be able to negotiate a collective agreement, it should be sufficient to establish that it is sufficiently representative at the appropriate level, regardless of its international or regional affiliation or non-affiliation. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the context of the upcoming Labour Law reform and in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the prerequisites for employers' organizations to bargain at the national level are in line with the Convention, in particular with regard to their freedom to affiliate or not to affiliate with international or regional organizations.

The Committee reminds the Government that the technical assistance of the Office remains at its disposal, if it so wishes, as regards the legal issues raised in this observation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Morocco

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee previously asked the Government to provide its comments on the 2017 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) containing allegations of anti-union acts, including dismissals of trade union leaders at a steel company and in the port sector. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has still not provided any comments on these observations. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide its comments on the 2017 ITUC allegations concerning anti-union acts.

Article 4 of the Convention. Representativeness required for collective bargaining. The Committee previously asked the Government to engage in consultations with the social partners with a view to adopting the Trade Union Bill, thereby easing the conditions for the representativeness required to engage in collective bargaining. The Government indicates in its report that the Trade Union Bill will be discussed in a special committee originating from the "National Charter for the institutionalization of social dialogue" signed by the Government and the social partners.

As regards the representativeness threshold, the Government indicates, firstly, that the proportion of 35 per cent, indicated in section 425 of the Labour Code (2004), stemmed from a consensus between the Government and the employers' and workers' organizations at the time the Code was adopted and, secondly, that the trade unions have the possibility of combining as coalitions, enjoying the same rights as trade unions. While noting this information, the Committee recalls that among the measures envisaged for easing the conditions for representativeness, apart from setting up an inter-union grouping if no union achieves the percentage required to be regarded as representative at the enterprise or establishment level, the Trade Union Bill planned to reduce the rate of representativeness from 35 to 25 per cent. The Committee requests the Government to engage as soon as possible in consultations with the social partners, especially within the special committee referred to above, with a view to adopting the Trade Union Bill and thus ease the conditions for the representativeness required to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all new developments in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for certain categories of public servants and employees not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously urged the Government to take all necessary steps to amend the legislation so as to ensure that prison administration staff and lighthouse, water and forestry workers, and also public employees and civil servants who perform duties involving the right to carry a weapon, enjoy the rights to organize and engage in collective bargaining. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government merely indicates that: (i) the specific nature of the sectors concerned, and the sensitivity, nature and security aspect of the tasks assigned to the staff in question justify their exclusion from the scope of application of the Convention; (ii) the above-mentioned staff members are obliged to carry a weapon in the course of their duties; and (iii) the above-mentioned categories of workers can group together in various types of association to defend their rights. The Committee once again recalls that prison administration staff and lighthouse, water and forestry workers cannot be deemed to have the same status as the police or armed forces. Hence, they should not be excluded from the scope of the Convention, pursuant to Article 5 thereof, and should be granted the rights guaranteed under the Convention, including the right to collective bargaining. The Committee once again urges the Government to take all necessary steps to amend the legislation to ensure that the above-mentioned categories of workers enjoy the right to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of all progress made in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indications that, further to the implementation in the private sector of the "National Plan to promote collective bargaining" adopted in 2017, a total of 200 establishments have been targeted with a view to concluding collective agreements, and 100 collective agreements have been registered with the governmental labour authority as at 31 December 2023 (43 in industry, 38 in the services sector, 7 in construction and public works, 5 in agriculture, 5 in commerce and 2 in the maritime sector). The Committee also welcomes the Government's indication that, with a view to achieving the objectives of the "National Plan to promote collective bargaining", the Ministry for Economic Inclusion, Small Enterprises, Employment and Skills: (i) has drawn up a methodological and practical guide regarding the promotion and exercise of collective bargaining and the conclusion of collective labour agreements; and (ii) has created a national award for the signatories of three agreements chosen by an evaluation and selection committee.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that two annual social dialogue sessions are organized in consultation with the social partners, in order to discuss topics proposed by the latter and with the aim of concluding tripartite labour agreements. Taking due note of the various above-mentioned elements, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining and on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, and the sectors concerned. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Mozambique

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted with regret the lack of action taken by the Government to investigate alleged acts of violence against striking workers in the sugar-cane plantation sector and emphasized that where such cases are brought to the Government's attention, the competent authorities should begin an inquiry immediately and take appropriate measures to bring the perpetrators to justice. The Committee notes that the Government emphasizes that, through the Labour Mediation and Arbitration Commission (COMAL) and the General Inspection of Labour, it is committed to rigorously investigate the events to ascertain the facts and apply the appropriate sanctions to bring about justice. It further notes the Government's indication that it will provide information on the matter in its next reports. Recalling that the abovementioned allegations were brought to the Government's attention in 2008, the Committee expects that the events will be investigated shortly, and urges the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the inquiry and, in case of conviction, on the sanctions imposed.

The Committee also takes note of the observations of Public Services International (PSI) received on 1 October 2020, which refer to the conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3296 and denounce the failure by the Government to amend the legislation to facilitate the registration of a public sector union. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Registration of workers' and employers' organizations. In its last observation, the Committee expected that the Government would take the necessary legislative measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring into conformity with the Convention section 150 of the Labour Act, which allows the central authority of the labour administration an unduly restrictive period of 45 days to register a trade union or an employers' organization. It also requested the Government to provide information on the current application in practice of section 150 in the meantime (number of trade unions registered in a year and the time taken by the requesting authorities to register a union). The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the revision process of the Labour Act is not yet completed; (ii) the information on the number of trade unions registered in a year will be provided as soon as available; and (iii) the information on the time taken by the requesting authorities to register a union will be provided as soon as the new Labour Act is approved. The Committee expects that the revision process of the Labour Act will be completed in the near future and that, in full consultation with the social partners, the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that section 150 is brought into line with the Convention. It requests the Government to inform of any evolution in this respect and to provide a copy of the new Labour Act once adopted. The Committee also reiterates its request for the Government to provide information on the practical application of the existing provision, specifically for the years 2019, 2020, and 2021 (number of trade unions registered in a year and the time taken by the requesting authorities to register a union).

Article 3. Penal responsibility of striking workers. The Committee previously expressed its expectation that the Government would take the necessary measures to amend section 268(3) of the Labour Act, under the terms of which any violation of sections 199 (freedom to work of non-strikers), 202(1) and 209(1) (minimum services) constitutes a breach of discipline for which workers who are on strike are liable under both civil and penal law. The Committee notes that the Government states that the Labour Act is still under revision and that it will inform of the new measures once the revision is completed. The Committee recalls that it considers that adequate safeguards and immunities from civil liability are necessary to ensure respect for the right of workers to exercise legitimate industrial action. It further recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and on no account should measures of imprisonment be imposed except in cases of violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights and only pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. The Committee trusts that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that amendments to the abovementioned provisions are included in its revision of the Labour Act so as to bring these provisions into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any evolution in this regard and reminds it that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2010 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) regarding acts of anti-union discrimination in export processing zones. The Committee notes with regret that the Government once again has not provided any information in this respect.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take all the necessary measures to be able to provide specific statistics on the number of complaints, including judicial complaints, related to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, and the number of fines imposed. The Committee notes the Government's indication that four complaints related to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference were registered in 2019 and 2020. It notes however that no information was provided on how these complaints were addressed by the public authorities or on the outcomes of the related procedures. Highlighting that the small number of anti-union discrimination and interference complaints may be due to reasons other than an absence of acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, on the one hand, the competent authorities take fully into account the issues of anti-union discrimination and interference in their control and prevention activities and that, on the other hand, the workers and employers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding these issues. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as specific statistics on the number of complaints, including judicial complaints, related to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, and the number of fines imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1955)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry (UMFCCI) and of the Myanmar Seafarers Federation (MSF), communicated with the report of the military authorities. The Committee further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 and 15 November 2024, which concern the matters addressed below. The Committee also notes the reply of the military authorities to the 2022 ITUC observations. The Committee requests that the military authorities provide comments on the 2024 ITUC observations, which point to severe and continued repression of workers and trade unionists in the post-coup context.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee recalls that the Commission of Inquiry established by the Governing Body to examine the non-observance by Myanmar of this Convention, among others, issued its report on 4 August 2023. The Committee notes that the Governing Body discussed the follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry at its 350th, 351st and 352nd Sessions (March, June and November 2024). At its 352nd Session, the Governing Body noted with utmost concern the absence of any concrete action towards the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and observed that, according to reports from trade unions, workers in Myanmar continue to face severe oppression and exploitation, denial of basic employment rights, widespread labour rights abuses and violent suppression of workers' protests, exacerbated by the military regime's oppressive tactics, threats and persecution, which have effectively outlawed any form of organized labour. The Governing Body therefore repeated its call for Myanmar to ensure that employers' and workers' organizations are able to exercise their rights in a climate of freedom and security, free from violence, arbitrary arrest and detention, by means of the full implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, which include the revocation of any military orders, legislative or other measures, decreed since February 2021 and identified as restricting freedom of association and the basic civil liberties of trade unionists. The Governing Body also decided to place on the agenda of the 113th Session (2025) of the International Labour Conference an item concerning measures under article 33 of the Constitution to secure compliance by Myanmar with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and requested the Director-General to submit to the Governing Body at its 353rd Session (March 2025) a draft resolution concerning the measures to be taken under article 33 of the ILO Constitution in light of its discussion.

The Committee observes with deep concern the above information which indicates a complete lack of progress in implementing the 2023 recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and shows a total denial by the military authorities of the gravity of the situation affecting civil liberties and freedom of association in the country.

Civil liberties. Violence and repression against trade unionists. The Committee previously called for a full and independent investigation into the circumstances of the killings of three unionists (Chan Myae Kyaw, Nay Lin Zaw and Zaw Htwe). The Committee notes the indication of the military authorities that, according to a March 2022 court order, the death of Zaw Htwe was caused by action of the security forces taken in line with the applicable legislation. With regard to the other two unionists, the military authorities reiterate information provided previously (no casualties were found at the protest where Chan Myae Kyaw is said to have been shot and there were no events of a crackdown by security guards where Nay Lin Zaw is said to have died). While further noting the general justification put forward by the military authorities as to the need for the security forces to intervene to counter violent protests that were causing injuries and destruction and were considered as terrorism, the Committee deplores the repeated reports of continued violence against trade unionists from the ITUC and its affiliates and also observed by the ILO Governing Body and the Committee on Freedom of Association (see Case No. 3405, 407th Report, June 2024, paragraphs 299 and 304). The Committee notes in this respect that the ITUC raises concerns about the increasingly vulnerable situation of workers and trade unionists who continue to face severe repression and grave violations of civil liberties and trade union rights and points to the abduction and killing of two unionists in the southern Sagaing region in May 2022. The Committee recalls that freedom of association can only be exercised in conditions in which fundamental human rights are fully respected and guaranteed, and in particular those, relating to human life, dignity and personal safety. In line with the above, the Committee urges that all measures be taken to cease all action threatening the right to life and physical integrity of trade unionists. It further urges that an investigation be conducted by an independent and impartial entity into the circumstances of killings of trade union members reported by the ITUC and requests to receive a full report on the outcome of such investigations and the measures taken to prosecute and punish the guilty parties.

Arrest, detention, threats and other restrictions on civil liberties. Having previously noted serious allegations of a number of arrests and detentions of trade unionists, the Committee called for the immediate release of any trade unionists detained or imprisoned for having exercised their trade union rights protected under the Convention. The Committee notes that the military authorities assert that no one has been arrested for peacefully exercising their labour rights, only those who violated the law, and that thousands have been released following the granting of pardons, including the chairperson of the Myanmar Industries Craft and Services Trade Union Federation (MICS-TUsF) in Hmawbi Township and a member of the Confederation of Trade Unions Myanmar (CTUM), who had been detained in Insein prison (released in November 2022 and August 2023), but that some individuals face criminal charges for having committed unlawful acts, including terrorist activities. Similarly, charges have been made in the case of several CTUM executive committee members and of Thet Hnin Aung, the MICS-TUsF General Secretary, who, after having served his first sentence and having been released in March 2023, was rearrested and sentenced to seven years of imprisonment under sections 52(a) of the Anti-Terrorism Law and 505-A of the Penal Code in November 2023 for his involvement in unlawful activities; he remains detained. The Committee notes with deep concern the continued detention of the MICS-TUsF leader, as well as the observations of the ITUC that the military continue to systematically stigmatize the CTUM, its affiliates and its leaders, associating them with "terrorist organizations", that trade union leaders and activists are arrested simply for having exercised their rights to freedom of speech, assembly and association and that those who remain detained suffer ill-treatment, abuse, torture and sexual assault. The ITUC points to an incident of beatings and arrest of two female unionists from the Industrial Workers' Federation of Myanmar (IWFM) in April 2022 (one was released after having served 2 out of 3 years of her sentence), as well as the arrest of striking workers in a garment factory in the Watayar Industrial Zone in Yangon in August 2024 after the management called in the military, the police, the administration and the ward administrators.

The Committee further notes with concern that while the military authorities claim that workers and employers can freely exercise freedom of association (a position also supported by the MSF and the UMFCCI), the ITUC reports a tightening control, surveillance and suppression of fundamental freedoms, systematic union busting in all economic sectors and raids on union offices and homes of union leaders, coupled with a lack of labour law enforcement, labour inspection and functioning dispute settlement mechanisms. The ITUC points to several problematic practices, including the use of Workers' Coordination Committees (WCC), the composition of which is mostly hand-picked by the management, to replace trade unions; interference in trade union affairs by requesting workers to re-elect new CTUM leadership; and threats by the management of a sportswear factory in Shwe Lin Ban Industrial Zone to call in the military to arrest striking workers in August 2024. The ITUC argues that it is impossible to exercise freedom of association in the country without a significant risk and raises concerns that without genuine freedom of association, the increasingly vulnerable situation of workers, repression and exploitation will remain hidden and unreported.

The Committee is deeply alarmed at the continuing repression of workers and trade unionists characterized by arrests and other serious restrictions on basic civil liberties, and it urges that all measures be taken to ensure full respect for the basic civil liberties necessary for the exercise of freedom of association, including freedom of opinion and expression, freedom of assembly, freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal, so that workers' and employers' organizations can carry out their activities and functions without threat of intimidation or harm and in a climate of complete security. Further, the Committee urges the immediate release of MICS-TUsF leader and any other trade unionists still detained or imprisoned for having exercised their trade union rights protected under the Convention.

Criminalization of basic civil liberties. The Committee also previously requested the repeal of section 505-A of the Penal Code (a broad and vague definition of the term "treason"), the amendment of section 124-A of the Penal Code (a broad wording of "a criminal act") and the revision of section 38(c) of the Electronic Transaction Act (ETA) (penalizing the spreading of false news (undefined)), all of which were introduced or expanded after the February 2021 military coup. The Committee observes that the Commission of Inquiry also considered that the above amendments to the Penal Code were broadly worded, subject to extensive interpretation and used to criminalize legitimate trade union activities and that a number of other amendments (such as section 38(c) of the ETA), expanded the grounds for State regulation of freedom of speech, with a chilling effect on the population; it therefore called on the military authorities to revoke those legislative measures. Observing that the above provisions have far-reaching applications that can be brought to bear in a manner so as to compromise the exercise of basic civil liberties necessary for the full exercise of trade union rights and that, since 2021, many reported arrests and detentions of workers, including trade unionists, have been based on these provisions, the Committee calls once again for the repeal of section 505-A of the Penal Code, as well as the revocation of post-2021 amendments to section 124-A of the Penal Code and section 38(c) of the ETA.

Labour law reform process. In light of the deeply concerning deterioration of the situation in the country, the Committee is strongly convinced that priority must be given to the restoration of democratic and civilian rule. The Commission of Inquiry also observed the importance of taking steps to preserve democracy and considered that democratic institutions were needed for the protection of fundamental rights and freedoms. The Committee nevertheless wishes to recall its previous comments concerning the labour law reform process in the country for further action once the democratic institutions and processes, as well as a democratically elected government, are restored. The Committee notes in this respect that the ITUC points to several pieces of legislation, which need to be brought in line with the Convention, including the ETA; the Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession, 2016; the Labour Organization Law, 2011; the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law, 2012 and the Special Economic Zone Law, 2014.

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum membership requirement. The Committee had previously encouraged consultations within the framework of the National Tripartite Dialogue Forum (NTDF) concerning the membership requirements and pyramidal structure set out in the Labour Organization Law so as to ensure that all workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, are able, not only in law but also in practice, to fully exercise their rights under the Convention, bearing in mind key difficulties faced by parts of the population, such as those in remote areas. The Committee trusts that, once a democratically elected government resumes power, genuine tripartite consultations will take place to ensure that all workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, are able to fully exercise their rights under the Convention and that the membership requirements and pyramidal structure set out in the Labour Organization Law do not restrict this right in practice. The Committee also requests information on any denials of registration, including reasons for such decisions and procedures for review and appeal of such denials.

Article 3. Eligibility to trade union office. The Committee previously noted the restrictions for eligibility to trade union office set out in the Rules to the Labour Organization Law, including the obligation to have been working in the same trade or activity for at least six months (no initial time period should be required) and the obligation for foreign workers to have met a residency requirement of five years (this period should be reduced to a reasonable level such as three years), as well as the requirement to obtain permission from the relevant labour federation under section 40(b) of the Law in order to go on strike. The Committee once again expresses its expectation that, as soon as conditions permit, all of the above matters will be reviewed within the framework of the legislative reform process in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure fully the rights of workers and employers under the Convention.

The Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession, 2016. The Committee recalls from its previous comments that the Chapter on Rules and the corresponding Chapter on Offences and Penalties of the Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession could give rise to serious restrictions on the right of organizations to carry out their activities without interference (incidents of prosecution of unionists for peaceful protests). The Committee therefore calls for all steps to be taken to ensure that workers and employers are able to carry out and support their peaceful activities without threat of imprisonment, violence or other violations of their civil liberties by police or private security and that the Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession not be used in any way to restrict these rights.

Settlement of Disputes Law, 2012. The Committee previously noted the 2019 amendments of the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law and requested the text of the amended law and its implementing Rules. The Committee notes that the amended law contains a number of provisions that may in practice raise issues of compatibility with the Convention: (i) section 2(a) adopts a different definition of workers than the one in the Labour Organization Law and excludes certain categories of workers from its scope of application – civil servants, defence services personnel, members of the police and members of the armed forces; (ii) under section 2(f)(vi), the Ministry of Labour, Immigration and Population can unilaterally declare a service essential, in addition to those provided by the law; (iii) section 25 provides for automatic referral of unresolved disputes by the conciliation body to the arbitration body; and (iv) sections 10–22 attribute State entities a crucial role in the appointment, composition and functioning of the dispute settlement mechanisms, which may raise concerns of full independence of these entities from State authorities. While noting from the observations of the ITUC and the report of the Commission of Inquiry that, in the present situation, the dispute resolution system is not functioning properly, despite the military authorities suggesting otherwise, the Committee trusts that, once the conditions allow, the Settlement of Disputes Law will be amended to ensure full compliance with the Convention and will be applied in a manner to ensure the effective protection of the right to organize.

Special economic zones (SEZs). The Committee previously requested all necessary measures to be taken to guarantee fully the rights under the Convention to workers in SEZs, including by ensuring that the Special Economic Zones Law does not contradict the application of the Labour Organization Law and the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law in SEZs, and suggested that this matter be followed up within the framework of the NTDF as soon as conditions permit. The Committee reiterates its request.

The Committee deeply deplores the far-reaching humanitarian crisis in the country and the reports of continued grave violations of basic civil liberties and labour rights of workers and employers under the military rule, including numerous deaths, massive detentions and arrest of trade unionists, threats, oppression and other serious labour rights violations, which have severely undermined prospects to freely exercise freedom of association in the country. Recalling the interdependence of freedom of association and basic civil liberties, also highlighted by the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee strongly urges the military authorities to refrain from any further acts or measures that put in peril, directly or indirectly, the life and safety of workers and trade union members and thereby restrict the free exercise of trade union rights protected by the Convention. The Committee is also deeply concerned with the delay in restoring democratic governance in the country which is necessary for the exercise of freedom of association, the authorities' continued denial of the seriousness of the situation, and the total lack of progress regarding the Committee's previous recommendations and the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, despite regular follow-up of the issues by the ILO supervisory mechanisms and the Governing Body. Given the urgency and the gravity of the situation, the Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take into account the Committee's requests detailed above and to implement without delay the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry calling for the cessation or reversal of any measures or actions that violate the Convention, and to provide information on all the steps taken in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of prison staff. The Committee previously requested the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that prison staff have the right to establish and join organizations for furthering and defending their interests; and recalls in this respect that a Tripartite Task Force, established to review the Labour Act, 2007, proposed the deletion of section 2(2)(d), which excludes members of the prison services from its scope. The Committee recalls the Government's indication that the Task Force was to submit its final report to the responsible minister before December 2021. The Committee notes the Government's only indication that the Task Force is at an advanced stage with its work and that a copy of the text will be supplied if the amendments are adopted into law. Noting with regret that the work of the Task Force has not yet yielded tangible results, as had been previously indicated by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to expedite the process for adoption of the necessary legislative amendments to ensure that the prison staff enjoy the guarantees under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1995)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection in practice against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the competent authorities take fully into account in their activities the issue of anti-union discrimination and that workers are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee notes the Government's indications that it has implemented a range of initiatives to raise workers' awareness of their rights. The Committee refers to the written information provided by the Government on 24 May 2023 to the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee) in the context of the preliminary list of individual cases which concerns: (i) an awareness campaign called #KnowYouLabourLaws, to educate the public on labour and employment laws (including the protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference); and (ii) a training session for arbitrators organized in collaboration with the ILO on how to handle, among other things, disputes relating to anti-union discrimination.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide any statistics concerning the anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities and the decisions taken thereon. The Government indicates that no cases alleging anti-union discrimination were brought to courts or to arbitration. The Committee recalls the importance of receiving information on administrative and judicial practice in order to assess the effective application of the Convention and reiterates that the absence of complaints may be due to reasons other than the absence of acts of anti-union discrimination such as, inter alia, the lack of awareness of workers concerning their trade union rights. While taking due note of the actions reported, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that, on the one hand, the competent authorities take fully into account in their control and prevention activities the issue of anti-union discrimination, and that, on the other hand, the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on measures taken in this regard, as well as to keep providing information on any statistics concerning anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities and the decisions taken in this respect.

Articles 1 and 4. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and promotion of collective bargaining in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee notes the Government's indication that EPZ regimes no longer exist in the country. The Committee notes in this regard the adoption of a Special Economic Zone (SEZ) Policy, aimed to ensure a seamless transition from the prior EPZs to a new SEZ regime, and a bill called "Sustainable Special Economic Zones Act" which, when enacted, will repeal the Export Processing Zones Act, 1995. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarifications on the date of abrogation of the EPZ regime, as well as on the applicability of the rights enshrined in the Convention in SEZs.

Article 4. Recognition for the purposes of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to ensure that the reform of the legislation by the Tripartite Task Force envisages solutions allowing for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining where no union or group of unions would represent 50 per cent of the workers within the bargaining unit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not reported any progress in this respect and only indicated, in the aforementioned written information provided to the Conference Committee in 2023, that the amendment of the Labour Act will allow a group of trade unions to be recognized as the exclusive bargaining agent provided that they represent at least 50 per cent of workers in a given bargaining unit. Noting that the Government does not refer to a possible change of the representativeness threshold, the Committee recalls that if no union or group of unions represent the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to the existing unions, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that the reform of the Labour Act will grant minority trade unions the right to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members, in cases where no union or group of unions meet the conditions to be considered as representative. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Article 6. Rights of prison staff. The Committee recalls that a Tripartite Task Force was established to review the Labour Act and intended to delete section 2(d) to ensure the right of prison service staff to enjoy the guarantees under the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to indicating that a copy of the new Labour Act will be submitted to the ILO once the amendments are signed into law. Noting that the work of the Task Force has not yet yielded tangible results, the Committee firmly hopes that said amendments will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Collective bargaining of trade union federations and confederations. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed its expectation that the revision of the Labour Act would explicitly provide the right of federations and confederations to bargain collectively. The Committee notes the Government's only indication that the amendments on this issue are not finalized yet. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous request and firmly hopes that said amendments will be adopted in the near future.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Nepal

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations provided by the General Federation of Nepalese Trade Unions (GEFONT) received on 1 September 2024, which refer to matters examined by the Committee below.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation an explicit prohibition of all acts of anti-union discrimination as well as effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in case of violation of this prohibition. While taking due note of the indications provided by the Government concerning sections 8, 163(1)(c) and (f) of the Labour Act, 2017, and emphasizing the general nature of these provisions, the Committee notes that the Government acknowledges the absence of an explicit prohibition of anti-union discrimination. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a tripartite task force to revise the Labour Act was recently created, in which this subject matter could be discussed. The Committee further notes that the Government expresses willingness to conduct different types of activities with respect to anti-union discrimination, such as adopting an awareness programme. In view of the above, the Committee firmly hopes that an explicit prohibition of all acts of discrimination based on trade union membership or participation in trade union activities (such as transfers, demotions or refusal of training) at all stages of employment (including recruitment), as well as effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in case of violation of this prohibition, will be introduced into the legislation in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination dealt with by the competent authorities, the length of the proceedings and their outcome. The Committee notes the Government's indications that no case was registered on this matter during the reporting period and that there is a need for more awareness in this regard among workers. The Committee requests the Government to keep providing information on anti-union discrimination cases brought before the competent authorities and recalls the importance of such information in order to assess the effectiveness of the protection afforded by the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures carried out to raise awareness among workers in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the number of complaints of acts of interference examined, the duration of the procedures and the sanctions applied. The Committee notes that no case of interference has been reported. The Committee further notes the observations made by the GEFONT in this regard, namely: (i) the absence of complaints may reflect a lack of awareness among workers or underreporting due to fear of reprisals; and (ii) the Government should implement awareness programmes in this respect, as well as proactively monitor and investigate potential acts of interference by establishing a confidential and independent body. The Committee notes in this respect that the Government emphasizes the need for improving the complaint registration process and recording system, and indicates that updates are currently under development with the ILO's technical assistance in order to have a transparent and accessible complaint mechanism and to collect information on claims related to interference. The Committee requests the Government to keep providing information on complaints related to acts of interference, as well as on any development regarding the complaint registration process and recording system.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Negotiation with trade unions versus negotiation with non-union actors. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 116(1) of the Labour Act, concerning the composition of collective bargaining committees. In particular, the Committee had requested the Government to clarify which circumstances might impede the election of the trade union authorized to bargain collectively in an enterprise and, therefore, its participation in the collective bargaining committee. The Government indicates that the trade union elections could not be held on time due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and that pursuant to sections 10 to 12 of the Trade Union Rules, 1993, it is currently discussing and coordinating the new election with the stakeholders. The Committee expects that the Government will conduct the election of trade unions authorized to bargain collectively without further delay and requests to be informed in this respect. Recalling once again that negotiation with non-union actors should only be possible in the absence of trade unions at the relevant level, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded with trade unions in comparison with non-union actors, the sectors and the number of workers concerned.

Different levels of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to amend section 123 of the Labour Act (which provides a special regulatory regime for collective bargaining in specific sectors) in order to ensure its compatibility with the principles of collective bargaining, which must be promoted at all levels while being free and voluntary. The Committee recalls in particular that it requested the Government to clarify how section 123(3) would allow for sectoral collective bargaining to be compatible with collective bargaining at any level whatsoever. The Committee understands, from the Government's indication, that section 123(3) allows negotiation at all levels, except on matters where sectoral level agreements are already in force. The Committee takes note of the example provided by the Government concerning the tea production sector, where a minimum wage agreement was concluded at the sectoral level, which does not prevent collective bargaining at another level in areas that are not covered by the sectoral agreement. The Committee further notes that the Government will engage in consultations with the relevant stakeholders to ensure the effective implementation and promotion of collective bargaining at all levels. Finally, the Committee notes the observations of the GEFONT that section 123 should be amended to ensure that collective bargaining is not restricted to specific sectors or levels. Emphasizing that, in accordance with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining enshrined in Article 4 of the Convention, the parties should be free to negotiate, at the enterprise level, collective agreements that improve the working conditions set in sectoral agreements, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to bring section 123 of the Labour Act into full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee had also requested the Government to provide information on the rationale behind the selection of sectors enlisted in section 123 of the Labour Act, as well as the number of collective agreements concluded at the sectoral level in these sectors and in sectors other than those mentioned therein, so to assess the breadth of sectoral collective bargaining in the country. The Government indicates that sectoral collective bargaining was carried out in the sectors mentioned in section 123 before the incorporation of this provision in the Labour Act, hence the existence of this special regime. The Committee regrets however that the Government does not provide any information concerning the number of sectoral collective agreements in force. Recalling that collective bargaining at sectoral level should be possible in all sectors of activity covered by the Convention, the Committee is compelled to repeat its request to the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded at the sectoral level and the sectors concerned.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that compulsory arbitration can only take place in the situations compatible with the Convention, namely: (i) in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (iii) in case of acute national crisis. The Committee notes the Government' s indication that the aforementioned tripartite task force will discuss the issue of compulsory arbitration as part of the revision of the Labour Act. The Committee firmly hopes that the legislation will be amended so that compulsory arbitration can only take place in the situations mentioned above. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Composition of arbitration bodies. The Committee had requested the Government to clarify how the arbitration panel and tribunal differ from one another, as well as to indicate the procedure undertaken to select the worker and employer representatives to ensure the full independence of these bodies. The Government indicates that an arbitration panel is a temporary body formed to resolve a specific case, whereas an arbitration tribunal is a permanent body (however not yet established) competent to resolve several cases of a similar nature. Concerning the selection procedure of an arbitration panel's members, the Committee notes that: (i) the Joint Trade Union Coordination Center (JTUCC) and the Federation of Nepalese Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FNCCI) nominate one representative each; and (ii) the Ministry nominates an official as coordinator. The Committee also notes that a specific procedure on arbitration is currently under development, including a procedure for the selection of members to ensure that the arbitration process involves independent representatives. The Committee notes that the GEFONT emphasizes the importance of transparency of this process. The Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning the development of the aforementioned procedure on arbitration, and firmly hopes that it will take the necessary measures so that the selection procedure of the members of the arbitration bodies is transparent and guarantees their full independence.

ILO's technical assistance. The Committee notes that the Government expresses interest in receiving the ILO's technical assistance concerning anti-union discrimination and collective bargaining. It hopes that such assistance will contribute to the full implementation of the Convention in the country.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation transmitted with the Government's report and which refer to questions examined by the Committee, as well as the Government's response thereto.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the legislation did not contain provisions specifically prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination in the course of employment, but only provided for the employer's obligation to be a good employer (section 7:611 of the Civil Code). It also noted the Government's indication that anti-union discrimination acts could be denounced under the Equal Treatment Act to the Recruitment Code Complaints Committee of the Dutch Association for Personnel Management and Organization Development (NVP).

As a result, and in order to ensure that these various provisions and mechanisms were in practice sufficiently protective against acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed and updated information on any complaint of anti-union discrimination brought to the Institute for Human Rights, the NVP, the courts or other competent authorities. The Committee recalls that it has also repeatedly encouraged the Government to engage in dialogue with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations to strengthen protections for both trade union members and representatives, ensuring coverage of all forms of anti-union discrimination, including those occurring during employment.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that no claim relating to anti-union discrimination has been received by the Institute for Human Rights or the national courts, and no complaint on this issue has been submitted to the NVP since the last report. The Committee also takes note of the renewal of the Government's action plan against labour market discrimination for the 2022–25 period. The Government indicates that this plan enables the Netherlands Labour Authority to monitor companies' and organizations' adherence to labour regulations and impose fines for violations, although no complaint on anti-union discrimination has been reported so far. The Committee finally notes the Government's indication that it has engaged with the social partners on anti-union discrimination during its regular 2023 consultations with the Labour Foundation and its intention to continue this dialogue in the second half of 2024.

The Committee notes that the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) and the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) allege that: (i) invoking the obligation to be a good employer is too vague to be effective and the burden of proof is placed entirely on the employee; (ii) while work council members are protected under national law against disadvantage, members of a trade union are not; (iii) since the Dutch Equal Treatment Act narrowly defines discrimination grounds, excluding anti-union discrimination, the Institute for Human Rights lacks authority to hear anti-union discrimination cases, and, therefore, the absence of action before this body is not surprising; and (iv) although article 7:670 of the Dutch Civil Code prohibits employers from terminating employment solely due to union membership or participation, this protection does not cover temporary workers, who may face non-renewal without explanation.

The Committee notes the Government's reply under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), indicating that the Equal Treatment Act regulates the prohibition of discrimination based on different grounds, including with respect to union members, since it prohibits direct and indirect discrimination based on political opinion or belief or any other ground.

The Committee takes note of these different elements. It observes both the absence of specific provisions explicitly prohibiting anti-union acts in the course of employment and the absence, since the last report of the Government of any complaint alleging anti-union discrimination before the different bodies signalled by the Government as competent for receiving and processing such complaints. The Committee stresses in this respect that the general nature of the provisions cited by the Government, which do not refer specifically to anti-union discrimination, may constitute an obstacle to the lodging of complaints in this area.

In light of the above, and emphasizing the need to adopt specific legislative provisions in relation to anti-union discrimination (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 174), the Committee requests the Government to take, in consultation with the representative social partners, the necessary measures to adopt specific provisions that, as it is already the case for anti-union dismissal, explicitly prohibit anti-union discrimination in the course of employment, providing for effective procedures and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee further requests the Government to provide its comments on the FNV and CNV allegations that temporary workers would not be adequately protected against the non-renewal of contracts based on anti-union grounds.

Article 4. Self-employed workers and the use of machinery and procedures to facilitate and promote collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it has been examining the restrictions placed on the right to collective bargaining of self-employed workers as a result of decisions of the Netherlands Authority for Consumers and Markets (ACM). In its last comment, the Committee took note of the ACM's 2017 and 2019 guidelines, on price arrangements between self-employed workers which recognized the right to collective bargaining to certain limited categories of self-employed workers (those who work side-by-side with employees). The Committee also noted that the ACM would not impose fines in respect of arrangements between and with self-employed workers aimed at guaranteeing their subsistence level.

The Committee thus recalled that: (i) the Convention only provides for exceptions to its personal scope of application in respect of the armed forces and the police (Article 5) and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6), and that it therefore applies to all other workers, including self-employed workers; and (ii) a limitation of the material scope of collective bargaining in respect of remuneration to the mere guarantee of subsistence conditions would be contrary to the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining recognized by Article 4 of the Convention. On that basis the Committee invited the Government to hold consultations with the parties concerned to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention, irrespective of their contractual status, are authorized to participate in free and voluntary collective bargaining.

The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that in February 2023, the ACM published a revision of its guidelines on price arrangements, now allowing self-employed workers in the Netherlands to bargain under the full scope of the 2022 European Commission Guidelines on applying the European Union competition law to collective agreements regarding the working conditions of solo self-employed persons. The Government also points out that these European guidelines, which outline how self-employed workers can engage in collectively bargaining without violating EU competition rules, are directly applicable to Dutch national law, as competition law is primarily regulated at the European level. In this respect, the Committee takes note of the FNV and CNV's observation that trade unions have not yet experienced the practical application of the ACM guidelines. The Committee notes that the Government also indicates that three seats on the Dutch socio-economic Council (SER) have been allocated to representatives of, and experts on, self-employed workers. Recalling its previous comments concerning the personal and material scope of collective bargaining under the Convention and while welcoming the information provided, the Committee invites the Government to: (i) promote dialogue between all the parties concerned in order to foster the development of collective bargaining mechanisms for the various categories of self-employed persons and provide information in this respect; and (ii) provide detailed information on the number and content of collective agreements concluded involving self-employed workers, as a result of the new ACM guidelines.

Articles 2 and 4. Protection against interference in the context of collective bargaining mechanisms. In response to concerns raised by several trade unions that small unions or those lacking sufficient independence were signing collective agreements which applied to all workers pursuant to the Dutch collective bargaining system, the Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on: (i) the mechanisms available to guarantee that the will of the most representative workers' organizations is taken into account in the negotiation, conclusion and extension of collective agreements; (ii) the criteria applied in order to assess the independence of a union and any existing case law on the subject; and (iii) the number of collective agreements concluded and the number of those extended, where the signatory workers' organization is not the most representative in the bargaining unit concerned.

The Committee notes that, in their 2024 observation, the FNV and CNV: (i) highlight the lack of information provided by the Government with respect to the indicators used in the country to establish the representativeness and independence of trade unions ; (ii) refer to a 26 April 2024 Supreme Court ruling, in which the Court, based in particular on the representativeness, of the FNV, did consider that a company was obliged to negotiate with the FNV rather than with a work council; and (iii) reiterate that, despite this ruling, since the Dutch legislation does not impose representativeness and independence requirements on unions seeking to conclude collective labour agreements (CLAs), employers can bypass unions that can provide the most counterbalance, therefore undermining the authenticity and effectiveness of the entire bargaining process.

The Committee notes that the Government: (i) reiterates that the only legal requirement imposed to the parties for the registration of CLAs is that they must be authorized to conclude such agreements under their statutes; (ii) indicates that it is currently engaging in discussions with the social partners about the CLA-system, including topics such as the principle of independence and the collective agreement coverage in the Dutch system; and (iii) it is studying the verdict of the Supreme Court ruling mentioned by the FNV and CNV.

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government and by the trade union confederations confirms the absence in the legislation of criteria of representativeness and independence in order to determine, in a context of trade union pluralism, the trade union organizations entitled to sign collective agreements (which, according to Dutch law, apply to all the workers in the bargaining unit). The Committee notes that the Supreme Court decision cited by FNV and CNV relies on the representativeness of a trade union organization to determine its right to demand to enter into negotiations with an employer. The Committee notes however that it has not received any information concerning any court decisions setting a certain representativeness threshold in order for a union to be able to conclude a collective agreement. In this respect, the Committee reiterates that it considers that a system that would allow a collective agreement to be applied to all workers in a bargaining unit despite of being opposed by the most representative trade unions concerned, would raise problems of compatibility with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining recognized by the Convention. Taking due note of the Government's indication of ongoing consultations with the social partners concerning the collective bargaining system in the country, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to introduce representativeness and independence requirements for the signing of collective agreements in situations where there are several trade union organizations within the same bargaining unit. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect. In light of the aforementioned Supreme Court ruling, the Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the possibility under the Dutch system to engage in collective bargaining with work councils rather than with trade unions.

Previous comment

The committee takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2024, reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention. The Committee further notes the observations of the Employer Council St Maarten (ECSM), received on 30 October 2024, and of the Windward Islands Civil Servants' Union/Private Sector Union (WICSU/PSU), the Windward Islands Teachers Union (WITU), the Windward Island Health Care Union Association (WIHCUA) and the Algemene Politie Bond (NAPB), received on 2 November 2024, referring to the issues addressed by the Committee below and alleging difficulties with the exercise of freedom of association rights in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2024 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to: (i) define, in meaningful and effective consultation with respective social partners, criteria of representativeness of employers' and workers' organizations that are clear, pre-determined and objective; (ii) engage in meaningful and effective dialogue with workers' and employers' organizations on all matters affecting their interests or the interests of their members, in full compliance with the Convention, including on the composition of the socio-economic council (SER); and (iii) take the necessary measures to ensure that workers' and employers' representatives on the SER are only appointed by fully autonomous organizations freely established or chosen by workers and employers, and convene the SER without delay. Finally, the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide information on the above measures including all outstanding information requested by the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2024.

The Committee notes the report of the ILO technical assistance mission, carried out on 20–24 October 2024, which consisted of a tripartite workshop on this Convention and on the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), to improve understanding of these instruments by the tripartite constituents. The Committee notes from the mission report that the workshop resulted in an agreement that a series of measures needed to be taken at the national level with a view to: (i) establishing criteria for representativity; (ii) strengthening bipartite social dialogue between workers and employers; (iii) enhancing transparency and the social partners' inclusion in the decision-making processes; and (iv) expanding opportunities for training and capacity-building for the tripartite constituents. The Committee welcomes this development and requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken to implement the agreed upon measures, which also aim at addressing the Committee's comments below.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee previously noted the information from the ECSM that the Government has granted the Soualiga Employer Association (SEA), whose establishment had been facilitated by a governmental agency, one seat at the SER, and had strongly urged the Government to ensure that workers' and employers' representatives to the SER were only appointed by organizations which were freely established or chosen by workers and employers. The Committee notes the Government's statement to the Conference Committee that it has re-evaluated its position and decided not to include the SEA in the process of nominating members to the SER. It notes, however, from the discussion that took place at the Conference Committee and the mission report, that the Government has nominated to the SER a third association, the Small Properties Association and that the ECSM was challenging the nomination. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the process of appointing members to the SER has been finalized and assures that employers' and workers' representatives appointed as members of the SER were nominated by employers' and workers' organizations that were freely established or chosen by employers or workers respectively. The Committee notes with deep regret, however, that the Government's indication appears to contradict the information shared by the social partners during the tripartite workshop in October 2024, who raised concerns about the lack of consultation with social partners in the SER's formation process. The Committee nonetheless welcomes that, as a result of the October 2024 workshop, the tripartite parties agreed: (i) for the workers and employers to jointly develop criteria for representativity and present it to the Government; (ii) to establish a working group that consists of equal numbers of representatives of employers and workers; and (iii) to establish a timeframe for the response of the Government within two weeks of submitting the proposal. The Committee, like the Conference Committee, requests the Government to: (i) define in meaningful and effective consultation with its social partners, criteria of representativeness of employers' and workers' organizations that are clear, pre-determined and objective; (ii) engage in meaningful and effective dialogue with workers' and employers' organizations on all matters affecting their interests or the interests of their members, in full compliance with the Convention, including on the composition of the SER; and (iii) take the necessary measures to ensure that workers' and employers' representatives on the SER are only appointed by fully autonomous organizations freely established or chosen by workers and employers, and convene the SER without delay. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to specify whether public employees, including teachers, who were prevented from striking by virtue of section 374(a), (b) and (c) of the previous Penal Code, were forbidden from striking under the Penal Code of 2015. It also noted that the National Ordinance on Substantive Civil Service Law had been amended to allow the courts to forbid strikes which threatened public welfare or safety and requested the Government to provide detailed information on the circumstances in which strikes may be prohibited based on that Ordinance. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new Penal Code, Civil Code and Civil Service Law do not contain provisions that infringe on the right to strike of workers in either the private or public sector and that employees, public servants, including teachers, or their representative workers' organizations, have the right to collective action, such as strike. According to the Government, this right is derived from the European Social Charter, applicable to Sint Maarten, and case law. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that restrictions on the right to strike can only be imposed by court if deemed necessary, for example in cases involving emergency services (police, fire brigade or ambulance). The Government further indicates that in making its determination, the court assesses whether the right to strike can be limited on the basis of such circumstances as the nature and duration of the strike; the purpose of the strike; the damage to the interests of the employer or third parties; and compliance with "the so-called 'strike' rules", in particular whether the strike was resorted to too quickly. The Committee observes from the mission report that during the tripartite workshop, workers' representatives indicated that rules for exercising the right to strike were not clear and that there was a need for further discussion on the exercise of the right to strike in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to take necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure the effective protection, in law and in practice, of the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken to this end.

New Zealand

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of Business New Zealand (BusinessNZ) and the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 31 August and 10 November 2022 on issues raised in its previous comment and the Government's reply thereto. The Committee further notes the observations of the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) received on 24 October 2024 and the Government's reply.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May-June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (Conference Committee) in June 2022 in which the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) continue to examine, in cooperation and consultation with the social partners, the proposed new legislation (draft Fair Pay Agreements Bill and the draft Screen Industry Workers Bill) to consider the impact of the proposed legislation and to ensure compliance with the Convention; and (ii) prepare, in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations, a report on these measures to be submitted in accordance with the regular reporting cycle.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Fair Pay Agreements Act which came into force on 1 December 2022 was repealed by the current administration, in order to ensure flexibility and improve business certainty, with the Fair Pay Agreements Act Repeal Act which came into force on 20 December 2023. The Committee further takes due note of the opposing views expressed by BusinessNZ and NZCTU accompanying the Government's report in relation to the Fair Pay Agreements and their repeal.

As regards the screen industry, the Committee noted in its previous comments the establishment of the Film Industry Working Group in 2017 consisting of industry, business and worker representatives and its October 2018 recommendations suggesting a bespoke workplace relations regime for contractors in the screen industry resulting in the Screen Industry Workers Bill. The Committee trusted that the Bill would ensure that all film and television workers can fully enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention and requested the Government to transmit a copy of the final version of the Bill once approved and provide information on its application in practice. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Screen Industry Workers Act 2022 which implements a model unanimously agreed to by representatives from industry guilds, unions, and production companies, as well as the NZCTU and BusinessNZ, creating a workplace relations regime for contractors in the screen industry and introducing rules for individual contracts and a duty of good faith, allowing collective bargaining at the occupational and enterprise levels and providing access to dispute resolution services. While observing from the Act that, once collective bargaining has begun, there is an obligation to conclude an agreement coupled with a prohibition of industrial action and compulsory arbitration in the event of failure of voluntary dispute resolution processes, the Committee understands that these provisions were agreed to by all relevant social partners with a view to creating a framework for industrial relations to respond to the specificities of a sector which had until then been wholly excluded from the national regime embodied in the Employment Relations Act. Noting the Government's indication that collective bargaining under the Act has not yet commenced, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of requests to initiate bargaining under the Act and any collective bargaining agreements concluded.

Article 4. Voluntary nature of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the detailed observations made by BusinessNZ and the IOE in relation to the obligation to conclude a collective agreement unless there is a "genuine reason" not to under sections 31 and 33, as amended by the Employment Relations Amendment Act, 2018, and the possibility for courts to compulsorily fix the terms of a collective agreement under section 50J and the Government's reply thereto. It requested the Government to provide detailed information on the use and practical implementation of these sections and in particular on any specific cases where genuine reason not to conclude a collective agreement was either found to be present or not and the resulting consequences.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government on the process of elaboration of these provisions in the Employment Relations Act, 2000 (ERA) and their consideration by judicial authorities in a number of cases before them, in particular as regards the meaning of the terms "genuine reason, based on reasonable grounds". The Committee further observes BusinessNZ's reiteration of its consideration that section 50J is contrary to the voluntary nature of collective bargaining and points to what it sees as contradictory reflections in the court judgments provided by the Government which maintain that section 50J is seen as an "effective remedy" to the lack of "genuine reasons based on reasonable grounds" to not conclude a collective agreement, while they acknowledge the lack of definition of what constitutes "reasonable grounds". Finally, the Committee notes that the NZCTU disagrees with the views expressed by BusinessNZ and maintains that the statutory obligation for bargaining parties to act in 'good faith' is a vital element of the bargaining machinery referred to in the Convention and the limited caselaw on the subject demonstrates that the statutory mechanism for 'fixing' collective terms is applied only in rare circumstances. The Government for its part notes that the topic of section 50J of the ERA has been extensively discussed in its previous report to the Committee, and therefore simply takes note of both the BusinessNZ and the NZCTU further comments.

In these circumstances, the Committee recalls its previous comment in which it emphasized that ensuring the voluntary nature of collective negotiations is inseparable from the principle of negotiation in good faith if the machinery to be promoted under Article 4 of the Convention is to have any meaning. The Committee recalls that sections 31, 33 and 50J as currently drafted had not given rise to any comments by the social partners for the decade in which they were jointly in force until the application of section 50J in 2019 in one case imposing a collective agreement for a period of 14 months on an employer found to have been in serious and sustained breach of the duty of good faith. It further observes from the information provided by the Government in a general section on judicial decisions that there was one case where this provision was successfully used by an employer to obtain an award by the Employment Relations Authority against a union that was found not to be negotiating in good faith. Neither of the social partners make reference to this case nor do they indicate any other case in which section 50J has been applied to enforce an agreement. In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the use and practical implementation of sections 31, 33 and 50J and in particular on any specific cases where genuine reason not to conclude a collective agreement was either found to be present or not and the resulting consequences.

The Committee notes the latest observations from the NZCTU on behalf of its affiliates the New Zealand Educational Institute (NZEI Te Riu Roa) and the Post Primary Teachers Association Te Wehengarua (PPTA) in relation to the recent adoption of the Education and Training Amendment Act 2024. The NZCTU contends that the Act violates its affiliates' collective bargaining rights under the Convention by extinguishing collective agreement coverage for employees of state schools that convert to charter school status and prohibiting unions from initiating multi-employer collective bargaining with more than one charter school sponsor (employer) or with a sponsor and any other employer or employers.

The Committee notes the Government's reply indicating that charter schools are a different type of school in New Zealand, operated by an independent "sponsor" under contract with the Government, while being fully funded by the State in exchange for meeting contractual requirements. The charter schools model aims to provide greater flexibility to charter schools, increase schooling choice for families, give educators more autonomy to innovate, and raise overall student achievement, especially for students who are underachieving or disengaged from the current system. As regards the issue raised related to the extinguishment of collective agreement coverage, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that section 119(1)(a) provides that employees will be transferred on terms and conditions that are "no less favourable overall" to those that applied to the person immediately before they became an employee of a sponsor. The transferred terms and conditions will remain in place until they are varied by agreement between the transferred employee and the sponsor (on an individual employment agreement), or the transferred employee becomes bound by a collective agreement (section 119(2)). The term "no less favourable overall" is used as there will be some terms and conditions that cannot practically be provided by sponsors and where alternative arrangements will need to be found. As regards the restrictions on multi-employer collective agreements, the Government indicates that unions will continue to be able to initiate bargaining for a single employer collective agreement with the sponsor of a charter school and adds that this restriction is aimed at ensuring the flexibility which is a fundamental element of the charter school model.

The Committee first recalls the need to ensure that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, including multi-employer, and that the decision as to the level of bargaining is essentially a matter for the parties (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 222). Observing the recent adoption of these legislative provisions, the Committee, in order to be able to better evaluate the impact of the new legislation on the rights recognized by the Convention, requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of workers in newly-established or converted charter schools, the number of collective agreements concluded and their coverage and any complaints made of less favourable terms and conditions of employment than those previously existing under the collective agreement.

Nicaragua

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2024 reiterating the comments made to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention by Nicaragua.

Complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee recalls that at its 349th Session, in October 2023, the Governing Body declared receivable a complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution by a group of Employer delegates to the International Labour Conference in 2023, alleging non-observance by Nicaragua of the Convention, and of the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee notes that at its 350th Session, in March 2024, the Governing Body: (i) noted the deep concern of the Committee and the Conference Committee in their latest examination of the implementation by the Government of Nicaragua of the Conventions that are the subject of the article 26 complaint; (ii) urged the Government to address, as a matter of urgency, the serious compliance gaps identified and to accept ILO technical assistance to that effect; (iii) requested the Government and the social partners to provide detailed information on all the issues raised in the complaint to the 352nd Session (October–November 2024); (iv) deferred to its 352nd Session the decision to consider further action in respect of the article 26 complaint, in light of the follow-up given to the above.

The Committee also notes that, at its 352nd Session in November 2024, the Governing Body: (i) reiterated the deep concern expressed by the Committee and by the Conference Committee in their latest examination of the implementation by the Government of Nicaragua of the Conventions that are the subject of the article 26 complaint; (ii) deplored the lack of meaningful engagement of the Government, and the fact that it had responded to none of the Office communications and had not provided the information requested by the Governing Body; (iii) urged the Government to address the issues raised in the complaint as a matter of urgency; (iv) called on the Government to respond to the Office communications and to provide the information requested since the 350th Session (March 2024) of the Governing Body as soon as possible; and (v) decided to send a high-level tripartite mission to assess the issues raised in the complaint, and to provide a full report to the Governing Body at its 353rd Session (March 2025) and to defer the decision on further action in accordance with article 26 of the Constitution to that session.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee at the 112th Session (2024) and observes that, having deeply deplored the persistent climate of intimidation and harassment of independent workers' and employers' organizations and having noted with deep concern the allegations of the arrest and detention of employer leaders and the further deterioration of the situation, the Conference Committee urged the Government, in the strongest terms, to:

- ensure that workers and employers can establish their own organizations and operate without interference and, in that regard, ensure that the Higher Council for Private Enterprise of Nicaragua (COSEP) is able to operate again without previous authorization in line with Article 2 of the Convention;
- immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with the exercise of legitimate activities of both trade unions and employers' organizations, and adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated;
- ensure that representatives of employers' organizations who have been deprived of Nicaraguan nationality have it restored without delay;
- take all measures necessary to ensure that there is a climate free of fear and intimidation regarding the exercise of freedom of association rights;
- immediately release any employer or trade union member who may be imprisoned in connection with the exercise of the legitimate activities of their organizations and report on all the measures adopted to ensure compliance with such request;
- restore social dialogue with its independent social partners without further delay including the establishment of a tripartite dialogue round table under the auspices of the ILO, as recommended by the Conference Committee in 2022 and 2023;
- provide information on all the measures adopted to ensure that effect is given to each of the recommendations made by the Conference Committee and on any progress achieved in the implementation of these measures.

The Conference Committee also urged the Government to fully respect these conclusions and to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO to ensure full compliance with them.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee notes the deep concern expressed by the Conference Committee with regard to the allegations of the arrest and detention of employer leaders and the further deterioration of the situation and regrets to note that the Government does not indicate that it has taken any measures to give effect to the recommendations made in this respect. The Committee notes that a report by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights published on 3 September 2024 refers to continued human rights violations and the erosion of civic and democratic spaces. The report indicates that the human rights situation in Nicaragua has seriously deteriorated since last year, with increasing cases of arbitrary detentions, intimidation of opponents, ill-treatment in custody and violations of the rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly. The report also indicates that, in August 2024, 1,700 organizations were shut down in the most severe blow inflicted to civil society, bringing the total number of dissolved organizations to over 5,000 since 2018. The Committee also notes that on 1 October 2024, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights filed a case against Nicaragua with the Inter-American Court of Human Rights concerning the violation of trade union rights in Nicaragua.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, deeply deplores the persistent climate of intimidation and harassment of independent workers' and employers' organizations and reiterates its deep concern regarding the allegations of the arrest and detention of employer leaders since last year and the further deterioration of the situation. The Committee recalls that the interdependence of respect for fundamental rights and freedom of association implies, in particular, that the public authorities cannot interfere in the legitimate activities of organizations by means of arrests or arbitrary detention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 60). The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government does not indicate that it has taken any measures to give effect to the requests of the Conference Committee in 2022, 2023 and 2024, nor does it refer to the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government, in the strongest possible terms, to adopt as soon as possible, in consultation with the social partners, each and every measure that it has been urged to take by the Conference Committee. It also requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in the implementation of these measures. The Committee once again urges the Government, with a view to achieving tangible progress in this regard, to have recourse to ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention. Finally, the Committee hopes that the high-level tripartite mission can take place as requested by the Governing Body.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and to join organizations without previous authorization. The Committee observes that in 2023 and 2024, the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure that workers and employers can establish their own organizations and operate without interference, and, in this regard, that COSEP, Nicaragua's most representative employers' organization, the legal status of which was annulled through a ministerial decision of 2023, can again operate without previous authorization, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in this regard that: (i) full freedom of association exists in the country and the Government is continuing to take initiatives in support of the right of workers to organize; and (ii) trade union organizations play a leading role in defending labour rights and it is not a crime in the country to carry out trade union activities, as long as this is done in accordance with laws and regulations in force. The Government indicates, as it has done in previous reports, that since 2007 it has been working to ensure the restoration and protection of the labour rights of workers through ongoing, inclusive and participatory social dialogue and consensus as the principal means of achieving labour stability and peace. The Government also notes that it has been carrying out tripartite dialogue in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference Committee. The Government indicates that there are no new legal status applications pending approval for trade unions in the country and that this shows that attention is given and that there is political will to ensure that organized workers develop their own plans for carrying out trade union activities. While noting these indications, the Committee regrets to note that the Government merely reiterates general assertions without providing specific information on the measures that it has been urged to take by the Conference Committee. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention guarantees all workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, the right to establish and, subject only to the rules of the organization concerned, to join organizations of their own choosing. The Commission also recalls that the principal objective of the Convention is to protect the autonomy and independence of workers' and employers' organizations in relation to the public authorities, both in their establishment and in their functioning and dissolution (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 55). Referring to the recommendations of the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure the full application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. For over a decade the Committee has been referring to the need to take measures to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code, which provide that collective disputes shall be referred to compulsory arbitration once 30 days have elapsed after the calling of a strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while compulsory arbitration is the most extreme measure in the event of failure to obtain absolute consensus in collective bargaining, such a measure has not been implemented in recent times thanks to the correct use of alternative methods for labour dispute resolution. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour establishes dialogue and consensus round tables in the event of collective disputes, where the administrative body participates as a facilitator in seeking a rapid and effective solution for the parties. The Government indicates that the successful outcomes in conflict management render unnecessary the amendment of sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code. While noting these indications, the Committee is once again bound to remind the Government that a law authorizing the imposition of compulsory arbitration to end a strike, beyond the cases in which a strike may be limited or even prohibited, is contrary to the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom. The Committee therefore once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration is only possible in cases in which strikes may be limited or even prohibited, namely, in cases of disputes in the civil service involving officials exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in the event of an acute national crisis. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect and firmly hopes that progress will be achieved in compliance with the Convention.

Article 11. Protection of the right to organize. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that it is continuing to promote initiatives in support of the right to organize, that policies have been adopted to promote and encourage trade union organization and that, in 2023 and the first quarter of 2024, 43 new trade union organizations were established, with a membership of 1,442 workers and that the existing 1,244 unions that have 104,177 members were updated. While noting the updated information provided by the Government, the Committee once again regrets to have to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the rights, both of workers' and employers' organizations protected by the Convention, are totally void of meaning when there is no respect for fundamental freedoms, the right to protection against arbitrary detention and imprisonment and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, in light of the above and taking into account the conclusions of the Conference Committee, to provide detailed information on the initiatives adopted to guarantee the free exercise of the right to organize by both employers and workers.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025].

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

Complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee recalls that at its 349th Session, in October 2023, the Governing Body declared receivable a complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution by a group of Employer delegates to the International Labour Conference in 2023, alleging non-observance by Nicaragua of this Convention, as well as of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee notes that at its 350th Session, in March 2024, the Governing Body: (i) noted the deep concern of the Committee and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in their latest examination of the implementation by the Government of Nicaragua of the Conventions that are the subject of the article 26 complaint; (ii) urged the Government to address, as a matter of urgency, the serious compliance gaps identified and to accept ILO technical assistance to that effect; (iii) requested the Government and the social partners to provide detailed information on all the issues raised in the complaint to the 352nd Session (October–November 2024); and (iv) deferred to its 352nd Session the decision to consider further action in respect of the article 26 complaint, in light of the follow-up given to the above.

The Committee also notes that, at its 352nd Session in October–November 2024, the Governing Body: (i) reiterated the deep concern expressed by the Committee and by the Conference Committee in their latest examination of the implementation by the Government of Nicaragua of the Conventions that are the subject of the article 26 complaint; (ii) deplored the lack of meaningful engagement of the Government, and the fact that it had responded to none of the Office communications and had not provided the information requested by the Governing Body; (iii) urged the Government to address the issues raised in the complaint as a matter of urgency; (iv) called on the Government to respond to the Office communications and to provide the information requested since the 350th Session (March 2024) of the Governing Body as soon as possible; and (v) decided to send a high-level tripartite mission to assess the issues raised in the complaint, and to provide a full report to the Governing Body at its 353rd Session (March 2025) and to defer the decision on further action in accordance with article 26 of the Constitution to that session.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee hoped that the Government would continue taking measures to strengthen the promotion of collective bargaining in all sectors, including export processing zones, and requested the Government to provide fuller information on the collective agreements signed and in force for all private sector and public sector activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that from 2021 until the first quarter of 2024, 191 collective agreements were signed covering 348,883 workers, 188,743 of whom are women. Of these collective agreements, 19 concern the country's export processing zones, benefiting 67,596 workers, 36,728 of whom are women.

While taking note of the statistical information provided and the Government's intention to further promote collective bargaining in general, the Committee observes that in 2023 and 2024, in the context of the examination of the application of Convention No. 87 by the Conference Committee, it was mentioned that the legal status of 19 employers' organizations, including the umbrella organization, the Higher Council for Private Enterprise of Nicaragua (COSEP), had been annulled through Ministerial Decisions Nos 26/2023 and 27/2023 of the Minister of the Interior. The Committee notes that, on that basis, the Conference Committee urged the Government in the strongest terms to ensure that workers and employers can establish their own organizations and operate without interference, and, in this regard, that COSEP, Nicaragua's most representative employers' organization, can again operate without previous authorization, in accordance with Article 2 of the said Convention. The Committee recalls that by virtue of Article 4 of the present Convention, the right to collective bargaining rests with workers' organizations and employers and their organizations. The Committee recalls that it has consistently stressed that the unjustified refusal to recognize the most representative organizations may impair the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government, with a view to promoting free and voluntary collective bargaining in all sectors and at all levels, to take all necessary measures to enable both workers and employers to freely determine the organizations that represent them in the conduct of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific action taken in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the collective agreements signed and in force, specifying those relating to the private sector, in particular in export processing zones, and those relating to the public sector, and indicating the number of workers they cover.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Implementation of the principles of the Convention regarding freedom of association and the protection of the right to organize. The Committee notes Order No. 2023-01 of 28 July 2023 suspending the Constitution of 25 November 2010 and establishing the National Council to Safeguard the Country, and Order No. 2023-02 of 28 July 2023 on the organization of public authorities during the transition period, copies of which were included in the Government's report. The Committee also notes that Order

No. 2023-01 suspends the Constitution, which recognized the right to freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining, among other rights, and dissolves the institutions established under the Constitution. The Committee notes that, pursuant to Order No. 2023-02, the laws and regulations promulgated and published on the date of signature of the Order remain in force, unless expressly repealed (section 19), and Niger remains bound by ratified treaties and agreements (section 3). The Committee notes that: (i) pursuant to the two above-mentioned Orders, during the transition period, the National Council to Safeguard the Country is vested with legislative and executive powers; and (ii) the bodies dissolved by Order No. 2023-01 include the Constitutional Court, the Court of Cassation and the State Council (their functions have now been assumed by the Transitional Constitutional Council and the State Court in accordance with Order No. 2023-02). Noting that the above-mentioned Orders refer to transitional measures pending a return to normal constitutional order (section 3 of Order No. 2023-01) and the establishment of new democratic institutions (sections 5 and 21 of Order No. 2023-02), and that Niger remains bound by ratified treaties and agreements (section 3 of Order No. 2023-02), the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the current situation does not hinder respect for and implementation of the principles recognized by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any legislative or regulatory changes affecting the right to organize and bargain collectively (and to provide a copy of any new text adopted). The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the principles of the Convention, and to indicate the competent judicial bodies that are ensuring the protection of the right to freedom of association and the right to organize during the transition period, and to provide information on any disputes filed and rulings handed down in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. Minors who have reached the minimum age for admission to employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 191 of the Labour Code, which provides that workers over 16 years of age but under the age of majority may join trade unions, to ensure that the minimum age for membership to a trade union is the same as that fixed by the Labour Code for admission to employment (14 years, according to section 106 of the Labour Code). Noting the renewed commitment of the Government to take into account the above-mentioned request in the framework of the amendment of the Labour Code, once a decision regarding its amendment has been made, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Prison staff. The Committee notes that, according to section 33 of Act No. 2017-09 of 31 March 2017 establishing the specific regulations governing prison administration personnel, the staff of prison administration bodies do not enjoy the right to organize due to the specific nature of their work. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the only admissible exceptions to the right to organize are those explicitly provided for under Article 9 of the Convention, that is, the armed forces and the police. All other categories of workers, without distinction whatsoever, should enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee is of the opinion that the functions exercised by prison staff do not justify their exclusion from the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 69). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review the legislation with a view to giving recognition to the right of staff of prison administration bodies to establish and join trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed in this regard.

Article 3. Right to elect trade union representatives in full freedom. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the legislative provisions that determine the crimes and offences for which final conviction results in the ineligibility for trade union administration or leadership duties, and to specify the circumstances in which a person may be declared to be deprived of legal capacity.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to the Criminal Code and that it reiterates that the purpose of the requirement under section 190 of the Labour Code is not to restrict the autonomy of trade union organizations, but rather to restrict the access to trade union office of persons convicted by a final judgment of crimes or offences, persons who have failed to comply with a summons to appear in court and persons deprived of legal capacity. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 19 of the Criminal Code, the consequences of the criminal penalty of imprisonment include the loss of civil rights. In this regard, the Committee notes Order No. 2024-28 of 7 June 2024 amending Act No. 2019-33 of 3 July 2019 on the punishment of cybercrimes in Niger, which provides for prison sentences in cases of defamation (section 29), any offensive expression, term of contempt or invective which does not contain any particular charge (section 30), or dissemination of information likely to disturb public order or undermine human dignity, even when the information produced and disseminated is proven (section 31), where these offences are committed electronically. In this context, the Committee also notes the information on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), provided by the Government in its 2023 report, according to which the Ministry of Justice has undertaken a reform of the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that conviction for an act the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 106). Noting the new provisions in Order No. 2024-28 of 7 June 2024 amending Act No. 2019-33 of 3 July 2019 on the punishment of cybercrimes in Niger, and the fact that the provisions of the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure are being revised, the Committee firmly expects that the legislation in force and the legislation in the process of adoption do not hinder the rights of organizations to freely elect their union leaders.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Implementation of the principles of the Convention regarding the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Committee notes Order No. 2023-01 of 28 July 2023 suspending the Constitution of 25 November 2010 and establishing the National Council to Safeguard the Country, and Order No. 2023-02 of 28 July 2023 on the organization of public authorities during the transition period, copies of which were included in the Government's report. The Committee also notes that Order No. 2023-01 suspends the Constitution, which recognized the right to freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining, among other rights, and dissolves the institutions established under the Constitution. The Committee notes that, pursuant to Order No. 2023-02, the laws and regulations promulgated and published on the date of signature of the Order remain in force, unless expressly repealed (section 19). The Committee further notes that, under Order No. 2023-01, Niger remains bound by ratified treaties and agreements (section 3).

The Committee notes that: (i) pursuant to the two above-mentioned Orders, during the transition period, the National Council to Safeguard the Country is vested with legislative and executive powers; and (ii) the bodies dissolved by Order No. 2023-01 include the Constitutional Court, the Court of Cassation and the State Council (their functions have now been assumed by the Constitutional Council and the State Court in accordance with Order No. 2023-02). Noting that the above-mentioned Orders refer to transitional measures pending a return to normal constitutional order (section 3 of Order No. 2023-01) and the establishment of new democratic institutions (sections 5 and 21 of Order No. 2023-02), and that the Government remains bound by ratified treaties and agreements (section 3 of Order No. 2023-02), the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that respect for and the implementation of the principles recognized in the Convention is fully guaranteed in the current situation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any changes to laws or regulations affecting the right to organize and bargain collectively (and to provide a copy of any new text adopted). The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the principles of the Convention, and to indicate the competent judicial bodies that are ensuring the protection of the right to organize and to bargain collectively during the transition period, and to provide information on the disputes filed and the rulings handed down in this regard.

Articles 1, 2, 3 and 6 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously noted that neither Act No. 2007-26 of 23 July 2007 issuing the General Public Service Regulations nor Decree No. 2008-244/PRN/MFP/T of 31 July 2008, implementing those Regulations, contains any provisions which explicitly prohibit acts of anti-union discrimination or interference.

The Committee notes that, in reply to the Committee's request for it to take the necessary measures to address this gap, the Government refers to several specific regulations, including Act No. 2019-26 of 17 June 2019 establishing the specific regulations governing staff of local authorities, and Act No. 2016-25 of 16 June 2016 establishing the specific regulations governing staff of water and forestry services. While welcoming the inclusion of new provisions on protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in the specific regulations governing staff of local authorities, the Committee questions the validity of this statute since the adoption of Order No. 2024-21 of 5 June 2024, which appears to provide for a reorganization involving the elimination of local authorities. The Committee further notes that the specific regulations governing staff of water and forestry services do not contain specific provisions that protect workers covered by these regulations against possible acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. While asking the Government to indicate whether the specific regulations governing staff of local authorities remain in force, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to include, in the legislation, provisions to effectively protect all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, and to establish, for that purpose, compensation and penalties, and expeditious and effective procedures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Criteria for determining the representativity of employers' and workers' organizations. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with interest the information provided by the Government concerning the holding and results of the occupational elections that took place in 2019 in accordance with section 185 of the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the mandate for the representativity of trade union confederations resulting from those elections ended on 19 September 2023, and that, in consultation with the trade union confederations, the Ministry of Labour developed an evaluation scale to assess trade union confederations based on four criteria: (i) the existence in practice of headquarters; (ii) regular meetings of the statutory bodies; (iii) the number of affiliated trade unions; and (iv) the number of regional branches. The Committee notes that the criteria for representativity based on an evaluation scale established by the Government were not determined through occupational elections as provided for in the Labour Code. The Committee has always underscored the importance of ensuring, in case controversy should arise, that the criteria to be applied to determine the representative status of organizations for the purpose of bargaining must be objective, pre-established and precise so as to avoid any opportunity for partiality or abuse. Furthermore, it considers that such determination should be carried out in accordance with a procedure that offers every guarantee of impartiality, by an independent body that enjoys the confidence of the parties, and without political interference (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 228). Noting that the mandate for the representativity of trade union confederations resulting from the 2019 elections ended in September 2023, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take, in consultation with the organizations concerned, and in accordance with the Labour Code, measures for the organization and holding of occupational elections in order to determine the representativity of workers' and employers' organizations as soon as possible, and to provide information on the results of those elections.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee noted an absence of information on specific legislative provisions guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State who are subject to a specific legal status or regulations, and therefore are excluded from the application of section 252 of the Labour Code. The Committee noted, nevertheless, the conclusion of collective agreements concerning public servants not engaged in the administration of the State for the period 2012–14.

The Committee notes that: (i) Act No. 2016-25 establishing the specific regulations governing staff of water and forestry services does not contain specific provisions guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining, but refers, with regard to the exercise of the right to organize, to the laws and regulations in force; (ii) the same applies as regards Act No. 2019-26 establishing the specific regulations governing staff of local authorities (in relation to which the continued validity remains to be clarified); and (iii) the Government does not provide information or copies of other texts concerning other public servants not engaged in the administration of the State who are subject to a specific status. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that the legislation guarantees the right to collective bargaining to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State who are governed by a specific legal status or regulations, and are therefore excluded from the application of section 252 of the Labour Code. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the collective agreements signed in the public sector with regard to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Lastly, the Committee recalls that Niger has also ratified the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) which also covers public servants engaged in the administration of the State, and also refers to its comments under that Convention.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on a series of agreements concluded, in particular the 2022 inter-occupational collective agreement, the collective agreement for the press, the social plan between the State and the staff of the Gaweye Hotel, and the enterprise agreement concerning the Niger Water Board. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures to promote collective bargaining taken by the competent authorities.

Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (ratification: 1985)

Previous comment

Promotion of collective bargaining in the public service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that it had not been informed of specific legislative provisions guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining of public servants engaged in the administration of the State, who are subject to a specific legal status or regulations, and are therefore excluded from the application of section 252 of the Labour Code. It noted, nevertheless, the collective agreements mentioned by the Government concerning public servants that had been concluded between 2012 and 2014.

The Committee notes the Government's indications, examined in the context of the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), concerning the regulations governing public servants of local authorities (the question of their continued validity remains to be clarified) and those governing staff of water and forest services, which do not explicitly recognize the right to collective bargaining for these categories. The Committee also notes that the Government does not provide any other information on texts recognizing the right to bargain collectively of other public servants. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation in force is in accordance with practice and guarantees the right to collective bargaining for all public servants covered by this Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide copies of any new agreement or collective agreement covering public servants.

Nigeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC), received on 30 August 2024, and the International Trade Union Federation (ITUF), received on 17 September 2024, alleging intimidation, harassment and arrest of trade union leaders and members by the State authorities, intervention in trade union affairs, including their internal election process, the invasion of the headquarters of the NLC and the National Union of Road Transport Workers (NURTW) by the police, the excessive use of police force and violence during peaceful demonstrations, and the prevention of workers from joining the union of their choice in the telecommunications sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide a detailed reply on allegations of denial of the right to join trade unions, massive dismissals for trying to join trade unions, mass persecution and arrests of union members and other violations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2015 and 2016, as well as allegations of arrests, reprisals and dismissals against union leaders and members made by the ITUC and the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) in 2017. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there will be further consultations with the affected social partners, after which a response will be forwarded to the ILO. Regretting the lack of concrete information received in spite of the time elapsed since these serious allegations were brought to its attention, the Committee expects that the consultations referred to above will be held shortly, and urges the Government to provide its detailed comments on each specific allegation made by the ITUC and the NLC in its next report.

The Committee also takes note of the observations of the ITUC received on 1 September 2021, which allege massive dismissals for trying to join trade unions, acts of anti-union violence during strike actions, arrests of union members, suspensions of union leaders, and a general anti-union climate in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these new serious allegations.

Civil liberties. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the judicial proceedings regarding the prosecution of the eight suspects arrested in connection with the assassination of Mr Alhaji Saula Saka, the Lagos Zonal Chairman of the National Union of Road Transport Workers. While having noted the Government's indication that the Federal Ministry of Labour and Employment had requested the Inspector General of Police for an update and was awaiting the reply, the Committee deeply regretted that no resolution had been reached regarding the events occurred in 2010. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any update on this matter in its report. The Committee firmly urges the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the judicial proceedings, and, in the case of conviction, on the nature and implementation of the sentence.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers to join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee previously took note of the National Industrial Court of Nigeria (NICN) judgment of 2016 with regard to the allegation that teachers in federal educational institutions have been coerced to join the Association of Senior Civil Servants of Nigeria (ASCSN) and denied the right to belong to the professional union of their own choice. The NICN judgment concluded that teachers at the 104 Unity Colleges of Nigeria are employed by the Federal Civil Service Commission and, as civil servants, they are automatically members of the ASCSN, but specified that any worker who wishes to disassociate from the ASCSN could do so by writing to the employer. The Government had further indicated that according to section 12(4) of the Trade Unions Act and sections 9(6) and 5(3) of the Labour Act: (i) membership of a trade union by employees shall be voluntary; (ii) no employee shall be forced to join any trade union or be victimized for refusing to join or remain a member; (iii) no contract shall make it a condition of employment that a worker shall or shall not join a trade union; and (iv) the workers have the right to opt out of a trade union in writing. The Committee had requested the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of the abovementioned provisions, indicating in particular whether teachers of the federal educational institutions continue to be automatically affiliated to the ASCSN. The Committee notes that the Government, in its report, limits itself to stating that the purpose of the provisions of the said laws is to bring order and good administrative structure to trade unionism in Nigeria. The Committee recalls that it is important for workers to be able to change trade union or to establish a new union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice and that trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 92). The Committee once again requests the Government to specify whether teachers of the federal educational institutions continue to be automatically affiliated to the ASCSN, and if so to indicate on what legal grounds such automatic affiliation comports with the principle of voluntary affiliation set out in the Trade Unions Act and Labour Code.

Freedom of association in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee recalls that its previous comments referred to issues of unionization and entry for inspection in the EPZs, as well as to the fact that certain provisions of the EPZ Authority Decree, 1992, make it difficult for workers to join trade unions as it is almost impossible for worker representatives to gain access to the EPZs. It had noted the establishment of a tripartite committee to review and update the Federal Ministry of Labour and Productivity Guidelines on Labour Administration and Issues in Contract Staffing/Outsourcing in the Oil and Gas Sector and to incorporate emerging trends in the world of work. The Committee requested the Government to provide, without delay, information on the review and update of the ministerial guidelines, and to provide statistics on the number of trade unions operating in EPZs and the membership thereof. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is currently working towards adopting sectorial guidelines and that EPZs would be included in one of them. It further notes that the Government reports that there are six trade unions already operating in the EPZs. Expecting that significant progress will be made in the very near future to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to continue to inform on any developments regarding the review and update of the ministerial guidelines. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information and statistics on the particular trade unions operating in the EPZs.

Articles 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend the following provisions:

- section 3(1) of the Trade Unions Act, which requires a minimum of 50 workers to establish a trade union, so as to explicitly indicate that the minimum membership requirement of 50 workers does not apply to the establishment of trade unions at the enterprise level (while this minimum membership would be permissible for industry trade unions, it could have the effect of hindering the establishment of enterprise organizations, particularly in small enterprises);
- section 7(9) of the Trade Unions Act, which provides that the Minister may revoke the certificate of registration of any trade union, by repealing the broad authority of the Minister to cancel the registration;
- sections 30 and 42 of the Trade Unions Act, which impose compulsory arbitration, require a majority of all registered union members for calling a strike, define "essential services" in an overly broad manner, contain restrictions relating to the objectives of strike action, impose penal sanctions including imprisonment for illegal strikes and outlaw gatherings or strikes that prevent aircraft from flying or obstruct public highways, institutions or other premises, so as to lift these restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike; and
- sections 39 and 40 of the Trade Unions Act, which grant broad powers to the registrar to supervise the union accounts at any time, so as to limit this power to the obligation of submitting periodic financial reports, or in order to investigate a complaint.

The Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it had established a Tripartite Technical Committee (TTC) for the purpose of bringing into conformity the relevant sections of the Labour Standards

Bill (LSB), Collective Labour Relations Bill (CLRB), Labour Institutions Bill (LIB) and Occupational Safety and Health Bill (OSH Bill) with international labour standards. It noted the Government's indication that the proposed review of the LSB would give the opportunity to the social partners to consider the amendments to the aforementioned provisions of the Trade Unions Act. The Committee notes that the Government states that the Labour Bills will be provided when enacted. The Committee expects that the abovementioned laws will be enacted shortly and that sections 3(1), 7(9), 30, 39, 40 and 42 of the Trade Unions Act will be brought into line with the Convention as part of the ongoing legislative review. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee previously noted that there were no proposals to amend the following legislative provisions, which it also requested the Government to modify:

- section 3(2) of the Trade Unions Act, which restricts the possibility of other trade unions from being registered where a trade union already exists (workers should be able to change trade union or to establish a new union; trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention);
- section 11 of the Trade Unions Act, which denies the right to organize to employees in the Customs and Excise Department, the Immigration Department, the prison services, the Nigerian Security Printing and Minting Company Limited, the Central Bank of Nigeria, and Nigeria Telecommunications (all workers, without distinction whatsoever, should have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing; the only authorized exception are the members of the police and the armed forces); and
- section 34(1)(b) and (g) of the Trade Unions Act (as amended by section 8(a) of the Trade Unions (Amendment) Act 2005), which requires federations to consist of 12 or more trade unions in order to be registered (the number of affiliated trade unions necessary should be lowered) and section 1 of the 1996 Trade Unions (International Affiliation) Act, which provides that the application of a trade union for international affiliation shall be submitted to the Minister for approval (the international affiliation of trade unions should not require the Government's permission).

The Committee notes that the Government states that the social partners are comfortable with the number of trade unions affiliated to federations and reiterates previous observations indicating that the purpose of section 3(2) of the Trade Unions Act is to bring order and good administrative structure to trade unionism in Nigeria and that for security reasons, section 11 of the Trade Unions Act has not been modified but a subsection has been added to create Joint Consultative Committees in the establishments concerned. The Committee refers to its preceding comments in this regard, recalling in particular that the establishment of joint consultative committees cannot be considered as a substitute for the right to organize under the Convention. Noting that the above provisions have been the subject of its comments for many years, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to make the appropriate amendments without delay in order to ensure their conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek the technical assistance of the Office in connection with the revision of the laws and regulations referred above and relating to the application of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC), received on 30 August 2024, and the observations made by the International Trade Union Federation (ITUF), received on 17 September 2024, alleging the violation of collective bargaining rights. In this respect, the NLC alleges that collective bargaining rights are being severely undermined by restrictive legislation, inadequate dispute resolution mechanisms, and interference in the collective bargaining process, and that agreements reached through collective bargaining are not implemented. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any investigations, and the results thereof, into allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference in the banking, education, electricity, petroleum, gas and telecommunications sectors, as referred to in successive communications from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee notes that the Government reports that it is working on sectorial guidelines to address anti-union discrimination and interference. Observing that in its 2021 observations under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the ITUC denounces massive dismissals for trying to join trade unions, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary actions to ensure that the allegations of anti-union discrimination referred to by the ITUC in its previous observations give rise to specific investigations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results thereof as well as on the progress made towards the adoption of the abovementioned sectorial guidelines.

The Committee also requested the Government to send its comments on allegations of Education International (EI) and the Nigeria Union of Teachers (NUT) denouncing the promotion of a non-registered union in the education sector by various state governments, which would appear to constitute attempted interference. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to indicating that the Academic Staff Union of Secondary School has not been registered at the federal level. The Committee recalls that the intervention by an employer - either public or private - to promote the establishment of a parallel trade union constitutes an act of interference by the employer in the functioning of a workers' association, which is prohibited under Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that Article 2 of the Convention is complied with in the education sector, both at the State and federal levels.

Scope of application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under the provisions of the legislation certain categories of workers (such as employees of the Customs and Excise Department, the Immigration Department, the prison services and the Central Bank of Nigeria) were denied the right to organize and were deprived of the right to collective bargaining. It noted that some of these categories involve public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State and requested the Government to provide information on the results of its consultations within the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) and any follow-up action taken, particularly with regard to recognition of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous explanation that these exclusions are made on the grounds of the national interest and national security. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the NLAC has been inaugurated and that the issue raised will be discussed at subsequent meetings. The Committee recalls that, according to Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention, only members of the armed forces and the police, as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from the guarantees set out in the Convention. Regretting the lack of progress regarding this issue, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full recognition of the right to collective bargaining of all public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, and to provide information on its consultations within the NLAC and on the practical results achieved in this regard.

Article 4. Free and voluntary negotiation. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide explanations regarding the legal obligation to submit any collective agreements on wages to government approval, and noted the Government's indication that in practice there is no restriction with regard to wage increases adopted by an employer but that this obligation, which appears in section 19 of the Trade Disputes Act, would be brought to the attention of the tripartite technical committee which was reviewing the labour legislation. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information on this matter in its report. The Committee once again requests the Government to take concrete steps to amend section 19 of the Trade Disputes Act in order to ensure full observance of the principle of voluntary collective negotiations in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted the Government's intention to ensure that the reform of the labour legislation undertaken in consultation with the social partners was in conformity with international labour standards and trusted that the new Collective Labour Relations Act and any other texts adopted in the context of the reform of the Labour Law would be in full conformity with the requirements of the Convention. It notes the Government's indication that the social partners will soon hold a meeting to validate the Labour Bills before forwarding them to the National Assembly for legislative action. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on any developments in relation to the reform of the labour legislation and recalls that it can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

North Macedonia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and of the Union of Police in Macedonia (SPM), received on 17 September and 14 October 2024, respectively, on the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, pursuant to article 37 of the Constitution, the conditions for exercising the right to union organization in "administrative bodies" (in addition to the police and the armed forces) can be limited by law and that these "administrative bodies" included ministries, other state administration bodies and administrative organizations. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend article 37 of the Constitution to eliminate the possibility for the law to restrict the conditions for the exercise of the right to trade union organization in administrative bodies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2024, parliamentary elections were held which led to a new composition of the Assembly of the Republic of North Macedonia, and that a new Government was elected. The Government indicates that it has not submitted any amendments to the labour legislation during the reporting period and reiterates that it will inform the Parliament of the Committee's comments in the event the former considers possible amendments to the Constitution in the future. Recalling once again that under the Convention only the armed forces and the police may be subject to limitations concerning the enjoyment of the guarantees provided by the Convention, as well as the need to ensure conformity of national constitutional provisions with the Convention, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that article 37 of the Constitution is amended accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the Law on Public Enterprises and the Law on Employees in the Public Sector: (1) employees in the public sector are obliged to provide minimum services in the event of strikes, taking into account the rights and interests of citizens and legal entities; and (2) the head of the respective institution determines the performance of the institutional activities of public interest that are to be maintained during a strike, the manner in which the minimum service will be carried out and the number of employees that will provide services during the strike. In this respect, the Committee recalled that the maintenance of minimum services in the event of strikes should only be possible in the following situations: (i) in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (essential services in the strict sense of the term); (ii) other services in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population; (iii) in public services of fundamental importance; and (iv) to ensure the security of facilities and the maintenance of equipment. The Committee had further recalled that minimum services imposed should meet at least two requirements: (i) they must genuinely and exclusively be minimum services, that is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (ii) since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. The Committee requested the Government to amend the legislation so as to ensure that the determination of minimum services in public enterprises conformed with the situations described above. The Committee noted the Government's indication that to regulate the participation of trade union representatives in the definition of minimum services during a strike, the Government and the Trade Union of Workers from the Administration, Judicial Bodies and Citizens' Associations of the Republic of Macedonia (UPOZ) signed a Branch Collective Agreement for the State Administration Bodies. According to the Government, pursuant to article 35 paragraph 6 of the Collective Agreement, the employer together with the UPOZ President shall agree on the rules to determine the list of public interest activities which cannot be interrupted during a strike, the number of employees who will perform their duties during a strike, as well as the way of providing conditions for the exercise of the right to strike. According to paragraph 7 of the same article, in the absence of an agreement, only the tasks that must not be interrupted during a strike, that is, the termination of which would cause disproportionate damage to the state, citizens and the employer and which could not be compensated by any additional measure or activity after the end of the strike, will be maintained.

The Committee requested the Government to: (i) clarify the application in practice of the above-mentioned paragraph 7 on the determination of minimum service in the absence of an agreement by the social partners; (ii) provide information on the types of activities, and percentage of employees in those activities, that have been affected by a determination of minimum services; and (iii) amend the relevant legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in relation to article 35, paragraphs 6 and 7 of the Collective Agreement of State Administration Bodies that: (i) no written rules have been established for determining minimum services during a strike and that there are no practical examples related to this issue; and (ii) until now, the representative unions have not informed the Government about problems to the practical application of the right to strike from this aspect. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, all necessary measures, including the amendment of the legislation, to ensure that the determination of minimum services in public enterprises is in line with the Committee's comments above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to amend section 38(7) of the Law on Primary Education and section 25(2) of the Law on Secondary Education, which oblige the school directors to provide for the realization of educational activities by replacing the striking employees when the educational activity is interrupted due to a strike. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that it has not yet amended the above-mentioned legislation. It further notes the Government's reiteration of its commitment to remove the provisions that provide for substitute workers during the next amendments to the Law on Primary Education and the Law on Secondary Education. The Committee urges the Government to proceed without further delay to amending the Law on Primary Education and the Law on Secondary Education, so as to remove the possibility of replacing striking workers and to enable workers in the primary and secondary education sectors to effectively exercise their right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended legal texts once adopted.

Law on Labour Relations. The Committee noted in its previous comments the Government's indication that the preparation of the new Law on Labour Relations was underway. The Committee observed in this respect that in order to obtain legal personality, enterprise level trade unions needed to obtain an approval from a higher-level union and that this restriction negatively impacts the rights and interests of enterprise level trade unions. Recalling that by virtue of Article 7 of the Convention, the acquisition of legal personality cannot be made subject to conditions of such a character as to restrict the application of Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft version of the new Law on Labour Relations establishes the right to acquire legal personality of trade unions at the enterprise level. It further notes the Government's indication that with its reorganization in June 2024, labour matters legislation passed under the jurisdiction of the new Ministry of Economy and Labour, which plans to finalize the new Law in the coming period, in accordance with international labour standards. The Committee expects that the new Law will be adopted without further delay so as to ensure that the acquisition of legal personality is not subject to conditions of such a character as to restrict the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the revised Law on Labour Relations once adopted.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023 and 17 September 2024, denouncing: (i) acts of interference by employers in the activities of trade unions; (ii) acts of anti-discrimination, including dismissal, against trade union representatives; and (iii) the non-recognition of the representative status of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Macedonia (KSS); of the Federation of Trade Unions of Macedonia (CCM) received on 14 October 2024; and of the Union of Police in Macedonia (SPM) received on 14 October 2024, denouncing acts of anti-discrimination against its representatives. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee further notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2023 concerning the discussions that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in 2023 with respect to the application of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2023 at the Conference Committee concerning the application of the Convention by North Macedonia. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee, after noting with concern the multiple acts of anti-union discrimination reported in the country, urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) ensure that workers enjoy their rights under the Convention and are protected against acts of anti-union discrimination; (ii) ensure that workers' and employers' organizations enjoy adequate protection against any external acts of interference in their establishment, functioning or administration; (iii) ensure that existing and prospective legislation is in conformity with the Convention; (iv) respect the collective agreements reached between social partners, in both the private and public sectors, and take appropriate measures to implement their results; (v) ensure the proper functioning of the Commission for Representativeness so that the procedures for recognizing the KSS in the public sector are activated as soon as possible in accordance with national legislation, in order to ensure the full participation of the KSS in social dialogue and to guarantee the right of its members to organize collectively; (vi) communicate to the Committee of Experts the factors that have led to the increase in the rate of coverage by collective bargaining, as well as information on the provisions regulating the relationship between general and specific collective agreements in the private and public sectors; (vii) continue to provide the Committee of Experts with information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data on the number of collective agreements concluded in the public and private sectors and the number of workers covered. The Conference Committee also invited the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention in law and practice.

The Committee notes that: (i) the Direct Contacts Mission (DCM) requested by the Conference Committee took place in October 2023; (ii) the DCM was informed of the progress made in the elaboration of a new Law on Labour Relations, initiated many years ago, and exchanged views on it with the public institutions and the social partners; and (iii) at the request of the Government, an up-to-date version of the draft law was the subject of technical comments by the Office in September 2024. The Committee welcomes the fact that the Government has continued to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in the ongoing legislative review and requests the Government to provide a copy of the law as soon as it is adopted. The Committee hopes that the content of the law will take into account the present comments and the guidance from the Office so as to ensure its full conformity with the ILO Conventions on freedom of association and collective bargaining in force in the country.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the DCM's conclusion that while the legislation, and in particular section 200 of the Labour Relations Act (which provides protection against acts of anti-union discrimination by requiring authorization by the trade union concerned prior to the dismissal of a trade union representative), appears to be in line with the ILO instruments on the protection against anti-union discrimination, it seems that this provision is not understood and applied consistently by the courts and the labour inspectorate. The DCM further noted that the absence of a functioning fast-track procedure to prioritize cases of anti-union discrimination and an excessive workload on the shoulders of the courts generate undue delays in the resolution of these cases. Recalling the fundamental importance of ensuring swift and effective protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including of a legislative and budgetary nature if necessary, to address the noted shortcomings in protection against anti-union discrimination and to provide information on its results. It further requests the Government to: (i) clarify through trainings and other measures the meaning and scope of section 200 of the Labour Relations Act in line with ILO standards; (ii) consider the establishment of a prioritized/fast-track procedure for anti-union acts; and (iii) address the broader issue of the workload of courts through different proactive actions, including the development and promotion of mechanisms for the amicable resolution of conflicts.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Commission for Representativeness. The Committee notes the ITUC's observations alleging that the current set-up of the Commission for Representativeness seemed to have a built-in conflict of interest as it allowed trade unions (and employers' organizations) that have a seat on the Commission to consider the representativeness of other applicant trade unions (and employers' organizations), and the inability of the KSS to be recognized as a representative organization in the public sector was due, in part, to this set-up of the Commission. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in September 2023, new members were appointed to the Commission for Representativeness. The Commission is composed of nine members which includes: one representative from each of the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Economy; three representatives appointed by the representative associations of employers (Organization of Employers of Macedonia (OEM)); and three representatives appointed by the representative trade unions (CCM); (ii) according to the Commission, five sessions were scheduled during 2023, but only three sessions were held; (iii) during 2024, five sessions were scheduled, but due to lack of quorum, not a single session was held; (iv) at the sessions that were held, the requests that had proper and complete documentation, in accordance with the Law on Labour Relations, were reviewed. The Committee takes due note of these different elements. The Committee recalls the Conference Committee's request to the Government to ensure the proper functioning of the Commission for Representativeness, in particular with respect to procedures for recognizing the KSS in the public sector, and highlights the DCM's specific recommendations in this respect. The Committee reiterates the importance of ensuring, in systems where the social partners' capacity to bargain collectively is subject to compliance with certain criteria, that the determination of bargaining agents should be carried out by a body offering every guarantee of independence and objectivity. In the light of the foregoing information, the Committee considers that, in a context of trade union pluralism such as exists in North Macedonia, where there are several large trade union federations, the presence of only one of the aforementioned trade union federations on the committee responsible for deciding on the representativeness of the social partners does not guarantee the impartiality of the work of the committee concerned, which raises problems of compatibility with the Convention. Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) review the composition of the Commission for Representativeness and its procedures to ensure its impartiality in line with ILO standards; and (ii) ensure that the KSS application for representativeness in the public sector will be addressed as soon as possible in accordance with the principle of impartiality referred to above.

Collective bargaining at the company level. The Committee notes the observations of the DCM concerning the lack of dynamism of collective bargaining in the private sector and the absence of trade unions in many private companies. In this respect, the Committee refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), concerning the fact that, under the Law on Labour Relations currently in force, enterprise-level trade unions need to obtain an approval from a higher-level union in order to obtain legal personality. Recalling the importance of the capacity of workers to freely choose the organizations through which they can exercise their right to collective bargaining and that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, the Committee observes that the aforementioned need to obtain higher level union approval in order to obtain legal personality for company unions poses an obstacle to the free and voluntary collective bargaining enshrined in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee therefore expects that the current revision of the Law on Labour Relations will ensure that the right of workers to freely choose the union representing them in company level bargaining is fully respected. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Articulation between the different levels of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the provisions regulating the relationship between general and specific collective agreements in the private and public sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that even if not explicitly stipulated in the law, in practice, the principle of favourability is applied between different types of collective agreements, meaning that lower level collective agreements may provide for more favourable conditions to the workers.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee previously noted a sharp rise in the number of workers covered by collective agreements between 2019 and 2021 and requested the Government to indicate the factors that led to this increase and to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) general collective agreements apply immediately and are mandatory for all employers and employees in the private or public sector, which is the reason for full coverage of employees in the public and private sector with a collective agreement; (ii) individual enterprise level collective agreements are binding – they apply to all workers of the employer. Finally, the Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that: (i) on 18 July 2023, it signed a new General Collective Agreement for public sector employees with the representative Union of Public Sector Employees (as part of the representative CCM), which covers over 130,000 employees; (ii) at this moment, in addition to the General Collective Agreement for employees in the public sector and the General Collective Agreement for the private sector of the economy, there are 20 branch collective agreements in force; and (iii) according to the data provided by the social partners, 146 collective agreements have been concluded at the employer level. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data concerning the number of collective agreements concluded in both the public and private sectors and the number of workers covered.

The Committee finally notes the Government's indication that, in cooperation with the National Coordinator of the ILO in North Macedonia and with the ILO office in Budapest, it was carrying out activities to implement the recommendations of the DCM related to the prevention of anti-union discrimination; the status of unions at the enterprise level; the importance and application of collective agreements; the functioning of the Commission for Representativeness; and the systematic consultation of the Economic and Social Council. The Committee takes due note of these developments and requests the Government to continue providing information on any activities conducted to improve the application of the Convention in North Macedonia.

Papua New Guinea

(ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the new Industrial Relations Bill (IRB 2014) was undergoing a vetting process at the Government Executive Committee and the Central Agency and Consultative Council to harmonize it with other relevant legislation and that the revised Bill should be presented to Cabinet before November 2016 or early 2017 and consultations on the matter should be held in the national Tripartite Consultative Council. Noting that the last information sent by the Government through an anticipated report dates back to 5 January 2017 and that its 2018 report was not received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide in its next report information on the outcome of these consultations and whether the IRB 2014 has been enacted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective implementation of the prohibition of anti-union discrimination in practice and to provide statistics on the number of anti-union discrimination complaints brought before the competent authorities, their follow-up, sanctions and remedies imposed. Noting that the Government did not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Power of the Minister to assess collective agreements on the grounds of public interest. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 50 of the Industrial Relations Bill (2011) into conformity with the principle that the approval of a collective agreement may only be refused if it has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation. While observing once again that the Government does not provide a copy of the Bill, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that section 50 of the IRB 2014 has been amended and that under the revised version the Attorney General is not entitled to appeal against the making of an award on the grounds of public interest.

Compulsory arbitration in cases where conciliation between the parties has failed. While recalling that it had noted the conformity of section 78 of the IRB 2014, as described by the Government, with the Convention, the Committee notes that the Government has still not clarified the content of section 79 of the IRB 2014. The Committee trusts once again that the Government, taking into account the Committee's comments, will ensure the full conformity of any revised legislation with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes and requests it to provide detailed information on the process of revision of the Industrial Relations Bill.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024, reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention, and the Government's reply thereto. It further notes the observations of the Center of United and Progressive Workers (SENTRO), received on 3 September 2024, relating to matters addressed below and alleging the abduction and imprisonment of union leaders, as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, referring to matters addressed below and alleging the murder of a union leader and the abduction and torture of another. The Committee also takes note of the Government's reply to the observations submitted by SENTRO and the ITUC.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2024 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) take immediate and effective measures, in line with previous recommendations of the Conference Committee and the ILO high-level tripartite mission (HLTM) to put an immediate end to any violation of freedom of association, including threats and harassment, surveillance, arbitrary arrest and detention, and extrajudicial killings, against union members for the legitimate exercise of their rights under the Convention; (ii) undertake, without delay, effective and independent investigations into the new allegations of violence against members of workers' organizations and expedite those that are pending with regard to all allegations reported since 2015; (iii) take measures to ensure the effective prevention of any violence perpetuated in connection with the exercise of workers' and employers' organizations' legitimate activities and ensure that such organizations can exercise their activities within the framework of a system which guarantees the effective respect of civil liberties and freedom of association rights; (iv) address as a matter of urgency all concerns relating to the status and content of the road map with the social partners and ensure their full participation in its monitoring and implementation; (v) ensure the effective functioning of the monitoring bodies and provide regular information to the Committee in this regard; (vi) continue to promote comprehensive training activities, with a solid focus on freedom of association and collective bargaining, among government agencies with the help of ILO technical assistance; (vii) ensure that the Anti-Terrorism Act is not implemented so as to restrict legitimate union activities and related civil liberties contrary to the Convention; (viii) ensure that the following legislative matters are promptly addressed with a view to bringing national legislation into conformity with the Convention as soon as possible: House Bills Nos 1152 and 4941; and (ix) ensure that all workers without distinction are able to form and join organizations of their choosing in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention. Finally, the Conference Committee requested the Government, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, to submit a detailed report to the Committee by 1 September 2024 containing information on the implementation of the above measures and progress made in this regard.

Tripartite road map to implement the 2019 Conference Committee conclusions and achieve full compliance with the Convention. High-level tripartite mission. The Committee had previously expected that the road map and the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders relative to the exercise of workers' rights and activities through the institutionalized tripartite process would be finalized shortly, and would significantly contribute to ensuring full respect for the civil liberties of trade union leaders and members.

The Committee had also noted concerns raised regarding elements linked to the recommendations of the HLTM, and requested the Government to review Executive Order No. 23, which had created an Inter-Agency Committee to promote and protect freedom of association and the right to organize of workers (EO23 IAC), in full consultation with the social partners.

As regards the road map, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in August 2024, the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (NTIPC) issued Resolution No. 2 of 2024, which confirmed the existence of the road map that had been approved by its Resolution No. 3 of 2023, with the understanding that the road map, being a living document, shall now include four items raised in a joint statement of the Leaders Forum (national bipartite mechanism) dated 28 August 2024: (i) regular quarterly interface of the EO23 IAC; (ii) alignment of national policy and practice with international labour standards; (iii) budget increase for the Commission on Human Rights (CHR); and (iv) review of the continued operation of the National Task Force to End Local Communist Armed Conflict (NTF-ELCAC). The Committee further notes the Government's statement that implementation of the road map has already started with a series of activities; these include capacity-building on freedom of association and civil liberties as well as multisectoral dialogues between unions, employers, law enforcement agencies and other stakeholders, and that the road map may continue to be modified with additional items and activities as the circumstances warrant. The Committee also notes that SENTRO, in its observations, confirms that a bilateral agreement on several contentious issues was incorporated into the road map, but states that while the road map outlines the steps and sets a timeline for addressing these issues, they have yet to be fully implemented. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government, in its reply to SENTRO's observations, indicates that, at a meeting of 21 October 2024 between the EO23 IAC and worker's and employers' representatives: (i) the CHR indicated that its budget has been increased by 140 million Philippine pesos (approximately US$2 million); and (ii) the IAC acknowledged that past practices of the NTF-ELCAC may have given rise to issues not consistent with the Convention, and emphasized that the NTF-ELCAC is refocusing its operations away from security concerns and toward community development programmes, and has been encouraged to engage with labour organizations.

With respect to the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Omnibus Guidelines on Freedom of Association and Civil Liberties were issued by the EO23 IAC in the form of Joint Memorandum Order 1 and took effect on 26 May 2024. The Government indicates that the Omnibus Guidelines will have been rolled out in all regions of the country by September 2024, and will be used for the development of modules for the training of local government executives, uniformed personnel of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) and the Philippine National Police (PNP), as well as trade unionists. The Committee further notes that SENTRO confirms that the Omnibus Guidelines were issued but expresses doubts regarding their effectiveness, as the task of penalizing AFP and PNP personnel who violate them is left to their respective human rights offices rather than to an objective civilian adjudicative body. SENTRO also indicates that a joint request by the labour and employer sectors to elevate the Omnibus Guidelines into an executive order, as well as a request from public sector unions to extend the Omnibus Guidelines' provisions to public sector workers, have been presented. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government denies that the request to elevate the Omnibus Guidelines into an executive order was supported by the employer sector, and states that the Guidelines are already binding and easier to amend in their current form.

With regard to Executive Order No. 23, the Committee notes that the Government responds to the 2023 observations of the ITUC, the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) and SENTRO by stating that: (i) the positions expressed by the labour sector during the HLTM, as well as a draft executive order it had submitted, were considered in the drafting of Executive Order No. 23; (ii) only agencies with security, investigative and prosecutorial functions were included as members of the EO23 IAC, which is why the social partners are not represented; (iii) the HLTM's recommendation on the creation of a presidentially-driven body did not specify that its composition needed to be tripartite; (iv) the EO23 IAC is directly under the Office of the President and is therefore provided with adequate budget; (v) Executive Order No. 23 explicitly identifies the CHR, which is the constitutionally-mandated body that is already performing the functions of a specialized, eminent and independent non-judicial body, as resource agency of the EO23 IAC; and (vi) as the above-mentioned joint statement of the Leaders Forum acknowledged the functions of the EO23 IAC and recognized its role as a body with which the NTIPC could pursue constructive social dialogue and tripartite engagement, the issues raised concerning its establishment should be considered settled. Welcoming the progress reported, particularly the issuance of Resolution No. 2 by the NTIPC and the rolling out of the Omnibus Guidelines, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the tripartite road map remains an inclusive, living document to which the social partners can contribute, and is efficiently implemented to continue addressing the substantive issues raised, with a view to ensuring full respect for the civil liberties of trade union leaders and members. Noting the reservations expressed regarding the effectiveness of the Omnibus Guidelines, the Committee requests the Government to review their practical application and scope in consultation with the social partners, and to provide information on any developments in this regard. As regards the issues raised in relation to the NTF-ELCAC, the Committee expects that the steps taken to refocus its operations towards community development will preserve for the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE) its role in relation to industrial relations.

Civil liberties and trade union rights

Previous allegations. The Committee recalls that it has received repeated allegations of serious violations of basic civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights submitted by the ITUC in 2015, 2019, 2020, 2021 and 2022, by Education International (EI) in 2019, and jointly by EI, the Alliance of Concerned Teachers (ACT) and the National Alliance of Teachers and Office Workers (SMP-NATOW) in 2020, all of which are detailed in its previous comments. The Committee has on numerous occasions requested the Government to ensure that these allegations were duly investigated and perpetrators punished in order to effectively prevent and combat impunity.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the regional tripartite monitoring bodies (RTMBs) continue to exert all efforts to coordinate with the complainant organizations and the families of the alleged victims to obtain more information on the reported cases; (ii) certain challenges, such as the general nature of the allegations, the lack of sufficient information provided by the complainants, the lack of material witnesses, the failure or refusal of the victims' families to cooperate in the investigation and the considerable length of time that has passed since these alleged incidents took place, hinder the investigation, as well as the prosecution and apprehension of the suspected perpetrators; (iii) it cannot be reasonably established that all incidents raised are related to or arose from the exercise of freedom of association and the right to organize; (iv) the DOLE and the CHR signed a Memorandum of Agreement (MOA) on 20 October 2023, providing for coordination on the referral, investigation and monitoring of cases, as well as a data sharing agreement on 31 May 2024, to facilitate the exchange of information on cases; and (v) the CHR, based on its own independent evaluations, provided additional information on 22 cases and updates on 34 others, and granted financial assistance to the victims' families when it found that human rights violations had been committed. Noting with interest the reported measures, in particular the MOA and the data-sharing agreement concluded between DOLE and the CHR, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking all necessary steps to ensure that the allegations presented since 2015 are thoroughly investigated, emphasizing once again the importance of establishing facts (including any links between the violence and trade union activities), determining culpability and bringing perpetrators to justice to effectively prevent and combat impunity. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on all progress made in this regard.

New allegations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its observations on allegations of red-tagging and harassment made by SENTRO, and on the killing of Alex Dolorosa, officer of the BPO Industry Employees Network (BIEN), and disappearances and arbitrary arrests of other union officials made by the ITUC and the ITF in their 2023 observations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the incidents mentioned by SENTRO that were not yet under monitoring were immediately transferred to RTMBs for their validation, intervention and monitoring; (ii) according to investigation reports, the motive behind the killing of Alex Dolorosa, officer of BIEN, was theft and not his union membership or activities; (iii) the authorities and the CHR, which conducted several fact-finding missions, were unable to locate either Alipio "Ador" Juat or Elizabeth "Loi" Magbanua, organizers of the Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU), and financial assistance was granted to their beneficiaries; (iv) the authorities were unable to locate Elgene "Leleng" Mungcal and Elena "Cha" Cortez Pampoza, labour organizers, or establish with certainty that they were victims of enforced disappearance, and therefore archived the case; and (v) in the case of the alleged illegal arrest of Kara Taggaoa and Larry Balbuena, two union leaders, both are out on bail and awaiting their next hearing, and the CHR recommended that the case be closed, subject to the continuous monitoring of the court cases.

The Committee further notes that SENTRO alleges that: (i) red-tagging and profiling continue unabated due to the policies that fuelled trade union repression under the previous administration, which remain in effect; and (ii) KMU leaders were abducted by security officers and 24 of them remain imprisoned on trumped-up charges. The Committee also notes that the ITUC alleges that: (i) Jude Taddeus Fernandez, organizer for the KMU, was shot dead by the PNP on 29 September 2023 during a raid carried out on his house in Binangonan, Rinzal Province; and (ii) police and intelligence officers have abducted and tortured Francisco "Eco" Dangla III, Pangasian provincial coordinator of the ACT, and have entered public schools of the National Capital Region where leaders of the ACT were working to spread unfounded accusations and fear among students, teachers and administrators. The Committee notes that the Government, in its reply to the observations of SENTRO and the ITUC, states that: (i) there are several available remedies against wrongful designation or profiling, such as filing an administrative case or a petition for writ of amparo and habeas data, as a Supreme Court ruling of 4 July 2023 (Deduro v. Vinoya) determined that red-tagging, vilification, labelling and guilt by association constitute threats to a person's life, liberty or security, which may justify the issuance of a writ of amparo; (ii) the allegations concerning the 24 KMU officers should not be considered, as the information provided by SENTRO is insufficient; (iii) Jude Taddeus Fernandez, whose real name is Oscar Dizon, was the subject of an arrest warrant for murder when the raid occurred, and in subsequent administrative proceedings against the two officers involved in his killing, it was determined that they had acted in self-defence; and (iv) the San Carlos Police Station and the PNP attempted several times to communicate with Francisco "Eco" Dangla III and gather information about his alleged abduction and torture, but were unable to do so, and DOLE has no record of his involvement in the trade union movement. While duly noting the Government's efforts to investigate the above-mentioned matters and the recent Supreme Court decision on red-tagging, vilification, labelling and guilt by association, the Committee expresses concern regarding the continued allegations of violence, harassment and intimidation against trade unionists, and urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that trade unionists are able to exercise their activities within a system which fully guarantees the respect of civil liberties and freedom of association rights. The Committee also invites SENTRO to provide the Government with any additional specific information it may have at its disposal regarding the alleged abduction and imprisonment of KMU officers.

Measures to combat impunity. Monitoring mechanisms. In its previous observation, the Committee took due note that funds had been attributed in the 2024 General Appropriations Act and action points included in the tripartite road map in order to strengthen the monitoring bodies, and the Committee expected that these bodies would be allocated more resources and staff in the very near future, with a view to ensuring their full operationalization. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the RTMBs remain fully operational, that more vigorous measures, such as trainings for their members financed by the additional budget from the 2024 General Appropriations Act, have been taken since 2022 to further strengthen their capacities, and that coordination mechanisms with other agencies have been institutionalized, enabling them to provide more details, timely updates and pertinent recommendations on reported cases. The Committee further notes that the ITUC, in its observations, reiterates that: (i) the existing monitoring bodies, such as the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council Monitoring Body (NTIPC-MB) and the RTMBs, lack sufficient funding and staff to operate properly; and (ii) although the Inter-Agency Committee on Extrajudicial Killings, Enforced Disappearances, Torture and Other Grave Violations of the Right to Life, Liberty and Security of Persons under Administrative Order 35 (AO35 IAC) was supposed to address grave human rights violations, including labour-related killings, few cases have progressed or been resolved despite its resources. Taking due note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to ensure that the monitoring bodies have sufficient resources to effectively address all pending labour-related cases of violence and other violations against trade union leaders and members. The Committee requests the Government to provide updates on the progress made by these bodies, including the AO35 IAC, in collecting the necessary information to bring the pending cases to the courts.

Measures to combat impunity. Training and Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders. The Committee had previously welcomed the training activities conducted by the Government and expected that they would continue within the framework of the tripartite road map and significantly contribute to raising awareness on matters related to freedom of association and collective bargaining among State officials. The Committee notes the Government's indication that one of the major deliverables under the road map is continuous capacity-building for all stakeholders. The Governments indicates that, through an MOA concluded between DOLE and the University of the Philippines College of Law on 1 September 2023, which is now being implemented, paralegal training is provided to trade unionists, including members of the RTMBs, to equip them with the proper knowledge and skills to provide immediate assistance to their members who might be targets of threats, intimidation, harassment and violence arising from the exercise of freedom of association and the right to organize. The Government adds that the above-mentioned development of the training modules based on the Omnibus Guidelines would start by the last quarter of 2024, and that DOLE recently issued new guidelines for its Adjustment Measures Program, which will fund capacity-building and advocacy programmes to promote the fundamental principles and rights at work, including freedom of association and the right to organize, and trade competitiveness. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it is now embarking on a technical cooperation programme with the ILO Country Office in Manila under the project entitled "Strengthening freedom of association and action against child labour in the Philippines", which will provide support to the implementation of several activities under the road map, such as the development of a case referral mechanism for the monitoring of alleged violations of freedom of association, trainings for various stakeholders, tripartite consultations and dialogues, and capacity-building activities toward the implementation of the Omnibus Guidelines. Welcoming the Government's continued capacity-building efforts, as well as its technical cooperation programme with the ILO Country Office in Manila, the Committee trusts that these initiatives will strengthen the implementation of the road map and the Omnibus Guidelines, and further enhance awareness of freedom of association and collective bargaining among stakeholders. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress of these activities.

Measures to combat impunity. Pending legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that House Bills Nos 1152 and 4941 (seeking to define and criminalize red-tagging) had been filed in the House of Representatives, and encouraged the Government to take concrete, time-bound measures toward their adoption. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the two bills have been pending with the House Committee on Justice since 2022. In the context of the above-mentioned Supreme Court decision issued on red-tagging, the Committee requests the Government to take specific, time-bound measures aimed at advancing House Bills Nos 1152 and 4941, and to provide detailed information on all progress made in this respect.

The Committee also previously noted the Government's indication that House Resolution No. 45 (directing the Committee on Justice and the Committee on Human Rights to conduct a joint inquiry into the implementation of the Act against Enforced or Involuntary Disappearance of 2012), House Bill No. 407 (seeking to declare unlawful and criminalize wilful interference with, harassment and coercion of any worker, workers' association or trade union in the exercise of their right to self-organization), as well as House Bills Nos 1513, 1518, 550 and 7043 (advocating for civil liberties and trade union rights in the public and private sectors) had been filed, and requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in their adoption. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) House Resolution No. 45 has been pending with the House Committee on Justice since 2022; (ii) House Bill No. 407 was substituted by House Bill No. 9294, which was approved by the House of Representatives on 29 November 2023 and is now pending in the Senate Committee on Labour, Employment and Human Resource Development; (iii) House Bills Nos 550 and 1513 have been pending with the House Committee on the Civil Service and Professional Regulation since 2022; (iv) House Bill No. 1518 was substituted by House Bill No. 9430, which was passed on 12 December 2023 and is now pending in the Senate Committee on Labour, Employment and Human Resource Development; and (v) House Bill No. 7430 was substituted by House Bill No. 10267, which is pending second reading at the House of Representatives.

The Committee further notes that the Government indicates, in a general manner, that: (i) the Philippines has a presidential form of government, under which there is a separation of powers between the legislative branch, the executive branch and the judiciary; (ii) while actions to be taken in relation to the bills filed are within the competence of the legislature, the executive will continue to monitor progress and provide technical inputs when called upon to do so; and (iii) the legislative priorities are coordinated through the Legislative-Executive Development Advisory Council (LEDAC), which is chaired by the President of the Philippines. The Committee also notes that SENTRO states that the legislative process has been consistently stalled as a result of the President's refusal to certify the legislative measures aimed at aligning national laws with international labour standards as "urgent". In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that during a meeting of 21 October 2024, the Executive Secretary of the EO23 IAC suggested that to merit certification, the labour sector should exert efforts to ensure that its priority bills are among the ones identified as such by the LEDAC. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including via the LEDAC and in full consultation with the social partners, to facilitate the adoption without further delay of House Resolution No. 45, House Bills Nos 407, 1513, 1518, 550 and 7043, and any other draft legislation aimed at ensuring respect for civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Anti-Terrorism Act. In its previous observation, the Committee welcomed a Supreme Court judgment which nullified two provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act, and expected that the Government would continue to ensure that the Act was not implemented in a way which had the effect of restricting legitimate union activities and related civil liberties. The Committee notes the Government's assurances that it will continue to ensure that the Act is not implemented in a manner that restricts legitimate trade union activities, and states that in case of any violation, adequate remedies are available under the Revised Penal Code and other penal laws. The Committee notes, however, that the ITUC alleges that after reporting constant surveillance by the authorities, Aurora Santiago, Region III Union Coordinator of the ACT, was charged under the Anti-Terrorism Act. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these allegations.

Legislative issues

Labour Code. The Committee previously noted with regret that despite the filing of several new bills, no concrete amendments appeared to have been made in relation with the matters raised in its previous comments, and firmly expected that the Government would make every effort to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention as soon as possible. The Committee notes the Government's indication that its legislative branch has its own priorities and rules on actions it may take, but that the social partners, particularly the labour sector, have their allies in Congress who can help them push for the bills that they consider a priority. The Government also refers to the status of certain bills, indicating that House Bill No. 9430 and Senate Bill No. 560 (on union registration and membership requirements under the Labour Code), as well as Senate Bill No. 741 (on the power of the Secretary of Labour and Employment under section 278 of the Labour Code), are pending in the Senate Committee on Labour, Employment and Human Resource Development, and that House Bill No. 9447 (on government interventions in labour disputes) and House Bill No. 10267 (on the penalty of imprisonment during a strike or lockout) are pending second reading at the House of Representatives. Regretting once again that, despite the filing of the above-mentioned bills, no significant progress has been made in addressing the matters raised in its previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to prioritize efforts to align the national legislation with the Convention, and to provide updates on any developments in this regard.

Republic of Korea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2021)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Korea Employers' Federation (KEF), communicated with the Government's report, as well as of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) and the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU), received on 6 September and 5 October 2024, respectively, and of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024. These observations, together with the Government replies thereto, are examined below.

Civil liberties. The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC and the KCTU, which denounce a climate of intimidation and repression fuelled by the Government, demonstrated by systematic disruption of protests by the police, violent attacks and harassment of unionists, as well as criminalization of union activities. They point to specific incidents in 2023 and 2024, including a special police investigation targeting unionists in the construction sector (950 unionists were summoned for investigation, 16 remain detained and 1 set himself on fire to protest harassment by the authorities) and excessive police violence against two leaders of the Federation of Korean Metalworkers' Trade Unions (FKMTU) during a sit-in protest in May 2023. The Committee notes that the Government does not refute these incidents but asserts that police investigation and crackdowns were motivated by unlawful activities and unreasonable practices (threats, coercion, obstruction of work) in the construction sector and were conducted in accordance with the law, irrespective of the group or organization involved (4,829 workers were referred to the Prosecutor with 148 arrested and 144 found guilty so far and more than 1,950 construction sites were investigated for suspicion of illegal subcontracting). Regarding the incidents with the FKMTU leadership, the Government states that the sit-in protest was located on a scaffolding built by the unionists, causing inconvenience to commuters and presenting a significant security risk and that the unionists became violent when police approached them.

The Committee previously requested information on any charges pending against members of the KCTU (Mr Yang Kyeung-soo, Mr Youn Taeg-gun and 40 other unionists) in relation to the rallies and the general strike of 2021 and the progress and outcome of the judicial process in their cases. While noting the Government's explanation that it does not separately keep track of this information and that details regarding individuals under investigation are not subject to disclosure, the Committee notes from the KCTU observations that Mr Yang and Mr Youn were sentenced to one year and six months of imprisonment, respectively, and fined.

While acknowledging the challenges for freedom of assembly during the COVID-19 pandemic, as well the challenges for the State authorities to control potentially unlawful measures in certain sectors, the Committee recalls the importance of civil liberties, in particular the right to freedom and security of person, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of opinion and expression and freedom of assembly, for the full development of freedom of association. Noting with concern the allegations of a climate of repression against trade unionists, including the above incidents of violence and mass investigations, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that basic civil liberties and fundamental freedoms, which are a prerequisite for the exercise of trade union rights protected by the Convention, are fully respected by State authorities in the management of public protests, rallies and when taking law enforcement measures against trade unionists, so as to avoid undue restrictions on the exercise of freedom of association.

The Committee further observes with concern that, on 3 December 2024, the President declared martial law, imposing important restrictions on several civil liberties. While observing that the martial law was lifted the next day, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that this situation and any measures that may result therefrom do not restrict the rights protected by the Convention and in particular the civil liberties necessary for the exercise of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2026.]

Republic of Moldova

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that in its observations received on 21 August 2024 with respect to the Convention and the Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135), the National Trade Union Confederation of Moldova (CNSM) alleges serious acts of interference in union activities by the administration of the National Centre for pre-hospital Emergency Medical Assistance (IMSP CNAMUP). The Committee notes that the CNSM alleges in particular that: (i) workers were threatened with retaliation if they refused to change their affiliation to the union supported by the Government, resulting in the forced resignation of 3,826 employees and the dismantling of the independent union; (ii) a union leader was demoted to induce resignation; and (iii) the issue has still not been resolved after the CNSM having informed the relevant authorities in July 2024. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the CNSM observation and to take the necessary action to ensure the full application of Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention with respect to the alleged acts.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee repeatedly requested the Government to take measures aimed at strengthening the existing sanctions so as to ensure effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is currently a draft law to amend article 61 of the Contravention Code and apply tougher sanctions. The Committee also notes the CNSM's observations according to which: (i) current national legislation continues to lacks an effective mechanism to protect trade union rights; (ii) the CNSM proposed amendments to article 61 of the Contravention Code to sanction anti-union interference have not been taken into account; and (iii) Act No. 114 of 9 July 2020, which repealed a Labour Code provision protecting union officials from dismissal for two years after their term, replacing it with a requirement for an advisory opinion rather than prior consent from the superior union body further has further weakened the existing legal protection against anti-union discrimination. Taking due note of the Government's indication that a legal reform is under way, the Committee expects that the Government will be soon in a position to inform about the adoption of provisions that will significantly strengthen the applicable sanctions to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy thereof.

Article 4. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comment, the Committee reiterated its previous request to amend section 360(1) of the Labour Code to ensure that referral of a collective bargaining dispute to the courts is possible only upon request by both parties to the dispute, or in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crisis. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a new draft law, the Mediation Act and the Statute of the Mediator, is currently at the endorsement stage. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection, together with the State Labour Inspectorate and the social partners, are working on the establishment of a mechanism for out-of-court dispute settlement, which is expected to be fully developed by the end of 2024. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to amend, in consultation with the social partners, section 360(1) of the Labour Code and to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that: (i) 21 collective agreements have been concluded at the national level; (ii) 18 collective agreements have been concluded at the sectoral level; At the unit level, 1,189 collective agreements have been submitted to the State Labour Inspectorate in 2021, 640 in 2022, 629 in 2023and 212 since the beginning of 2024. While taking due note of this information, the Committee notes the absence of indication regarding the number of workers covered by those agreements. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, indicating the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

Romania

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1975)

Previous comment

Article 5 of the Convention. Coexistence of trade union representatives and elected representatives in the same undertaking. Having noted that Act No. 62 of 2011 concerning social dialogue allowed, in certain circumstances, elected staff representatives to negotiate and conclude collective agreements even in the presence of trade union organizations in the undertakings concerned, the Committee requested the Government to amend the relevant legislation in order to give effect to Article 5 of the Convention. As noted in its observation of 2023 on the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), by Romania, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the new Act No. 367/2022 concerning social dialogue, promulgated on 19 December 2022, strengthens the key role of trade union organizations by providing that elected staff representatives may only negotiate collective agreements in the complete absence of trade union organizations in the undertaking (sections 57, 58 and 102 of the Act).

Russian Federation

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

Freedom of expression. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) drew the Committee's attention to the legislative aspects of Case No. 3313 [see 396th Report, October 2021, paragraphs 529–595] with regard to a situation where a union's publications criticizing the State's policy were declared as being contrary to the law and the union's statutes, and requested the Government to indicate all steps taken to ensure that the right of trade unions to express opinions was duly protected. The Committee notes that the Government states that no legislative provisions prevent trade unions from expressing disagreement with state authorities on matters of economic and social policy, and that trade unions fully exercise this right, as evidenced by the debates taking place within the Russian Tripartite Commission for the regulation of social and labour issues (RTK). The Committee observes however that in Case No. 3313, the CFA noted that judicial decisions determined that the publication of two articles criticizing the State's policies was incompatible with trade union activities as defined by the law and ordered the dissolution of the trade union which had issued them. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government take all steps to ensure that the right of trade unions to express opinions, including those criticizing the Government's economic and social policies, is duly protected in law and in practice. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken in this regard.

Foreign agents. The Committee also noted, with reference to CFA Case No. 3313, that: (i) under the Law on Non-Commercial Organizations, trade unions receiving funding from foreign sources were required to register as organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent, which entailed additional obligations under sections 24 (inspections) and 32 (restrictions on programme implementation); and (ii) the Code of Administrative Offenses imposed heavy penalties for failing to register as a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent, or for distributing materials without indicating their origin as from such an organization. The Committee urged the Government to find an appropriate solution to ensure that the regulations on these organizations were compatible with the rights of trade unions and employers' organizations under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the possibility for trade unions, as major public associations with significant influence and political involvement, to receive foreign funding has led to the imposition of restrictions due to their lack of oversight by and accountability to public authorities; (ii) trade union members and society in general have a right to know about overseas funding; and (iii) since the complaint was filed in Case No. 3313, no trade union has been designated as a foreign agent. In this regard, the Committee recalls once again that legislation which seriously hampers activities of a trade union or an employers' organization on the grounds that they accept financial assistance from an international organization of workers or employers to which they are affiliated infringes the principles concerning the right to affiliate with international organizations. In this regard, the Committee has considered that it is difficult to reconcile the additional bureaucratic burdens imposed on trade unions receiving financial assistance from abroad, and the various hefty penalties that can be imposed, with the right of trade unions to organize their administration, to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes, as well as with the right to benefit from international affiliation. Taking due note of the Government's indication that no trade union has been classified as a foreign agent since 2018, the Committee also recalls the need to ensure the conformity of the legislative provisions with the Convention, even if they are not applied in practice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the regulations on non-commercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent are compatible with the rights of workers' and employers' organizations under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

The Committee previously noted with utmost concern the entry into force in December 2022 of the Law on Control of Activities of Persons Under Foreign Influence, which defined foreign influence as a support (financial and/or other) provided by, among others, international and foreign organizations, and stipulated that non-compliance with the requirements of the law, which were more stringent than those described above, entailed dissolution. The Committee urged the Government to exclude trade unions and their organizations from the scope of the new Law. Noting with regret that the Government does not address this matter in its report, the Committee once again urges it to take all necessary steps to exclude trade unions and their organizations from the scope of application of the above-mentioned Law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee also noted with deep concern that the entry into force of the Law on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of the Russian Federation, which amended the Federal Law No. 54-FZ on Meetings, Rallies, Demonstrations, Marches and Pickets, not only restricted areas where a public event could take place to the extent that the organization of demonstrations, marches, or pickets could become virtually impossible, but also forbade the organization of such events by foreign agents. It requested the Government to provide information on these developments. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to stating that the restrictions on the right of foreign agents to organize public events are based on national security considerations. Recalling that the right of trade unions to hold public meetings and demonstrations is an essential aspect of freedom of association, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full recognition of this right, both in law and in practice, and in particular with respect to the amended Federal Law No. 54-FZ. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to review, in consultation with the social partners, various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of the narrowly interpreted category of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and whose right to strike should therefore be guaranteed. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it was ready to consult with the social partners on possible improvements and consider any draft legislation proposed by them, but none was submitted, and that on the basis of section 21 of the Labour Code, federal civil servants and workers are allowed to associate and join trade unions in order to represent and protect their rights and interests. In this regard, the Committee recalls that strikes are essential means available to workers and their organizations to protect their interests, and that too broad a definition of the concept of civil servant may result in a very wide restriction or even a prohibition of the right to strike for these workers. The Committee once again reiterates its request and firmly expects that the above-mentioned review will be conducted shortly and will identify the categories of the State and municipal civil servants that may fall outside of the narrowly interpreted category of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and whose right to strike should therefore be guaranteed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee also previously requested the Government to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to ensure the right to strike of railway workers. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates that section 413 of the Labour Code provides that the right to strike may be restricted by federal law, and since temporary work stoppages by certain categories of railway workers may pose a threat to the defence of the country and state security, as well as human life and health, it is reasonable to restrict their right to strike. The Committee recalls once more that railway transport does not constitute an essential service in the strict sense of the term where strikes can be prohibited and that instead, a negotiated minimum service could be established in this public service of fundamental importance. The Committee once again reiterates its request and firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport in order to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2015, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in an observation and a direct request, with longstanding requests for information on the application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention with respect to fire service personnel, prison staff and public servants. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation and direct request adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2015, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising questions concerning compliance with the Convention in an observation, including a longstanding request for the Government to ensure that national legislation expressly recognizes the right to collective bargaining of prison staff and fire service personnel. Not having received any observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2020, and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO.

Somalia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee takes note of the Government's first report on the application of the Convention. It notes with interest the Government's indication that a draft Labour Code (the content of which is examined in the direct request accompanying this observation), was developed in collaboration with the ILO to revise the 1972 Labour Code, and that all tripartite partners were involved in the process. It further notes that this draft Labour Code and a draft Civil Service Law are currently pending approval by the Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to inform on the adoption process of the draft Labour Code and the draft Civil Service Law and to transmit copies of the laws once adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU), received on 1 October 2020, alleging violations of the right to organize, including the right to strike, at an airport management company, as well as pressures and threats by the police against trade union officials. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sudan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 17 September 2024. Recalling the outbreak of violence in the country in April 2023 between the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) and the Rapid Support Forces (RSF) and the ongoing armed conflict, the ITUC expresses serious concern regarding the state of civil liberties and trade union freedoms in this context of acute crisis in which workers' rights cannot be guaranteed and collective organizing has become impossible.

The Committee further recalls that a public announcement was made on 28 November 2022 by the Head of the Transitional Sovereignty Council, concerning the suspension of the activities of all workers' and employers' organizations and the formation of new steering committees for trade unions and employers' organizations. While acknowledging the complexity and the difficulty of the situation prevailing in the country owing to the existence of an armed conflict, the Committee once again urges the Government to refrain from any interference regarding the functioning of workers' and employers' organizations and to guarantee the necessary civil liberties so that they can freely exercise their activities, including through free and voluntary collective bargaining, without fear of retaliation or discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the revised Labour Code only allows the imposition of compulsory arbitration in limited situations compatible with the Convention. The Government indicates that the deliberations on the draft Labour Code have not been completed owing to the recent changes the country has faced. The Government reiterates that the revision of the Labour Code is currently being assessed by a consultative committee on labour standards, and indicates that all pending issues will be considered once the situation has improved and the Law Review Committee begins its work, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee hopes that the revised Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and will only allow the imposition of compulsory arbitration: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) in case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; and (iv) in the event of an acute crisis. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Trade union rights in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee requested the Government to provide specific information on the application of trade union rights in EPZs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that one trade union is active in this sector. The Committee requests the Government to keep providing specific information in this respect, including on the number of collective agreements concluded and copies of the relevant labour inspection reports.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requested the Government to provide statistical information on the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the situation in the country does not allow it to gather the referred information. The Committee hopes that the Government will be soon in a position to provide the requested information.

Trade Unions Act. The Committee recalls that the Trade Unions Act, 2010, contains provisions which are not consistent with the principles of freedom of association (for instance, the imposition of trade union monopoly at federation level; the ban on joining more than one trade union; the need for approval from the national federation in order for federations or unions to join a local, regional or international federation; and interference in the finances of organizations). The Government indicates that owing to the situation of war, trade unions cannot carry out their functions optimally, and that the social partners are engaged in dialogue on resolving issues related to trade unions. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Committee's comments will be considered when the Act will be reviewed. Recalling the ratification of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87) in 2021, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to bring the Trade Unions Act into full conformity with Conventions Nos 87 and 98 so as to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining machinery. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Syrian Arab Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes that in its reply to the 2012 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging the use of police and paramilitary force in dealing with protests, deaths, arrests and imprisonment of political and human rights activists, the Government indicates that: (i) the ILO has no constitutional mandate to interfere in countries' internal political affairs, rather its mandate is to examine allegations of economic nature or dealing with working conditions; (ii) the matter raised by the ITUC is being discussed by the Human Rights Council since 2011; (iii) the Government categorically refutes the use of violence against its citizens; the protests, killings and acts of vandalism were carried out by armed terrorist groups in order to destabilize the country; and (iv) the right to strike is provided for in article 44 of the Constitution (2012), which specifies that citizens have the right to assemble, to peacefully demonstrate and to strike. The Committee recalls that freedom of association is a principle with implications that go well beyond the mere framework of labour law. It further recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee expects the Government to ensure respect for this principle.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether independent workers, civil servants, agricultural workers, domestic workers and similar categories, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers (workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day) shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations. The Committee considers, however, that the right to organize of the abovementioned categories of workers excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Act should be explicitly protected in law. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take measures, in consultation with social partners, to adopt the necessary legislative provisions so as to ensure that these categories of workers enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee further notes that agricultural workers and agriculture work relationships, including collective bargaining, are governed by Agricultural Relations Law No. 56 of 2004, that domestic workers are governed by Law No. 201 of 2010, and that civil servants are governed by Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. The Committee requests the Government to indicate specific legislative provisions that regulate particular aspects of freedom of association rights of civil servants, agricultural workers, and domestic as well as independent workers, and to provide a copy thereof.

Trade union monopoly. For several years, the Committee has been referring to the need for the Government to amend or repeal the legislative provisions which establish a trade union monopoly (sections 3, 4, 5 and 7 of Legislative Decree No. 84; sections 4, 6, 8, 13, 14 and 15 of Legislative Decree No. 3, amending Legislative Decree No. 84; section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 250 of 1969; and sections 26–31 of Act No. 21 of 1974). The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that workers have the right to establish independent trade unions if the union is affiliated to the General Federation of Trade Unions in Syria (GFTU). According to the Government, the application of trade union pluralism in several countries weakened trade unions and diminished workers' rights. Observing that all workers' organizations must belong to the GFTU and that any attempt to form a trade union must be subject to the consent of this Federation, the Committee considers that although it is generally to the advantage of workers and employers to avoid a proliferation of competing organizations, the right of workers to be able to establish organizations of their own choosing, as set out in Article 2of the Convention, implies that trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases. The Committee considers that it is important for workers to be able to change trade unions or to establish a new union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice. Consequently, trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention (General Survey 2012, op. cit., paragraph 92). The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in full consultations with the social partners, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. It requests the Government to inform it of any progress made in this regard.

Article 3. Financial administration of organizations. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to the need to amend section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, so as to lift the power of the Minister to set the conditions and procedures for the investment of trade union funds in financial services and industrial sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the rights afforded to them by the Constitution, the GFTU and other unions are financially independent and have the right to conclude agreements and labour contracts in accordance with section 17 of the Law on Trade Union Organizations and the right to dispose of their funds and income in accordance with their internal regulations and decisions. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects the Government to undertake, as soon as possible, the revision of section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, in full consultations with the social partners. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken or contemplated to repeal or amend section 1(4) of Act No. 29 of 1986, amending Legislative Decree No. 84 which determines the composition of the GFTU Congress and its presiding officers. The Committee has stated on multiple occasions that it should be up to trade union constitutions and rules to establish the composition and presiding officers of trade union congresses. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, in order to amend or repeal the above-mentioned provision in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that organizations are able to elect their representatives in full freedom. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested that the Government take the necessary measures to amend legislative provisions that restrict the right to strike by imposing heavy sanctions including imprisonment (sections 330, 332, 333 and 334 of Legislative Decree No. 148 of 1949, issuing the Penal Code). The Committee had further observed that no reference was made to the possibility for workers to exercise their right to strike in the chapter on collective labour disputes of the Labour Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 67 of the Labour Act provides protection against dismissals of unionized workers for taking part in trade-union activities. Recalling that in the past, the Government had indicated that the GFTU was working to modify the Labour Act to ensure coherence with articles of the Constitution granting workers the right to strike, the Committee expects that the law will be amended so as to bring it into line with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information in this regard. While noting the Government's indication that the agricultural sector is now governed by Law No. 56 of 2004, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether workers of this sector enjoy the right to strike and identify the relevant legislative provisions.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Scope of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify and provide details concerning the legislative provisions affording to the following categories of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention: independent workers, civil servants, domestic servants and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day. The Committee notes the Government's indication that : (i) pursuant to section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations; and (ii) civil servants are governed by the Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. Noting that section 5(b) of the Labour Act excludes several categories of workers from its scope of application and exclusively refers to the content of their individual contracts of employment, the Committee requests the Government to specify the legislative provision recognizing the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate legislative provisions regulating the right of collective bargaining for civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It further requests the Government to indicate whether independent workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention and to specify the relevant legislative provisions.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, noting that the Labour Act of 2010 does not expressly prohibit acts of interference on the part of the employers' or workers' organizations in each other's affairs, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures with a view to adopting clear and precise provisions prohibiting acts of interference, accompanied by sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While observing that the Government does not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 2 of the Convention, workers' and employers' organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration. Acts of interference are deemed to include acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of an employer or an employers' organization, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers and employers' organizations (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 194). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation explicitly prohibits all of the acts covered by Article 2 of the Convention and that it provides for sufficiently dissuasive penalties in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that section 187(c) of the Labour Act grants an excessive power to the Ministry to object and refuse to register a collective agreement on any grounds that it deems appropriate during a 30-day period after filing the collective agreement and therefore requested the Government to amend the provision in order to fully guarantee the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established in the Convention. Additionally, it pointed out that pursuant to section 214 of the Labour Act, if mediation fails, either party may file a request to initiate dispute settlement through arbitration and accordingly recalled that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration in the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and acute national crises. The Committee observes that the Government merely states that all laws and subsequent amendments on the Labour Act were adopted in full consultation with social partners, and reiterates that section 187(c) of the Labour Act aims to ensure that collective agreements are in conformity with the abovementioned Act. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sections 187(c) and 214 of the Labour Act are brought into conformity with the Convention.

Arbitration bodies. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 215 of the Labour Act so as to ensure that the composition of the tribunal is balanced and has the confidence of the parties in the arbitration mechanism. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will undertake, as soon as possible, the amendment of the abovementioned provision.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations. While taking note that the Labour Act refers in its section 178 to collective bargaining and social dialogue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate, in practice, the measures taken or envisaged to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations to regulate the terms and conditions working through collective bargaining. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of existing collective agreements, the sectors concerned and the numbers of workers covered by those.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tunisia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Tunisian General Labour Union (UGTT) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 30 August and 17 September 2024, respectively, which refer to the matters examined by the Committee below. The Committee further notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2024, reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2024 on the application of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee recalls the discussion that took place at the Conference Committee in June 2024 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the reports of arrests, accusations, criminal prosecutions and administrative measures taken against trade unionists for carrying out activities protected under the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its conclusions, the Conference Committee requested the Government, in consultation with social partners, to: (i) restore an environment conducive to the enjoyment of freedom of association free from intimidations, threats and arbitrary arrests; (ii) ensure that workers' and employers' organizations are able to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom; (iii) ensure that representatives of independent international workers' and employers' organizations are allowed to support their affiliates; (iv) ensure that the Labour Code is brought in conformity with the Convention; and (v) ensure that the determination of representative organizations at sectoral and enterprise level is based on clear, pre-established and objective criteria. The Committee further notes that the Conference Committee invited the Government to seek ILO technical assistance in the implementation of its recommendations and requested the Government, before 1 September 2024, to report to the Committee on all measures taken and progress achieved in this respect, as well as on all outstanding information requested by the Committee.

Environment conducive to the enjoyment of freedom of association. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations made by the UGTT in 2023. The Committee notes, in particular, the Government's indication that Mr Anis Kaâbi (Secretary General of the trade union representing officials of the Tunisian Motorway Association), who was arrested on charges of wilful infliction of damage on the association (amounting to 450,000 Tunisian dinars or about US$142,000) after opening up motorway lanes free of charge during a strike, had been involved in other judicial proceedings which are unrelated to his trade union activities. The Committee further notes from the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee that Mr Kaâbi was released on 18 April 2024, even though he is still under a travel ban.

The Committee furthermore recalls that in its 2023 observations, the UGTT indicated that: (i) Ms Esther Lynch, General Secretary of the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), was declared "undesirable" by the authorities and was requested to leave the country within 24 hours; and (ii) the authorities banned a delegation of the ITUC from entering the country. The Committee notes with concern that the Government's comment thereon is limited to a broad statement that any intervention by the authorities on these matters was the result of violations by representatives of international trade unions (namely, an infringement on Tunisia's sovereignty and independence) and that their presence was tantamount to encroachment upon the country's autonomy, interference in its internal affairs and a threat to national stability and security. While recognizing that the right to exclude persons from national territory is a matter of a State sovereignty, the Committee considers that any such decision should be based on objective criteria free of anti-trade unionism. The Committee expects the Government to ensure the application of this principle in line with its obligations under the Convention.

The Committee takes note of the most recent UGTT and the ITUC allegations of violations of trade union rights committed by the authorities. In particular, the Committee notes with concern the allegations of arrests, investigations, criminal prosecutions and punishments, as well as other actions taken against trade unionists, based on activities protected under the Convention or on false, fabricated and malicious charges. The Committee notes the ITUC indication in this respect that the Deputy General Secretary in charge of the private sector in the UGTT, Mr Taher Mezzi, was arrested before a protest, with the objective of threatening and weakening the union. The Committee further notes the observation of the ITUC regarding Decree-law 2022-54, which allegedly creates a permanent risk of arrest and conviction for trade unionists carrying out their union responsibilities. The ITUC alleges that the public prosecutor requested a one-year prison sentence for the General Secretary of the trade union of the Ministry of Cultural Affairs for criticising the President on social media. Recalling the essential link between civil liberties and trade union rights and with reference to the Conference Committee's conclusions, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative amendments. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the following sections of the Labour Code: (i) section 242, to ensure that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment (16 years under section 53) are able to exercise their trade union rights without authorization from their parent or guardian; (ii) section 251, to allow foreign workers access to the functions of trade union leadership, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country; and (iii) sections 376 bis, 376 ter, 387 and 388 concerning restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike (approval of the umbrella organization before declaring a strike, compulsory indication of the duration of the strike in the strike notification and the possibility of imposing penalties in the event of an unlawful strike).

While noting the Government's indication that it is currently in the process of amending the Labour Code, the Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has not reported any progress in amending the above-mentioned legislative provisions in line with its previous comments. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps, in response to its longstanding recommendations and in consultation with the social partners, to amend sections 242, 251, 376 bis, 376 ter, 387 and 388 of the Labour Code so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee expects the Government to provide detailed information on all progress made in this respect.

The Committee also requested the Government to report on the adoption of a decree for determining the list of essential services, as provided for by section 381 ter of the Labour Code. Noting with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government to provide information on all measures taken toward the adoption of the said decree and to send a copy of the decree once it has been adopted.

Representativity criteria. The Committee requested the Government to indicate all measures taken, in consultation with all concerned workers' and employers' organizations, to ensure that the determination of the representative organizations at sectoral and enterprise level is based on clear, pre-established and objective criteria. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is in the process of finalizing a vision for the system of trade union representation that enjoys consensus among all parties and to that end, it will hold a workshop on the identification of standards for union representation at the sectoral and establishment level in cooperation with the ILO and with the participation of employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee expects that the criteria for representativeness at the sectoral and establishment level will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024, relating to the discussions held in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (the Conference Committee) on the application of the Convention by Türkiye. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) and the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received respectively on 31 August and 17 September 2024, which relate to issues examined in the present comment. The Committee notes the responses of the Government to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Conference Committee in June 2024 on the application of the Convention by Türkiye, during which it noted with concern the high number of cases of anti-union discrimination in the country and the lack of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions to combat this phenomenon in law and in practice. The Committee also noted with concern the significant gaps in law and practice regarding the scope of collective bargaining. Taking into account the discussion, the Conference Committee called on the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate and effective measures to:

- ensure the independent, expeditious and in-depth investigation into the alleged anti-union dismissals under the state of emergency decrees in the framework of procedures presenting all the guarantees of due process;
- adopt effective and dissuasive sanctions against anti-union discrimination, including anti-union dismissals, in both the public and private sectors, and ensure that workers who have suffered such prejudice are entitled to appropriate remedies (including reinstatement, financial compensation, etc.);
- engage in a comprehensive review of judicial and non-judicial mechanisms for the effective and timely investigation and redress of cases of anti-union discrimination;
- establish a robust system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in both the public and private sectors;
- prevent interference in legitimate trade union activities and use of violence against trade union members and workers;
- amend section 34 of Act No. 6356 with a view to enabling parties in the private sector wishing to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements to do so;
- ensure that minority trade unions are able to exercise their rights protected under the Convention;
- ensure that court proceedings on the legal validity of trade union majority certificates are concluded within a reasonable time;

- amend section 28 of Act No. 4688 with a view to removing restrictions on the material scope of collective bargaining in the public sector and to ensure that the parties concerned can autonomously decide the subjects for negotiation;
- amend existing legislation to ensure that prison staff, locum workers and public servants without a written contract can effectively exercise their right to organize and bargain collectively under the Convention;
- provide efficient and rapid remedies against the dismissal of trade union members based on state of emergency powers;
- review the method of appointment of members of the public employee arbitration board so as to ensure its independence and impartiality;
- elaborate and implement awareness-raising campaigns and programmes to educate the police and security forces, the judiciary and the administration on trade union rights;
- provide any outstanding information requested by the Committee of Experts before its next session together with detailed information on the measures taken to implement these recommendations, and on the results achieved.

The Conference Committee invited the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to effectively implement all of the Committee's recommendations.

Articles 1–6 of the Convention. Personal scope of the Convention. Prison staff. In its previous comments, the Committee repeatedly requested the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee that prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) a 2023 Constitutional Court decision permits heads of departments, faculty deans, institute and college directors and their deputies to establish and join trade unions, suggesting that their roles in public power do not automatically disqualify them from trade union membership; and (ii) the justification of this decision may serve as stimulating jurisprudence for narrowing the category of public servants who cannot become members of a trade union. Noting the Government's indications, the Committee recalls that under the terms of the Convention, prison staff have the right of collective bargaining, which includes the right to be represented in negotiations by the organization of their own choosing. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including through revising section 15 of Act No. 4688, to guarantee that prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in collective bargaining.

Locum workers and public servants working without a written contract. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that locum workers, who include teachers, nurses and midwives, as well as public servants without a written contract, can exercise the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes that, while reiterating that these workers cannot join the unions established under Act No. 4688, because they are not employed in any cadre or position as required by section 3 of the law, the Government indicates that the Tripartite Consultation Board met in October 2023 under the theme of social dialogue at the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. During the meeting chaired by the Minister himself, representatives from the Ministry, its affiliated institutions, the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), the Confederation of Real Trade Unions (HAK-İŞ), the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Türkiye (DİSK), and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK) discussed the country's challenges in this area. It was decided to form sub-working committees, which will immediately begin work alongside confederations, trade unions, legal experts, and academics. The sub-working committee convened its first meeting on 23 May 2024, focusing on challenges within the current collective labour legislation, and considering possible amendments in this regard. It agreed to hold a second meeting on 26 June 2024. Noting the Government's indications, the Committee expects that the Government will soon be able to report progress to ensure that locum workers and public servants working without a written contract can exercise their right to organize and collective bargaining, either by amending the law to allow them to join organizations formed under Act No. 4688, or by providing a framework within which they can create their own organizations.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Massive dismissals in the public sector under the state of emergency decrees. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with deep concern that the public officials alleging that their dismissals in application of the State of Emergency Decree-Laws following the 2016 coup attempt were indeed motivated by anti-union reasons, had not had access to an effective, rapid, and fair procedure that would protect them against anti-union dismissals. The Committee had therefore urged the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure the independent, expeditious and in-depth investigation of such allegations in the framework of effective and rapid procedures presenting all the guarantees of due process. The Committee notes that according to the KESK's latest observations on this issue, the same situation persists and almost 60 per cent of KESK members who were dismissed continue to demand justice. The KESK alleges that even among those who have obtained the right to return to their jobs, a number of them are not being reinstated because of security investigations, which the Government does not dispute in its reply. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the Commission of Inquiry carried out its examinations and assessments of the applications in accordance with the procedures and principles laid down by Law No. 7075 and that it is therefore incorrect to say that KESK's members were deliberately targeted. The Government reiterates that the primary focus of the Commission of Inquiry in assessing applications was to determine whether individuals had acted in accordance with the orders and instructions of a terrorist organization. The Government adds that in each case, the grounds for dismissal and the data collected were carefully reviewed. Additionally, decisions made by judicial authorities were monitored through the National Judiciary Informatics System (UYAP). The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Commission of Inquiry's decisions, detailed in its Activity Report, were notified to the relevant institutions, with successful applicants reinstated by the respective institution or the Council of Higher Education; (ii) dissatisfied individuals could appeal to nine specialized Administrative Courts in Ankara; and (iii) dismissals were conducted in accordance with constitutional and legal provisions, aiming at eliminating threats to national security. For the Government, security-related issues are separate from labour matters, and as no trade unionist is immune from the consequences of unlawful acts, trade unionists were detained on the suspicion of being members of terrorist organizations or having participated in terrorist activities in violation of the Turkish Penal Code, Anti-Terror Law and the Law on Meetings and Demonstrations. The Committee notes once again that it cannot be inferred from the information provided by the Government that in the work of the Commission of Inquiry, consideration was given, and safeguards established to adequately examine allegations of anti-union discrimination. The Committee also notes that the Government reiterates the information provided to the Conference Committee in June 2024 according to which the President of the Republic introduced a judicial reform strategy in 2019 and that, as part of the strategy, the Eighth Judicial Package, published in March 2024, expanded the mandates and authorities of the Human Rights Compensation Commission, established in 2013, to shorten litigation processes. In view of the foregoing, the Committee once again expresses its deep concern that the public officials who allege that their dismissals in application of the State of Emergency Decree-Laws were indeed motivated by anti-union reasons did not have access to an effective, rapid and fair procedure that would protect them against anti-union dismissals. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take appropriate measures without further delay to ensure the independent, expeditious and in-depth investigation of such allegations in the framework of effective and rapid procedures presenting all the guarantees of due process. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect, as well as on the impact of the Human Rights Compensation Commission in the context of the Eighth Judicial Package.

Continued use of state of emergency powers to dismiss union members. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the KESK's observation that despite the expiration of the state of emergency, governors and ministries continued to use the provisional section 35 of the Emergency Decree Law No. 375, dismissing 21 teacher members of the Education and Science Workers' Union of Turkey (EĞİTİM SEN) from Diyarbakir on 29 November 2021. Regretting the absence of any new information on this subject, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the allegation of the continued use of state of emergency powers to dismiss union members.

Article 1. Adequate protection against anti-union dismissals. Private sector. In its previous comments the Committee noted that pursuant to the current legislation: (i) judicial authorities could in no circumstances impose an order of reinstatement on a private sector employer; (ii) section 25(4) of Act No. 6356 (Law on Trade Unions and Collective Labour Agreements) fixed a minimum amount for "union compensation" in case of acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal, which is the worker's annual wage, but in cases of anti-union dismissal, neither a minimum amount nor a cap was fixed in the law; the issue seemed to be left to the discretion of the judicial authority; and (iii) the Government did not refer to any other existent penalty or sanction for anti-union dismissals, and section 78 of Act No. 6356 containing penal provisions was silent about anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that for the Government the legislation provides sufficient protection and deterrent sanctions against discriminatory acts. The Government reiterates in particular that (i) the provisions of the Labour Law No. 4857 on unjustified dismissals are designed along the lines of the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), which does not require mandatory reinstatement but provides for adequate compensation; (ii) both sanctions for damages, administrative fines and actions for reinstatement are provided for violations of sections 17, 19 and 25 of Act No. 6356; (iii) actions for reinstatement and damages in cases of anti-union discrimination in employment are regulated in section 25 of Act No. 6356; and (iv) section 118 of the Penal Code No. 5237 provides that whoever uses force or threat against a person to force them to join or not to join a union, to participate in the activities of the union or to leave their position in the union or union management, will be sentenced to imprisonment from six months to two years. Concerning the amount of compensation paid to a worker dismissed for anti-union reasons, the Committee recalls, however, that there is no specific provision under Act No. 6356 setting out the amount of "union compensation", the determination of which is left to the discretion of the judge. The Committee further recalls the recommendations formulated in this regard by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3410. In view of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate measures to adopt effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against anti-union dismissals in the private sector. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information regarding the judicial practice in the determination of the amount of compensation awarded to workers dismissed for anti-union reasons. Finally, in the absence of any information brought to its attention on this subject, the Committee urges the Government to provide its comments regarding the observation of the ITUC alleging the summary dismissal of 180 workers, all members of the Turkish Wood and Paper Industry Workers' Union (AGAC-IS), after a court ordered the company to start negotiations with the union in June 2022.

Anti-union discrimination in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that: (i) while section 18 of Act No. 4688 prohibits anti-union discrimination including transfers and dismissals, the fine provided in section 38/b of the Act does not appear to be applicable to acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of employment, as it does not cover violations of section 18 of the Act which prohibits such acts; and (ii) the same consideration applies to section 118 of the Penal Code. The Committee notes that while the Government reiterates that the above-mentioned provisions ensure sufficient protection against all types of discrimination, it does not indicate other legal provisions allowing compensation to be awarded to public sector workers subjected to anti-union discrimination. The Committee can therefore only note once again that the legislation does not provide for compensation for victims of anti-union discrimination (including dismissals), or for any sanctions against those responsible for anti-union discrimination. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate measures to ensure that provision is made in the legislation for an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination in the public sector, by providing for full compensation of the prejudice suffered in both occupational and financial terms and by providing for effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect and to provide its comments regarding the observations of the KESK in 2023 and 2024, alleging the anti-union transfer of about 30 members among its affiliates.

Collection of data on anti-union discrimination in private and public sectors. The Committee recalls that the Government was requested to establish a system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in both private and public sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) works were launched by the "distribution bureau" within the UYAP system. However, the capacity of this bureau and the heavy workload of the judicial bodies as well as the large number of cases aggravate the system of legal registration of cases in which real anti-union discrimination has been identified; (ii) the Alo 170 hotline is also a relevant tool to receive all kinds of information on labour and social security issues; and (iii) under the "Development of Social Dialogue in Working Life" project carried out jointly by the ILO and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, the report entitled "Methods of Establishing a Data Collection System for the Detection of Trade Union Discrimination in the Private and Public Sectors and a Model Suggestion for Türkiye" was prepared with the social partners and published on 3 October 2018. However, despite the efforts outlined in the report, a concrete model proposal for Türkiye could not be developed, nor was there any existing example from other countries that could serve as a benchmark for union discrimination data reporting. The Committee further notes that the Government reiterates that the determination of whether a dismissal is due to trade union membership or activity is made by court decisions; however considering the court processes and the duration of the cases, the difficulties in tracking and recording the necessary information are considerable, and it is currently not possible to obtain reliable data on trade union discrimination. Noting with regret the lack of significant progress concerning this matter, the Committee once again stresses the need to take concrete steps towards establishing the system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination and expects the Government to provide in its next report information on any development in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. Collective agreement bonus. The Committee noted the observations of the Health Services Union (SAHİM-SEN) concerning the collective agreement bonus which was paid only to members of public servants' unions registering at least two per cent of the total number of public servants eligible to union membership in the relevant sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that following a decision of the Constitutional Court of 18 January 2024, the rule requiring membership in public servants' unions that exceed the 2 per cent threshold to benefit from collective agreement bonuses was revoked. The Constitutional Court stated that although there is no obligation for public servants to join trade unions, the practice of granting collective agreement bonuses exclusively to members of these unions has a restrictive effect on the establishment of new unions and the freedom of choice for workers to join any union of their preference. The Committee takes due note of the Court decision.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Cross-sector bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that while cross-sector bargaining resulting in "public collective labour agreement framework protocols" was possible in the public sector, this was not the case in the private sector. The Committee requested the Government to initiate a new consultation process with the social partners with a view to amending section 34 of Act No. 6356 to ensure that it did not restrict the possibility of the parties in the private sector to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements should they so desire. The Committee notes that, while the Government once again indicates that the existing system is a product of a long and well-established industrial relations system in Türkiye and that it does not prevent parties wishing to enter into sectoral agreements at the regional and national levels, the Government is ready to consider proposals for amendments to the current collective bargaining system, to be made jointly by the social partners if they reach the necessary consensus on the changes. In this respect the Government is highlighting the legislative process that began in early 2024 with the participation of the social partners within the Tripartite Consultation Board. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the amendment of section 34 of Act No. 6356.

Requirements for becoming a bargaining agent. Private sector. Determination of the most representative union and rights of minority unions. The Committee recalls that section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 sets out the following requirement for becoming a collective bargaining agent at the enterprise level: the union should represent at least 1 per cent of the workers engaged in a given branch of activities and more than 50 per cent of workers employed in the workplace and 40 per cent of workers of the enterprise to engage in collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the lowering in 2015 of the branch representation threshold for becoming a bargaining agent at the enterprise level from 3 to 1 per cent, had had a positive impact on the unionization rate and considered that the removal of the branch threshold would have a similarly positive impact on the rate of unionization as well as on the capacity of unions, especially independent unions who are not affiliated to large confederations, to use the collective bargaining machinery. The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC which point out that the 1 per cent threshold prevents significant trade union organizations in a variety of important sectors from engaging in collective bargaining, while questioning the method of collecting and calculating union membership over time. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous statements according to which the 1 per cent threshold enables strong unions to become parties to collective bargaining agreements and thus enables employees to benefit from union rights more effectively. As far as the statistics are concerned, the Committee notes the Government's reply to the ITUC that: (i) trade union membership statistics are published under the framework of Act No. 6356, which governs the rules unions must adhere to in protecting and advancing their members' rights and regulating their activities; (ii) the Ministry of Labour and Social Security bases these statistics on membership notifications made through the e-government portal and on workers' notifications submitted to the Social Security Institution; and (iii) since the data are transferred entirely from digital platforms, the Ministry has no ability to interfere with them. The Government points out that according to the Communiqué of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security on the statistics dated July 2024, there are 231 trade unions in Türkiye, 102 of which are affiliated to 7 workers' trade union confederations and 129 are independent. Sixty-two unions pass the 1 per cent threshold required for collective bargaining, 57 of which are unions affiliated to three major confederations, namely TÜRK-İŞ, HAK-İŞ and DİSK. The Committee, however, continues to observe that: (i) close to three quarters of the unions in the country would not qualify for becoming a bargaining agent, due to the application of the 1 per cent sectoral threshold; (ii) the combination of rules governing the recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining was not conducive to the development of collective bargaining in the country; and (iii) according to ILOSTAT, 7.4 per cent of employees in Türkiye were covered by a collective agreement in 2019. Noting that the Government reaffirms its readiness to consider proposals to amend section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 if the social partners reach consensus in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take the appropriate measures to: (i) amend section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 so as to ensure that more workers' organizations can engage in collective bargaining with the employers; and (ii) amend the legislation to ensure that in cases where no union meets the conditions for becoming an exclusive bargaining agent, minority trade unions are at least able to conclude, jointly or separately, a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information concerning the number of unions in the country indicating those that pass the 1 per cent sectoral threshold, the number of collective agreements concluded and in force and the number of workers covered.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Material scope of collective bargaining. The Committee noted in its previous comments that section 28 of Act No. 4688, as amended in 2012, restricted the scope of collective agreements to "social and financial rights" only, thereby excluding issues such as working time, promotion and career, as well as disciplinary sanctions. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the KESK's 2024 observations stressing that the collective bargaining framework for public employees restricted the negotiations to the economic rights and did not allow to discuss other aspects of the professional life. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that: (i) certain public servants, especially those in strategic sectors or on a contract, face restrictions regarding their union activities, and while these limitations are consistent with both national interests and international Conventions, ongoing monitoring is essential to ensure that all public servants receive adequate representation; (ii) the 2012 amendment significantly broadened the material scope of collective bargaining in the public sector and enabled public servants' unions and confederations to participate and intervene in decisions and decision-making processes that were previously taken unilaterally by the public authorities; (iii) many improvements in the financial and social rights of public servants were introduced as a result of this process; and (iv) progress was also made concerning other matters such as leave rights, introduction of disciplinary amnesty, abolition of the practice of terminating the employment of those who received reprimands during the probationary period, presence of union representatives in disciplinary committees and important arrangements regarding civil servants with disabilities. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information as to the exact material scope of collective bargaining concerning public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, both in law and in practice.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Participation of most representative branch unions. The Committee recalls that pursuant to section 29 of Act No. 4688, the Public Employers' Delegation (PED) and the Public Servants' Unions Delegation (PSUD) are parties to the collective agreements concluded in the public service. Even though the most representative unions in the branch are represented in the PSUD and take part in bargaining within branch-specific technical committees, their role within the PSUD is restricted in that they are not entitled to make proposals for collective agreements, in particular where their demands are qualified as general or related to more than one service branch. The Committee therefore requested the Government to ensure that Act No. 4688 and its application in practice enable the most representative unions in each branch to make proposals for collective agreements including on issues that may concern more than one service branch, as regards public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates its previous indication concerning the role of the representative branch unions within the technical committee established for each branch. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide specific information on the role effectively played by the most representative branch unions in the PSUD in respect of the conclusion of collective agreements that are applicable to more than one branch of activity.

Public employee arbitration board. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to consider reviewing the method of appointment of the Board members so as to more clearly show its independence and impartiality and to win the confidence of the parties. The Committee notes that the Government once again merely indicates that the chairperson of the Board is appointed from among the Presidents, Vice-Presidents or Heads of Departments of the Court of Cassation, the Council of State (Supreme Court for Administrative Courts) and the Supreme Court of Public Accounts. The Committee notes that, for its part, the KESK recalls that the seventh cycle of collective bargaining that took place in August 2023 ended with a referral to the Board, where it was decided that the Government's offer was fair, and no change was made to it in favour of the public employees. Recalling that the President of the Republic designates not only the chair, but 7 out of 11 members of the public employee arbitration board, and that as the Government is also the employer in the public sector, it is therefore a party to the negotiations on which the Board will pronounce itself, the Committee notes with regret the lack of progress on this matter and once again urges the Government to consider reviewing, in consultation with the social partners, the method of appointment of the Board members and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Recalling that the Government can avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Results of the 2015 Undercover Policing Inquiry. Recalling the allegations relating to police surveillance of trade unions and trade unionists submitted by the Trades Union Congress (TUC) and the establishment of the Undercover Policing Inquiry (UCPI), which published an interim report in 2023, the Committee expected that a final report with recommendations will be issued in the very near future. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the UCPI's investigations are still ongoing. The Committee observes from the information provided by the Government that the final report is expected to be published by the end of 2026, subject to receiving the necessary funding from its sponsor Department, the Home Office. The Committee expects the Government to ensure that necessary funds are available to the UCPI so that it can conclude its work on time and requests the Government to provide a copy of the report once adopted.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Electronic balloting. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government to provide information on the measures taken to facilitate electronic balloting (e-balloting) for industrial action ballots for a number of years. The Committee notes that the Government recognizes that the domestic law governing trade union statutory ballots is antiquated and fails to recognize the huge steps trade unions have made to engage and communicate with members. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that as part of its plan to update trade union legislation, so that it is fit for a modern economy, it shall allow modern and secure electronic balloting and workplace ballots, as political parties and listed companies use, while ensuring high standards of engagement and participation. The Committee expects the Government to take all necessary measures to facilitate electronic balloting without further delay and to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Minimum services legislation. In its previous comment, the Committee took note of the allegations raised by the TUC in 2023 concerning the Strikes (Minimum Service Levels) Act 2023, (hereinafter the Strikes Act). The TUC alleged that the Strikes Act introduced unacceptable minimum service levels in addition to restrictive anti-strike laws already in place, granting wide power to the Secretary of State to determine the scope of these services without any guidance from Parliament, as well as the extensive list of sectors in which minimum service can be mandated, including education services and transport services. The TUC also criticized the lack of meaningful consultation with unions, the absence of mandatory agreements on minimum service levels, and provisions that impose undue obligations on unions, including enforcement of compliance by members, withdrawing the legal protection for unfair dismissal in case of non-compliance with the work order. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures, in preparing its regulations and other guidance, including codes of practice, to ensure that any minimum services imposed on industrial action in the transport and education sectors are indeed minimum, ensure the participation of the social partners in their determination, and where no agreement is reached, ensure that they are determined by an independent body which has the confidence of the parties. While welcoming the Government's indication that it is committed to repealing the Strikes Act and related regulations, the Committee regrets that the Government provides no indications as to the intended timeline therefor. The Committee expects the Government's next report to provide detailed information on all steps taken to that end and the results achieved.

Blacklisting. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the practice of notifying the police of the identity of activists; the details of any complaints regarding the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action or lawful picketing, including any complaints made in this regard, as well as any plans for improving protection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that blacklisting is completely unacceptable and has no place in modern employment relations. The Employment Relations Act, 1999 (Blacklists) Regulations 2010 made it unlawful for an individual or organization to compile, sell or make use of a blacklist of trade union members or those who have taken part in trade union activities. Nevertheless, the Government recognizes that national legislation on blacklisting has not been updated for over a decade and needs to be modernized to account for new technologies and ways of storing data. As such, the Government is committed to updating regulations to outlaw the use of predictive technologies for blacklisting and to prevent workers from being mistreated or fired without evidence of human interaction. The Government also commits to end the loophole that allows employers to bypass laws through third party contractors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken and progress achieved in this regard. In the meantime, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on any complaint regarding the handling of information received by the police on the identity of activists or its impact on lawful industrial action or lawful picketing.

The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been commenting on the following matters regarding the Trade Union Act, 2016:

- Requirement for strike ballots. The Committee requested the Government to review section 3 of the Act with the social partners and to ensure that the requirement of support by 40 per cent of all workers for strike ballot did not apply to the education and transport sectors.
- The role of the Certification officer. The Committee requested the Government to review the impact of sections 16–20 of the Act to ensure that the expansion of the role of the Certification officer does not interfere with the rights of workers' and employers' organizations under Article 3 of the Convention and to provide information on any use by the Certification officer of its new investigatory powers and financial penalties imposed.
- Procedural requirements for industrial action. Return of workers to their posts following lawful industrial action. The Committee requested the Government to review sections 8 and 9 of the Act on timing and duration of industrial action, as well as to strengthen the protection available to workers undertaking official and lawful strike action.

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it intends to repeal the Trade Union Act and to create a new era of partnership that sees employees, unions and Government work together in cooperation and through negotiation. The Committee regrets, however, that the Government provides no indications as to the intended timeline for this. The Committee expects the Government's next report to provide detailed information on all steps taken to that end and the results achieved.

Sympathy strikes. The Committee recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) has referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 3432 (404th Report, October–November 2023, paragraphs 610–651). In particular, the CFA requested the Government to engage with the social partners to overcome challenges regarding the legislative prohibition on sympathy strikes. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures aimed at addressing the matters raised in that case and the outcome achieved. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the prohibition of secondary action protects the rights and freedoms of others and serves the public interest. The Government highlights that, under national law, lawful industrial action requires a trade dispute with the direct employer of the workers involved, as third-party employers cannot negotiate or resolve such dispute. Additionally, the Government indicates that this prohibition stems from the past experiences where such action has caused widespread disruption and economic harm. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) upheld the UK's prohibition of secondary action in the Rail Maritime and Transport Union (RMT) v. UK case. The Government points out that secondary picketing during lawful action is permitted and protected under trade union legislation. At the outset, the Committee wishes to make it clear that the ECtHR's judgment, concerns the interpretation of the European Convention on Human Rights: "The Grand Chamber's statement reflects the distinct character of the Court's review compared with that of the supervisory procedures of the ILO and the European Social Charter. The specialised international monitoring bodies operating under those procedures have a different standpoint, shown in the more general terms used to analyse the ban on secondary action … In contrast, it is not the Court's task to review the relevant domestic law in the abstract, but to determine whether the manner in which it actually affected the applicant infringed the latter's rights under Article 11 of the Convention…" (paragraph 98 of the judgment). The Committee recalls that its mandate consists in undertaking an impartial and technical analysis of how [ILO] Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States; in doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions (see the Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part A), 112th Session, Geneva, 2024, General Report, paragraph 30), and, in the present case, of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). In this respect, the Committee recalls that it has always considered that a general prohibition of sympathy strikes could lead to abuse, particularly in the context of globalization characterized by increasing interdependence and the internationalization of production, and that workers should be able to take such action, provided that the initial strike they are supporting is itself lawful (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 125). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to engage with the social partners to overcome challenges regarding the legislative prohibition on sympathy strikes, in conformity with freedom of association.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) alleging the imprisonment of two activists attempting to form an independent trade union, and the death of Mr Nuriddin Jumaniyazov, one of the imprisoned activists, while in detention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the conviction of the above-mentioned activists was not related to any attempt to create a trade union, as they were imprisoned for human trafficking, and that the death of Mr Jumaniyazov was due to health and age-related reasons.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Distinction based on nationality. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 4 and 7 of the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) granted the right to organize only to citizens. The Committee noted the Government's indication that all workers in its territory enjoyed this right due to the broad definition of "citizens" contained in section 16 of the Civil Code, and requested it to consider amending the LTU so as to avoid any possible ambiguity or conflict in its interpretation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 37 of the Labour Code provides the right to organize to all workers, in conformity with the Convention. While taking due note of the above, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government consider amending the LTU with a view to avoiding any ambiguity.

Police and armed forces. The Committee previously noted that section 2 of the LTU provided that specific provisions could be established for the application of this law in the armed forces, internal affairs offices, the National Security Service, the National Guard and other military forces. The Committee noted the Government's indication that there were no obstacles to freedom of association for civilians working in internal affairs agencies and the National Guard, where trade union organizations had been established, and requested it to indicate if that was also the case in the armed forces and the National Security Services. The Committee notes that the Government states that civilians working in the armed forces and the National Security Services also enjoy freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any trade union organizations have been created within the armed forces and the National Security Services.

Right of workers and employers to establish organizations of their own choosing. Minimum membership requirement. The Committee previously noted that section 13(e) of the Regulations on the Procedure for State Registration of Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations provided that at least 3,000 participants were required to register a non-governmental non-commercial organization in the form of a trade union, and that section 6 of the Law on Public Associations (LPA) stipulated that republican trade unions (whose activities and chartered goals are distributed over the entire territory of the republic) must have no less than 3,000 members. It requested the Government to review this minimum membership requirement to ensure that it did not hinder the right of workers to form and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes that the Government informs that, in order to simplify the registration of trade unions, a draft law proposing amendments to the LPA was developed and is expected to reduce the requirement provided in section 6 from 3,000 to 1,000 members. Considering that a minimum membership requirement of 1,000 members could still hinder the establishment of organizations, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to lower it to a reasonable level, both in the LPA and the Regulations on the Procedure for State Registration of Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations, and to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. Financial management. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 20 of the LPA, which provided that financial agencies carried out monitoring of the sources of finances and income of public associations, the quantity of the contributions they received and their payment of taxes, did not apply to trade unions, and requested the Government to indicate how it applied to employers' organizations. The Committee also requested the Government to indicate whether the obligations contained in section 8 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations (ensuring accessibility to information about the use of their property and funds; coordinating with the registration authority the holding of events, as well as the receipt of funds and property from foreign states, international and foreign organizations, or citizens of foreign states; informing the registration authority about the visits of their representatives to foreign countries; and submitting reports on their activities to the registration authority, state tax service authorities and state statistics authorities) were applicable to trade unions and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, on the basis of section 9 of the LTU, trade unions are independent in their activities, including financial activities, from state authorities, and are not accountable to or controlled by them. Taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how section 20 of the LPA and section 8 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations apply to employers' organizations.

Internal administration. The Committee also requested the Government to amend section 20 of the LPA, which allowed the Ministry of Justice and its agencies to demand from the governing body of a public association an accounting of the decisions taken, to send its representatives to participate in the activities carried out by the public association, and to receive explanations from members of the public association and other citizens concerning compliance with the public association's charter. Noting with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this regard, the Committee once again requests it to amend the legislation so as to ensure that public authorities are not allowed to interfere in the internal administration of trade unions and employers' organizations, and to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Right to strike. The Committee previously noted the allegation of the IUF that most strikes were prohibited and punishable under section 218 of the Criminal Code and section 201 of the Administrative Code. It noted with regret that sections 570 to 578 of the new Labour Code, which contained the procedure for the resolution of collective labour disputes, did not refer to the right to strike, and requested the Government to modify its legislation with a view to ensuring full recognition of the right to strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Parliament is currently conducting hearings on a bill to amend the Labour Code to allow the right to strike, and that the responsible ministries and departments are studying international practices in this regard. The Committee expects the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, all necessary measures towards the amendment of the Labour Code without further delay with a view to ensuring full recognition of the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard, and reminds it that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Article 4. Use made of the assets of dissolved organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that according to section 36 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations, the property of a public association which had been liquidated by a court decision could not be distributed among its members. The Committee noted the Government's indication that section 20 of the LTU provided that the charters of trade unions needed to contain a procedure for the management of their assets, and requested the Government to indicate how the assets of employers' organizations were distributed in the event of dissolution. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, according to paragraph 24 of the Regulation on the Procedure for Liquidation of Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations, if any property remains after fully satisfying the creditors' claims, the liquidation commission should either use it in the way specified in the court decision for the purposes of the dissolved organization or transfer it to other organizations performing similar activities.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegation of the IUF that it was impossible to establish independent trade unions in the country outside the traditional structure of the Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan (FPU), which was controlled by the State. It also requested the Government to provide statistical information on the number of registered employers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) there are 14 sectoral trade unions operating in the country with a total membership of 5.5 million people; (ii) a trade union of workers from a mining company, which has 70,000 members, operates independently of the FPU, although the two organizations have signed a cooperation agreement; (iii) most workers are aware that they can form trade union organizations and that membership is voluntary; and (iv) three organizations representing employers' interests have been established.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide comments on the 2012 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging that striking teachers were dismissed, striking sanitation workers were injured, and that the offices of the Yemeni Journalists' Syndicate were attacked. Noting with regret that the Government provides no reply to these observations, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

The Law on Trade Unions (2002)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether employees of high-level public authorities and Cabinets of Ministers, excluded by virtue of its section 4 from the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. While taking due note of the Government's indication that since 2011 union committees have been established in all ministerial offices, the Committee requests the Government to clarify if senior public officials also have the right to establish and join their own organizations.

The Committee had also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 2, 20 and 21 of the LTU so as to repeal specific reference to the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen (GFTUY) and thereby to allow workers and their organizations to establish and join the federation of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that it imposes no restrictions on trade union activity and that there are many unions representing workers' interests that do not operate within the framework of the GFTUY (for example, Trade Union of Doctors, Trade Union of Pharmacists, Trade Union of Engineers, and Lawyers' Trade Union). Noting that the specific reference to the GFTUY remains in the legislation, and that it could result in making it impossible to establish a second federation to represent workers' interests, the Committee once again requests that the Government take necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to delete this specific reference.

Article 3. The Committee had previously requested the Government to clarify whether section 40(b) of the LTU required an authorization from the higher level trade union for a strike to be organized, and if this was the case, to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 40(b) of the LTU there is a requirement to coordinate with the higher union body to organize a partial or general strike and that the Committee's previous comment on this legislative issue is being considered for the amendment of the Act. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to ensure the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

The draft Labour Code. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had expressed the hope that the draft Labour Code would be adopted in the near future and that the Government would take into account the Committee's comments to further amend or revise some of the provisions in the draft. The Committee notes the Government's indication that due to the armed conflict affecting the country since 2011 it has been unable to complete the amendments of the labour legislation. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code is not applicable to domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, but that their rights are guaranteed by law. Recalling that the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention are members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee requests the Government to indicate all legislative provisions that afford domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, the right to establish and join workers' organizations of their own choosing and without previous authorization.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code contains no provisions denying the right of workers' organizations to affiliate with international labour organizations. The Committee recalls that it had also requested the Government to:

- revise section 173(2) of the draft Labour Code so as to ensure that minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years may join trade unions without parental authorization;
- provide a list of essential services referred to in section 219(3) of the draft Code, which empowers the Minister to submit disputes to compulsory arbitration, which will be issued by the Council of Ministers once the Labour Code is promulgated;
- amend section 211 of the draft Labour Code which provides that strike notice must include an indication of the duration of a strike to ensure that a trade union can call a strike for an indeterminate period of time.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the current legislative reform will bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union interference. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to ensure that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions that guarantee the protection of workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in trade union activities are expressly provided for in the national legislation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again that protection against interference for trade union activities is provided under the Labour Code and that it will seek to provide further legal protection when amending the Act on Trade Unions (ATU) in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect, and to provide copies of the amended legislative texts aimed at ensuring full respect for the rights enshrined in the Convention, as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 4. Refusal to register a collective agreement on the basis of consideration of "economic interests of the country". The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that refusal to register a collective agreement is only possible due to a procedural flaw or because it does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation, and not on the basis of consideration of "the economic interests of the country". While the Committee had previously noted that the Government had adopted the Committee's proposal with regard to the amendment of the abovementioned section of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's new indication that it will study the Committee's views in this respect. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the legal provisions which guarantee the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Forced labour

Belize

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1983)

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 60(1) and (3) of the Harbours and Merchant Shipping Act, Chapter 234 (revised edition, 2000) provided for penalties of imprisonment for breaches of discipline such as desertion or absence without leave and disobedience, and that deserted seafarers may be forcibly returned on board ship. The Committee noted that by virtue of section 66 of the Prison Rules, Chapter 110, every convicted prisoner has the obligation to perform labour. The Committee recalled that the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour in relation to disciplinary offences should be limited to acts tending to endanger the ship or the life or health of persons. The Committee also pointed out that provisions under which seafarers may be forcibly returned on board ship to perform their duties are incompatible with this Convention. Therefore, it requested the Government to take measures to bring the Harbours and Merchant Shipping Act, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 60 of the Harbours and Merchant Shipping Act (Chapter 234) was repealed by the Act No. 11 of 2007.

Article 1(c) and (d). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee has referred to section 35 (2) of the Trade Unions Act, Chapter 300, according to which a person employed for the provision of a public service (electricity, water, railway, health, sanitary or medical service, communication or any other services declared by the Minister to be a public service), who wilfully or maliciously breaks his/her contractual obligations knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of his/her so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to cause injury or danger or grave inconvenience to the community, commits an offence and is liable to imprisonment.

The Committee observed that section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act provides for prison sanctions involving compulsory labour in relation to acts that will not only cause injury or danger to the community but, alternatively, will cause grave inconvenience to the community, and applies to a large range of public services that are not limited to services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee recalled in this respect that the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for having participated in strikes is incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Labour Advisory Board was reactivated to revise national legislation in order to bring it into conformity with international labour Conventions. Thus, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review section 35 (2) of the Trade Unions Act in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention and ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour could be imposed as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline that do not endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population, or for peaceful participation in strikes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect and encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burundi

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 27 August 2024, indicating in particular that there has never been any consultation within a legal framework to discuss the implementation of the ratified Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the observation of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 28 August 2021.

Article 1(1) and Article 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory community development work. For more than ten years, the Committee has referred to the question of community work in which the population participates under Act No. 1/016 of 20 April 2005 organizing municipal administration. With the objective of promoting the economic and social development of municipalities at both the individual level and on a collective and unified basis, municipalities may cooperate through a system of inter-municipality, and it is up to the municipal council to establish the community development programme, monitor its implementation and carry out the evaluation thereof. While noting the Government's indication that the law does not provide for penalties against persons who do not engage in community work, the Committee observes that this work is undertaken by the population without a text regulating the nature of the work, the terms under which the work may be required of the population, nor the manner in which the work is organized. The Committee also noted that the COSYBU referred to the fact that the population is not consulted on the nature of the work, which is decided upon unilaterally, and that the police prevent the population from moving during such work, by closing the streets. The Committee drew the Government's attention to the need to adopt regulations to Act No. 1/016 of 20 April 2005 organizing municipal administration, to provide a framework for participation in community work and its organization, and enshrine the voluntary nature of the work.

In its report, the Government reiterates that participation in community work is voluntary, and that it takes due note of the need to regulate Act No. 1/016. The Committee notes however that Basic Act No. 1/04 of 19 February 2020 amending certain provisions of Act No. 1/33 of 28 November 2014 organizing municipal administration, does not enshrine the voluntary character of the work. This Act reprises certain provisions of Act No. 1/016 of 20 April 2005, and specifies that municipalities must promote their economic and social development at both the individual level and on a collective and unified basis, and that it is up to the municipal council to monitor the implementation and carry out the evaluation of the municipal development programme. The Committee notes the new observations from the COSYBU according to which during the performance of community works circulation in the streets is free, although no information regarding the lifting of the street closures has been provided.

The Committee observes, from the information available on the Government's website, that certain community work consists of renewing bridges and roads. Furthermore, according to information available on the National Assembly website, community work that helps install municipal, regional and national infrastructure, boosts the national budget allocated to the country's socio-economic policies by the equivalent of more than 10 per cent each year, and appears to implicate the entire population. The Committee also notes that, in its annual report for 2020, the Independent National Human Rights Commission (CNIDH) refers to labour supplied by the population, which had been used for the construction of new classrooms. In light of the nature of the work undertaken, its scale and the importance that it holds for the country, the Committee again requests the Government to take the appropriate measures to regulate the ways in which the population participates in community work, and to enshrine the voluntary nature of this participation. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 27 August 2024, indicating in particular that there has never been any consultation within a legal framework to discuss the implementation of the ratified Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 28 August 2021.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously expressed its concern at the continued existence of the provisions of the laws (the Penal Code and the Press Act) which can be used to restrict the exercise of the freedom to express political or ideological views (orally, through the press or via other communication media) and which result in the imposition of penalties involving compulsory prison labour, inasmuch as section 25 of Act No. 1/026 of 22 September 2003 issuing the prison regulations provides that work remains compulsory for all prisoners. The Committee referred to sections 600 (distribution, circulation or display of documents that are damaging to the national interest, for propaganda purposes) and 601 of the Penal Code (receipt of advantages from abroad intended to conduct an activity or propaganda such as to undermine the loyalty of citizens towards the State). The Committee urged the Government to ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established system.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Penal Code was revised following the adoption of Act No. 1/27 of 29 December 2017, revising the Penal Code. The Government indicates that freedom of expression is guaranteed by the Constitution and also refers to provisions guaranteeing respect for the right to a fair trial which protect journalists and human rights defenders. The Committee notes that, in its observations, COSYBU states that the organization of public demonstrations and opposition movements is viewed negatively by the public authorities and that some labour movements exerting pressure with regard to legitimate demands have been stopped by the police and certain union leaders punished.

The Committee notes that section 25 of Act No. 1/24 of 14 December 2017 on the revision of the prison system reproduces the same provisions as in section 25 of Act No. 1/026 of 22 September 2003 on the prison system. Work therefore remains compulsory for all prisoners with a prison sentence. It further notes that the revised Penal Code of 2017 provides for imprisonment (consequently involving prison labour) for certain activities that may fall within the scope of Article 1(a) of the Convention, namely activities through which persons express ideas or views opposed to the established political, economic or social system:

- injurious allegations, likely to be prejudicial to the honour or reputation of a person or expose him or her to public scorn (section 264);
- insults (sections 265 and 268);
- acts against the decency of the head of State or an agent exercising public authority (sections 394 and 396);
- withdrawal, destruction, damage, replacement or insult of the flag or official insignia (section 398);
- distribution, circulation or public display of pamphlets, bulletins or flyers from abroad or inspired by foreign sources intended to harm the national interest, for propaganda purposes, as well as the possession of such documents with a view to such acts (section 623);
- the receipt, by a foreign person or organization, of donations, presents, loans or other advantages, intended or used to conduct or remunerate in Burundi an activity or propaganda such as to undermine the loyalty that the citizens owe to the State and institutions of Burundi (section 624);

- the contribution to the publication, dissemination or reproduction of fake news with a view to causing a breach of the peace, as well as the exhibition in public places or places open to the public of any objects or images likely to breach the peace (section 625).

Furthermore, the Committee notes that Act No. 1/19 of 14 September 2018, amending Act No. 1/15 of 9 May 2015, governing the press in Burundi, provides that failure to comply with its provisions is subject to criminal penalties. The Committee notes in this regard that, under section 52 of the Act, journalists must only publish information considered "balanced". Section 62 provides that the press shall treat information in a "balanced" manner and shall refrain from broadcasting or publishing content that is harmful to good moral standards and public order.

The Committee notes that, in its report of 13 August 2020, the United Nations Commission of Inquiry on Burundi indicates that political opponents were victims of serious human rights violations, in the context of the 2020 electoral process, which included arbitrary detentions, convictions with sentences of several years in prison and murders in reprisal for their political activities (A/HRC/45/32, paras 31, 32, 34, 35 and 58). The press is also monitored, and journalists and human rights defenders have been sentenced to imprisonment because of their work (paras 41 to 43). At its oral presentation on 11 March 2021 to the 46th session of the Human Rights Council, the Commission of Inquiry on Burundi noted that several human rights defenders, political opponents and journalists were sentenced to imprisonment for endangering the internal security of the State, rebellion and false accusations owing to their activities and criticism.

The Committee notes with regret that the 2017 Penal Code still contains provisions permitting punishment by imprisonment involving compulsory prison labour for activities associated with the expression of political views or views opposed to the established system. It also notes with deep concern the information relating to the judicial punishment of journalists and political opponents. The Committee once again recalls that under Article 1(a) of the Convention, persons, without recourse to violence, holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system must not be subject to punishments that would require them to work, including compulsory prison labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in law and practice, no person expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, including journalists, human rights defenders and political opponents, may not be liable or sentenced to imprisonment, which, under national legislation, involves compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to revise the above legislation to this end. It meanwhile requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the above sections of the Penal Code, particularly the number of prosecutions brought and penalties imposed, as well as any court decisions recognizing criminal responsibility and criminally sanctioning non-compliance with the provisions of Act No. 1/19 governing the press in Burundi.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chad

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the text of Ordinance No. 006/PR/2018 of 30 March 2018, on action against trafficking in persons in the Republic of Chad, which prescribes a prison sentence of between 4 and 30 years, plus a fine for any person convicted of trafficking in persons where certain aggravating circumstances are involved, which are defined as including sexual and labour exploitation, exploitation for begging, and exploitation for the performance of illicit activities. The Ordinance also includes measures for the protection, compensation and assistance of trafficking victims, including the provision of safe accommodation, access to medical and psychological care, and information on legal and judicial assistance. The Ordinance further provides for the setting up of a national commission against trafficking in persons, with one of its roles being the implementation of government anti-trafficking policies. The Committee observes in this regard that, according to information on the website of the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the National Commission against Human Trafficking (CNLTP) was established in 2021 and that the Government has also set up a multi-sectoral technical committee against human trafficking and smuggling of migrants.

The Committee notes that the United Nations Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, in its 2023 report, indicated that Chad had set up a national referral mechanism and standard operating procedures for dealing with trafficking victims. The Working Group also noted that more than a million refugees, asylum seekers and displaced persons were being hosted in the country. It further emphasized that mercenaries were reportedly involved in human rights violations, including trafficking in persons (A/HRC/WG.6/45/TCD/2). The Committee requests the Government to continue its action to combat trafficking in persons and requests it to send detailed information on the following points to enable an evaluation of the impact of this action:

- the activities carried out by the National Commission against Human Trafficking (CNLTP) and the multisectoral technical committee against human trafficking and smuggling of migrants;
- the number of victims who have been identified and have benefited from protection and assistance measures, and the measures taken to prevent trafficking among persons in situations of vulnerability, in particular refugees and displaced persons;
- the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out in human trafficking cases and the penalties imposed pursuant to the Ordinance of 30 March 2018 on action against trafficking in persons in the Republic of Chad;
- the punishments incurred by persons engaging in trafficking outside of the aggravating circumstances defined by the above-mentioned Ordinance.

Article 2(2)(a). Work in the general interest imposed in the context of compulsory military service. For many years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to bring into conformity with the Convention the provisions of section 32 of Act No. 012/PR/2006 of 10 March 2006 reorganizing the armed and security forces (formerly section 14 of Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91). Under these provisions, conscripts who are fit for service are classified into two categories, one of which remains at the disposal of the military authorities for two years and may be called upon to perform work in the general interest by order of the Government, going beyond the exceptions provided for by the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates in its report that a copy of the texts in force governing compulsory military service will be sent to the Committee, and is bound once again to note with regret the lack of information on any progress made to amend section 32 of the Act of 10 March 2006 reorganizing the armed and security forces. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps, in law and in practice, to limit the work carried out as part of compulsory military service to that of a purely military character, in accordance with Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons performing work in the general interest by order of the Government and on the nature of such work.

Article 2(2)(c). Work imposed by an administrative authority. The Committee previously urged the Government to repeal or amend section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 authorizing the Government to take administrative measures for relocation, internment or expulsion, under which the administrative authorities may impose work in the public interest on persons who are the subject of a ban on residence and have completed their sentence.

The Committee notes that the Government merely refers to the provisions of article 18 of the Constitution, under which the human person is inviolable and has the right to respect for his/her life and physical and psychological integrity, security and freedom. The Committee is therefore bound once again to note with regret the absence of information on the measures taken to bring the legislation into conformity with Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the provisions authorizing the imposition of work by an administrative authority on persons who have already served their sentence go beyond the exception provided for in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention relating to work exacted as a consequence of a court conviction. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures without delay to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 in order to eliminate the possibility for an administrative authority to impose work in the public interest outside the scope of any conviction handed down by a judicial authority. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons who have been required by an administrative authority to perform work in the public interest pursuant to the above-mentioned section 2.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

China

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2022)

The Committee welcomes the timely first report presented by the Government and the detailed information on the comprehensive legal and regulatory framework developed in the last few decades to suppress all forms of forced labour. It welcomes the significant efforts made at strengthening the national law and practice to combat various forms of forced labour in this period of time with the technical assistance intermittently provided by the Office since 2003. The Committee recognizes in particular the progress China has been making in that period towards the effective application of the Convention in preparing for its ratification, notably the adoption of the Labour Contracts Law (2007), which has formalized employment relationships reducing the vulnerability of workers to forced labour and has introduced specific provisions supporting the prevention or prohibition of forced labour; the abolition of "re-education through labour" (劳动教养) in 2013; the amendment of article 241, paragraph 6, of the Criminal Law in 2015 to criminalize any act of buying women and children who are victims of trafficking; the abolition of the "custody and education" (收容教育) system for sex workers and their clients in 2019; the gradual strengthening of penal sanctions for perpetrators of forced labour in the Criminal Law; the ratification of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in 2010; the determination to investigate administrative, civil and criminal liability associated with forced labour, combat cyber-facilitated trafficking in persons crimes and improving labour recruitment procedures in China's Action Plan against Human Trafficking (2021–2030) approved by the State Council in 2021; and the Administrative Provisions on Internships for Vocational School Students approved by nine ministries in 2021 and strengthened protection of students in section 50 of the Vocational Education Law (2023).

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Forced or compulsory labour of ethnic and religious minorities. The Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 18 September 2024, aspects of which have been the subject of its examination of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), in 2021 and 2022 – and that of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 2022 – as well as of its past and current examination of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122). In its latest observations, the ITUC alleges widespread and state-sponsored forced labour practices in both the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (Xinjiang) and the Tibet Autonomous Region (Tibet). According to the ITUC, two major systems of coercive work placement coexist in Xinjiang. Firstly, a system of arbitrary detention for Uyghurs and other ethnic and religious minorities suspected of endangering social stability and national security (the "Vocational Skills Training and Education Centers" or VSTEC system) which since 2020 has been replaced with institutionalized long-term detention in regular prisons following a formal legal process, notably of prominent intellectuals and continued forced placement of "released" detainees in labour-intensive industries such as textiles and electronics. Secondly, a system of transferring "surplus" rural workers from low-income traditional livelihoods pursuits into industries such as the processing of raw materials for the production of solar panels, batteries and other vehicle parts; seasonal agricultural work; and seafood processing. In recent years, based on an intensified campaign of investigating and monitoring the poverty status of millions of rural households, the authorities had raised targets leading to increased cross-provincial labour transfers. At the same time, local authorities had "actively guided" ethnic smallholder farmers to transfer their agricultural plots to large state-led cooperatives, thus "liberating" "surplus" rural workers for transfer into manufacturing or the service sector. The ITUC alleges that in the last decade, similar policies have been pursued in the Tibet Autonomous Region (Tibet). These policies would apply coercive methods such as military-style vocational training methods and the involvement of political cadres to have Tibetan nomads and farmers swap their traditional livelihoods for jobs providing measurable cash income in industries such as road construction, mining or food-processing, thereby diluting "the negative influence of religion". Placement incentives to local labour brokers and companies had facilitated a gradual increase in the labour transfer of rural workers to reach 630,000 workers in 2024. The Committee requests the Government to provide its detailed comments in reply to these observations from the ITUC.

The Committee notes the reports of various UN human rights mechanisms in recent years examining similar allegations while welcoming the ratification of Conventions Nos 29 and 105. In 2022, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) under its Early Warning and Urgent Action Procedure called for an immediate investigation of all allegations of human rights violations in Xinjiang, including those of forced labour. In 2023, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) expressed concern regarding the employment situation of Uyghur, Kazakh, Kyrgyz, Hui and Turkic-speaking peoples, as well as other ethnic minorities in China, particularly Muslim minorities, that provides numerous indications of coercive measures, including forced labour (E/C.12/CHN/CO/3). In 2023, the UN Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women expressed concern about reports that "labour transfer" and "vocational training" programmes in the Tibet Autonomous Region of China relegated Tibetan women to training in low-skilled jobs and disregarded their unique skills; and about reports of coercive employment measures against Uyghur women, including forced labour, in addition to sexual violence in vocational education and training centres for Uyghur women. Various mandates of the UN Human Rights Council have on several occasions received information that appear to support the allegations currently before the Committee.

The Committee further recalls its own previous comments and those of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in respect of the application by China of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). In these comments, it had expressed deep concern in respect of serious allegations of discrimination against ethnic and religious minorities in Xinjiang, based on policy guidelines expressed in numerous national and regional policy and regulatory documents. In particular, it had noted the broadly worded definition of extremism in the Xinjiang Regulation on Deradicalization (XRD), supported by indicators ("primary expressions of radicalization") that might otherwise be construed as matters of personal choice and legitimate religious practice. It had noted the extensive digital and personal surveillance apparatus in Xinjiang and the regulatory potential for administrative detention of suspected extremists. In its comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), it had further noted various indicators suggesting the presence of a "labour transfer policy" using measures severely restricting the free choice of employment based on the Government's references to significant numbers of "surplus rural labour" being "relocated" to industrial and agricultural employment sites located inside and outside Xinjiang under "structured conditions" of "labour management". In this context, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged, both in law and in practice, to amend national and regional regulatory provisions with a view to revising its deradicalization and employment policies in a manner that does not cause ethnic and religious minorities to fall victim to forced or compulsory labour.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of foreign migrants with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes a report of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR, 2024) highlighting several ILO forced labour indicators suggesting forced labour practices involving overseas workers from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), including in China. The report refers to DPRK nationals working overseas in a coercive and exploitative environment buttressed by the threat of repatriation if they do not perform well enough or commit infractions. Also in 2024, various mandates of the UN Human Rights Council requested further information about investigations into the situation of girls and women from the DPRK that have been trafficked for the purposes of forced marriage, sexual exploitation, forced labour and domestic servitude. The Committee recalls that ratifying States must suppress all forms of forced labour occurring within their territory or jurisdiction. The Committee requests the Government to undertake efforts to prevent foreign migrants from falling victim to abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour and to ensure their access to justice and remedies. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the number of identified victims of abusive practices among migrant workers, and on the number of investigations, prosecutions and penalties imposed on the perpetrators.

The Committee is raising further questions in a request addressed directly to the Government, noting in particular that full application of the Convention requires legal and regulatory provisions adopted at all administrative levels (i.e. national, provincial, municipal, prefectural, county and township levels) to be in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2022)

The Committee welcomes the timely first report presented by the Government and the detailed information on its legal and regulatory framework relevant to the abolition of forced labour in the circumstances envisaged in the Convention.

The Committee recalls its consistent practice of requesting governments to review legal provisions which enforce the prohibition of the expression of views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system not involving incitement to violence, civil strife or racial hatred, by means of forced or compulsory labour, whether such prohibition is imposed by law or by a discretionary administrative or judicial decision. It has particularly done so in respect of legal provisions aimed at establishing legitimate restrictions to the right to freedom of expression or assembly, but which are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to an interpretation and application that could be incompatible with the Convention. This is the case of provisions aimed at protecting public order by prohibiting the publication and dissemination of "fake news" or information that is "likely" to prejudice national interests or disturb the constitutional order, as well as provisions prohibiting acts of subversion or engagement in agitation or propaganda with a view to "weakening" the authority of the State. In these cases, the Committee requests the Governments concerned to review the wording of the provisions to limit their scope to effective and concrete threats to public order, or the use or threatened use of violence (see the Committee's 2023 general observation on the Convention).

The Committee further notes that the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in 2023 expressed its concern about reports that human rights defenders and lawyers working on human rights issues are systematically subjected to prosecution, reprisals and intimidation for their legitimate activities, including by being arbitrarily sentenced to long terms in prison or house arrest, tortured and subjected to enforced disappearance, and recommended that the Government refrain from persecuting and prosecuting human rights defenders and lawyers working on human rights issues for broadly defined offences (E/C.12/CHN/CO/3, paragraphs 15 and 16).

In this regard, the Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 18 September 2024, drawing attention to the recent convictions of labour activists and human rights defenders for the crime of subversion of state power in accordance with article 105(2) of the Criminal Law of China. According to the ITUC, on 14 June 2024, Mr Wang Jianbing (王建兵) was convicted by the Intermediate Court of Guangzhou Municipality and sentenced to imprisonment to three years and six months on charges of overseas anti-China networking, posting false statements on social media to slander the government and the socio-political system in China, and organizing private gatherings to discuss social topics in China. Ms Huang Xueqin (黃雪琴), a women's rights activist, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Both activists have appealed their sentences and remain in detention at Guangzhou No. 1 Detention Center, in the case of Mr Wang allegedly without access to adequate medical treatment. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in reply to these observations from the ITUC.

The Committee is raising further questions in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Colombia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 30 August 2024. It also notes the joint observations of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), received on 3 September 2024.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. National strategy. With reference to the measures adopted within the framework of the National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2020–24), the Government indicates that technical assistance is provided through the Ministry of the Interior to the local committees to combat trafficking in persons at both the departmental and municipal levels. There are active departmental committees with their local plans of action in force in 32 departments. It also reports the establishment of the REDPAT, a technological tool which facilitates the development of local plans of action at the departmental level.

The Committee notes the information that, between July 2021 and June 2024, a total of 635 awareness-raising sessions were undertaken, from which 236,458 persons benefited. Moreover, between 2021 and 2024, the Special Colombian Migration Administrative Unit (UAEMC) gave prevention talks on the crime of trafficking in persons to 119 potential victims of trafficking in the various migration control posts so that they are aware of their rights. In addition, 2,447 consultation and capacity-building activities for the prevention of trafficking in persons were carried out resulting in the increased awareness of 125,010 persons.

The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour has included a module in its virtual campus with a view to improving the understanding of trafficking in persons for forced labour, in which 669 public officials participated between 2021 and 2023. Moreover, efforts are made to disseminate information on trafficking in persons, sexual exploitation and the smuggling of migrants, with particular reference to the practices used, the related dangers and risks and the authorities that can be addressed through the national "It's a lie" (#EsoEsCuento) strategy, with a focus on public spaces related to means of transport, such as airports and bus stations.

The Committee also notes that both the ANDI and the CUT, the CTC and the CGT in their joint observations, while recognizing the implementation of the National Strategy and the existence of a legislative framework to combat trafficking in persons, report the persistence of the problem. With reference to the increase in the number of cases of trafficking, the ANDI indicates that over the past four years, the number of victims of trafficking in persons has increased by 154 per cent. The CUT, the CTC and the CGT also allege that the increase in the number of cases of trafficking in persons over recent years could be attributed to the ineffectiveness of the measures adopted by the Government, the under-reporting of cases of trafficking or the migration crisis confronting the country. In this regard, they call for measures focusing particularly on the Darién region, which is one of the areas with the highest rates of illegal migration.

The Committee further notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations in 2023, noted with concern the persistence of trafficking in persons, and particularly the trafficking of vulnerable persons, such as persons of African descent and indigenous persons (CCPR/C/COL/CO/8). Similarly, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, in her final report in 2024 on her visit to Colombia, expressed concern at the incidence of conflict-related trafficking, the presence of armed groups engaging in trafficking in persons and the presence of trafficking for forced labour by armed groups in the illegal mining sector, including in gold mining (A/HRC/56/60/Add.1).

The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue making all the necessary efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons within the framework of the National Strategy, especially in high-risk sectors and in areas where there are significant migration flows. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the evaluations of the implementation of the National Strategy undertaken by the Inter-institutional Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons; (ii) the results achieved; (iii) the difficulties encountered; and (iv) the action proposed by the Inter-institutional Committee with a view to the adoption of a new National Strategy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the coordination between the Inter-institutional Committee and local and municipal committees.

2. Protection of victims. With reference to the protection measures granted to victims, the Government indicates that in 2023 the Ministry of Labour referred 23 victims of trafficking in persons for support from the National Education Service (SENA), of whom 4 victims were registered for coverage by the Public Employment Agency, 11 victims received vocational guidance and 3 victims were given jobs. It adds that 10 persons gained access to the vocational training service and 13 to training courses, and that no victims requested entrepreneurship courses or the certification of vocational skills.

With regard to the strengthening of the identification system, the Government indicates that the Office of the Public Prosecutor (FGN) has drawn up a strategy to address the criminal activities of trafficking in persons and the smuggling of migrants and the associated or related crimes (Decision No. 0-0261 of 2022) and has established an investigation and coordination working group for its implementation. Moreover, Decision No. 205 of 2024 issues regulations covering the Protection Programme for Witnesses, Victims, Persons Involved in the Criminal Trial and Officials of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, adopting security and assistance measures for victims who are at risk as a result of a criminal trial, including physical protection, security plans, changes of housing and adaptation of housing, clothing, psychosocial support, education and work-related training. The Committee further notes that, between 2021 and 2024, the Special Colombian Migration Administrative Unit (UAEMC) provided assistance to 651 repatriated victims who required assistance or support, of whom 80 victims had suffered exploitation through forced labour, 58 per cent of whom were men and 42 per cent women.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the CUT, the CTC and the CGT, in their joint observations, consider that, in view of the low number of victims who request protection measures, it is important to take measures to reach out to victims of trafficking, such as broad awareness-raising campaigns with a view to disseminating information on the mechanisms available through the Government for the restoration of their rights.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, in her final report of 2024 on her visit to Colombia, expressed concern at the presence of armed groups and criminal organizations, which hinder prevention and protection measures, and emphasized the under-reporting of cases of trafficking in persons due to fear of and the risks of reprisals by armed groups and criminal organizations, and the limited presence of civilian authorities (A/HRC/56/60/Add.1). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to strengthen the capacities of the authorities so that they take proactive action, especially in areas where there is a high incidence of criminal groups, with a view to the identification of victims of trafficking in persons for labour and sexual exploitation, and to ensure that they are informed of their rights and are provided with comprehensive care and protection. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

3. Prosecution and application of criminal penalties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between 2014 and 2024 there were a total of 236 cases, of which 184 involved forced labour and 52 concerned slavery. Moreover, between 2020 and the first quarter of 2024, under sections 141B and 188A of the Penal Code, which criminalize trafficking in persons, there were 63 trials in 2020, 97 in 2021, 81 in 2022, 79 in 2023 and 80 in 2024. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CUT, the CTC and the CGT indicate in their joint observations that these figures do not include other forms of trafficking in persons which also involve forced labour, but which are classified differently, resulting in the under-reporting of these crimes. The Committee requests the Government to continue adopting measures for the appropriate identification and investigation of situations of trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation so that judicial action can be initiated against those presumed to be guilty. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions that are under way or have been finalized in relation to cases of trafficking in persons, and on the number of cases in which those responsible were convicted and the type of criminal penalties imposed.

Article 2(2)(a). Purely military character of work undertaken in the context of compulsory military service. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that the conception of compulsory military service in Colombia, regulated by Act No. 1861 of 2017, is broader than the exception envisaged in Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention, as conscripts may undertake various types of activities as part of their service that are not of a purely military character and are therefore not covered by the exception envisaged in the Convention. The Committee recalls that compulsory military service in Colombia is of 18 months in duration or 12 months for graduates of secondary education and consists of four stages (basic military training, training in productive work, application in practice and experience of the basic military training, and periods of rest). It may be carried out as a soldier or as an auxiliary of the police or the prison officers service of the National Penitentiary and Prison Institute (INPEC). Under section 16 of Act No. 1861 of 2017, at least 10 per cent of conscripts in each intake are engaged in "environmental" service, that is support activities for the protection of the environment and natural resources.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that between 2021 and 2024 there were a total of 132,259 conscripts engaged in compulsory military service, with a total of 7,245 conscripts who performed their military service in the INPEC; 1,594 conscripts who performed environmental service and a total of 67,788 police auxiliaries, of whom 10 per cent performed environmental service in parallel or in addition to the work covered by that service.

With regard to training in productive work, the Government indicates that the National Apprenticeship Service (SENA) concluded Agreement No. 001-2023 with the Ministry of National Defence and the national police with a view to strengthening skills. In this regard, the Committee notes the list of personnel provided by the Government, which includes the persons registered with the various training programmes in the SENA in 2021–24. The Committee also notes that conscripts who carried out their military service during the period 2012–24 in the national police did not participate in training programmes for productive work. The Government adds that there is an academic training programme of basic instruction for auxiliaries in the INPEC prison officers service, which is considered to be a basic vocational training course for reservists who wish to join the INPEC.

The Committee further notes that Act No. 2272 of 2022 created the social service for peace as an alternative to military service, and that it is regulated by Decree No. 1079 of 2024. The social service for peace is 12 months in duration and can be performed in various areas, such as digital numeracy, work with victims of conflict, support and implementation of the peace agreement, the promotion of public policies for peace and the protection of nature. The Public Service Administrative Department, in coordination with the Ministry of Equality and Equity, is responsible for implementing the processes of call-up, registration, selection and prioritization, entry, training, practice and completion of this social service.

The Committee notes that the CUT, the CTC and the CGT emphasize in their joint observations that both environmental service and the guard work undertaken for the INPEC are not purely military services and that, in the case of the INPEC, these duties can be carried out by specialized public officials. The unions consider that these types of work are not included in the exception envisaged in the Convention and suggest that the legislation should be amended so that work as prison guards and environmental service do not form part of compulsory military service in the strict sense.

The Committee, while understanding the social and environmental considerations underlying the diversification of the work performed within the context of the requirement to undertake compulsory military service, including social service for peace as an alternative to military service, recalls that the existence of a choice between the performance of purely military service and work that is not of a military character, does not in itself exclude the application of the Convention, as the choice between the different types of service is made within the context of the requirement to perform compulsory service, as set out in section 4 of Act No. 1861. In this regard, the Committee regrets to note that the Government did not take the opportunity offered by the adoption of Act No. 2384 of 2024 (amending some provisions of Act No. 1861) to adapt the legislation governing compulsory military service in light of the provisions of Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention.

The Committee once again emphasizes that the requirement to perform military service is not contrary to the Convention where conscripts exclusively undertake work or services of a purely military character. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the legislation governing compulsory military service in light of the provisions of Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention so as to ensure that the work carried out within the context of the requirement to perform military service is limited exclusively to activities or work of a purely military character. The Committee suggests that the Government, while taking measures to amend the legislation, should examine the possibility of taking urgent measures so that non-military duties, such as the work performed as INPEC auxiliaries, in the police, or environmental service or social service for peace, do not form part of the requirement to perform military service, although they are considered an alternative service.

Ecuador

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1954)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), received on 10 September 2024, in which the CEOSL alleges a lack of inspection and monitoring in areas prone to forced labour, especially in the rural sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in this regard.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. (i) National plan of action. With regard to the measures taken to implement the Plan of Action against trafficking in persons (2019–30), the Government reports that, through the coordination of the Interinstitutional Committee and the Ministry of Labour, a mechanism for detecting and referring cases of trafficking in persons for labour exploitation to labour inspectors has been created, which includes a guide on detecting victims, a procedural manual for detecting and referring cases of trafficking in persons and a set of instructions.

The Committee duly notes that the legislative and institutional framework to combat trafficking has been strengthened by the adoption of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Organic Act of 2023 and its implementing regulations (Decree No. 237 of 2024). The Act establishes that the implementation of public policies on trafficking in persons shall be the responsibility of the institutions forming the Interinstitutional Committee, which will be the highest coordinating body for the implementation, monitoring, follow-up and evaluation of the national policy. The Act also provides for the creation of a system for registering cases of trafficking in persons and the creation of at least three technical working groups by the Interinstitutional Committee (a technical working group on prevention and promotion of human rights, a technical working group on assistance and protection and a technical working group on investigation and prosecution), which must meet at least three times a year. The Committee also duly notes that the general regulations to the Act establish: (i) the obligation of the Interinstitutional Committee to prepare an annual report on compliance with the actions taken to implement the plans, programmes and projects; (ii) the obligation of the decentralized autonomous governments to implement plans, programmes and activities in coordination with the Interinstitutional Committee; and (iii) the development of an annual work plan to combat trafficking in persons under the auspices of the Interinstitutional Committee.

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking steps to effectively implement the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Organic Act of 2023, in particular the three working groups of the Interinstitutional Committee and the objectives of the Action Plan against trafficking in persons in Ecuador 2019–30. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the progress made and difficulties encountered; (ii) the follow-up, monitoring and evaluation of the national policy to combat trafficking in persons carried out by the Interinstitutional Committee; (iii) the registration of cases of trafficking in persons; and (iv) the way in which the decentralized autonomous governments coordinate their actions with the Interinstitutional Committee.

(ii) Protection and assistance for victims. The Committee notes that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Basic Act of 2023 grants victims of trafficking the right to: (i) a period of reflection; (ii) full protection and specialized assistance (section 27); (iii) temporary accommodation, when needed, for as long as necessary, irrespective of when the criminal investigations started (section 42); and (iv) full reparation and restitution (section 33). The Committee also notes that Decree No. 237 of 2024 establishes the scope of the assistance and protection measures, stating that they must be adopted from the moment a potential victim is detected or suspected until the full restitution of his or her rights (section 84). The Committee also notes the Protocol for inter-institutional action for the care and full protection of victims of trafficking in persons, which aims to effectively provide care and full protection for victims of trafficking in persons, through the development of differentiated and specific procedures for adults, adolescents and minors.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on the action taken by the Case coordination team for the protection of victims of trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants or on the protection and assistance provided to victims. The Committee notes that, according to information available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior, between 2019 and 2022, more than 475 victims of trafficking were registered, 63 per cent of whom were women between the ages of 19 and 29; and between January 2023 and July 2024, 154 victims of trafficking were identified, 84 per cent of whom were female and 16 per cent of whom were male. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2024, the United Nations Committee against Torture expressed its concern at the shortcomings in the identification of migrant persons who have been victims of trafficking, which hinders their proper referral to specialized services (CAT/C/ECU/CO/8).

The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue to take measures to provide the care and protection provided for in the legislation to victims of trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the action taken by the Case coordination team for the protection of victims of trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants and the number of victims of trafficking who have benefited from assistance and protection measures, specifying the type of assistance provided.

(iii) Prosecution and application of criminal penalties. In response to the Committee's request concerning investigations launched and judicial proceedings initiated in relation to the offence of trafficking in persons, the Government reports that no court decisions concerning forced labour have been recorded. The Committee recalls that, under Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced labour must be subject to really adequate and strictly enforced criminal penalties. Noting that according to the Ministry of the Interior, more than 475 victims of trafficking in persons were registered between 2019 and 2022, the Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the authorities responsible for identifying and investigating situations of trafficking in persons for both sexual exploitation and labour exploitation, as well as to prosecute the perpetrators. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of ongoing and concluded investigations and prosecutions in relation to cases of trafficking in persons (section 91 of the Basic Criminal Code of Ecuador) and the nature of the convictions handed down in relation to the offence.

2. Forced labour practices in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes the Human Rights Verification Report and the final report of the Ombuds' Office on the case of an abaca company (Furukawa case), according to which the living and working conditions verified in 17 camps in the provinces of Santo Domingo de los Tsáchilas and Los Ríos have given rise to situations of "serfdom", in families that are mostly Afro-Ecuadorian, affecting more than 200 people. The Ombuds' Office issued recommendations to various state institutions in order for them to take specific actions, within their remit, to prevent this situation and punish the perpetrators. In this regard, the Committee notes that according to information on the website of the Attorney-General's Office, following the report of the Ombuds' Office, the relevant investigations were initiated, as were criminal proceedings for trafficking in persons for labour exploitation, which are ongoing.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that in their observations of 2023 on the application of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), Public Services International (PSI), the United Front of Workers (FUT) and the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC) referred to this case, highlighting the lack of capacity of government institutions, as well as the lack of measures to prevent and eradicate forced labour. In response, the Government indicated that, by Memorandum No. MDT-ST-2024-0417-M of 23 April 2023, it had arranged for full on-site inspections to verify compliance with labour obligations.

The Committee also notes the Report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on extreme poverty and human rights of 2 April 2024, according to which there are cases of slavery-like conditions and bondage in the agricultural sector on abaca, sugar cane, maize, bean, avocado and fruit plantations, and haciendas (A/HRC/56/61/Add.2).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress of the ongoing criminal proceedings in relation to the case of the abaca company, indicating the penalties imposed, as well as the remedies granted to victims, and on the findings of the full inspections carried out in the plantations. Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate in the agricultural sector and, in particular, in areas where there are signs of exploitative labour practices that may constitute forced labour. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the training provided, the inspections carried out, the number of violations detected and the penalties imposed, as well as on the coordination with the prosecution service in the event that practices that could constitute forced labour are detected.

Ethiopia

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political or ideological views. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to the following sections of the Criminal Code, under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed by virtue of section 111(1) of the Code, in circumstances covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention:

- sections 482(2) and 484(2): punishment of ringleaders, organizers or commanders of forbidden societies, meetings and assemblies;
- section 486(a): inciting the public through false rumours; and
- section 487(a): making, uttering, distributing or crying out seditious or threatening remarks or displaying images of a seditious or threatening nature in any public place or meeting (seditious demonstrations).

The Committee also referred to the broad definition of terrorism and the reference to "encouragement of terrorism" under section 6 of Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652/2009, according to which any person who "publishes or causes the publication of a statement that is likely to be understood by some or all of the members of the public to whom it is published as a direct or indirect encouragement, or other inducement to them, to the commission or preparation or instigation of an act of terrorism is punishable with rigorous imprisonment from ten to 20 years". The Committee noted with deep concern reports on the broad application of the above provisions and on the detentions of, and prosecutions against, members of the opposition parties and human rights defenders. It therefore requested the Government to amend the above-mentioned provisions so as to ensure that, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention, persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, cannot be sanctioned to imprisonment involving compulsory labour on the basis of these provisions.

The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates in its report that the peaceful expression of views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system is a constitutionally respected right and nobody is subjected to forced or compulsory labour as a result of this. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the review of the above-mentioned provisions of the Criminal Code nor on their application in practice.

The Committee nevertheless observes from the Compilation Report of the Office of the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Human Rights, of March 2019, that in 2018, the Government of Ethiopia lifted the state of emergency decree and released a number of political detainees, bloggers and other individuals who had been detained following their participation in protests in recent years (A/HRC/WG.6/33/ETH/2, paragraph 33). The Committee also notes from the Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression of April 2020, that since 2018 the Government of Ethiopia has taken significant steps to identify and reform laws that were historically used to restrict freedom of expression. In this regard, the Committee notes that Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652 of 2009 was repealed and replaced by the Proclamation for the Prevention and Suppression of Terrorism Crimes No. 1178 of 2020. The Committee observes that the preamble to this Act recognizes the need to replace the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation of 2009, which had substantive and enforcement loopholes that had a negative effect on the rights and freedoms of citizens, with a law that adequately protects the rights and freedoms of individuals. The Committee welcomes the fact that new Proclamation No. 1176 of 2020 addresses some of its previous outstanding comments, for example by removing the reference to encouragement of terrorism under section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652/2009. Moreover, new Proclamation No. 1176 of 2020 under section 4 provides for an exception to terrorist acts, by stating that "notwithstanding the provisions of section 3(1)(e) (on terrorist acts that seriously obstruct public or social service), obstruction of public service caused by a strike and the obstruction related to the institution or profession of the strikers or exercising rights recognized by law such as demonstration, assembly and similar rights shall not be deemed to be a terrorist act". The Committee also takes due note of the adoption of Media Proclamation No. 1238/2021, which establishes that acts of defamation committed through the media shall result in civil liability and not criminal liability.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that both in law and practice no penalties involving compulsory labour can be imposed on persons for the peaceful expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. It therefore requests the Government to review the provisions of sections 482(2), 484(2), 486(a) and 487(a) of the Criminal Code to ensure compliance with the Convention by limiting the application of criminal sanctions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned sections of the Criminal Code, including copies of any court decisions, specifying the penalties imposed and describing the facts that led to the convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) at the 112th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2024) concerning the application by Guinea of the Convention, as well as the Government's report.

The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024, which reiterate the comments made during the discussion of the Conference Committee, and express the hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention, in accordance with the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee lastly notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, which call on the Guinean Government to take all necessary measures to give effect to the comments of the Committee and the conclusions of the Conference Committee, and invite it to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 112th Session, June 2024)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Just as the Committee has done in its previous comment, the Conference Committee requested the Government to take effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with representative employers' and workers' organizations, to ensure that no punishments involving compulsory labour, including as part of a prison sentence, may be imposed on persons who express certain political opinions or who peacefully express views ideologically opposed to the established system, including in the context of peaceful public demonstrations. It also requested the Government to revise the relevant provisions of the Criminal Code and the Act of 23 December 1991 establishing a charter of political parties (Organic Act No. 91/02/CTRN) with a view to limiting their scope of application, in order to meet the requirements of Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee recalls in this regard the provisions referred to:

- defamation and insult (sections 363 to 366 of the Criminal Code);
- organizing or participating in an undeclared or unauthorized demonstration or meeting on a public thoroughfare (sections 629, 630(1) and (2), 632(1), 634, 636(1) and (2) and 637 of the Criminal Code);
- insulting behaviour towards the Head of State and other related offences (sections 658 to 660, 662 to 665 and 739(1) of the Criminal Code);
- the act of founding, directing or administering a political party in violation of the law (sections 30 and 31 of the Charter of Political Parties).

The Committee also noted that by decision of 13 May 2022, the transitional Government prohibited any demonstration on public thoroughfares.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the process of adoption of a new Constitution is under way and will result in the revision of the Charter of Political Parties, and will ensure that the provisions of Article 1(a) of the Convention be taken into account. The Government also reiterates the information communicated to the Conference Committee that the provisions of the Criminal Code do not provide for prison sentences involving compulsory labour and that sentences handed down for violations of the above provisions are either prison sentences or fines not involving compulsory labour.

The Committee notes this statement with regret insofar as it observes that section 112 of Decree No. 2016/309/PRG/SGG, establishing the prison regulations, maintains compulsory labour for convicts, which was previously upheld in Decree No. 247/72/PREG of 20 September 1972 concerning the establishment and structure of the prison administration and Decree No. 624/PRG/81 of 13 November 1981 supplementing Decree No. 247/72/PREG. This section clearly provides that "convicts are assigned work". The Committee recalls that compulsory prison labour, even when used as a means of reintegration, as set out in section 112, has an impact on the observance of the Convention when it is imposed in one of the situations listed in Article 1 of the Convention.

With regard to the information requested by the Conference Committee concerning the penalties applied in practice under the above provisions, the prohibition against demonstrations on public thoroughfares and on the rulings handed down against Sékou Jamal Pendessa, Secretary-General of the Guinean Press Professionals' Union (SPPG), the Committee notes the Government's indication that the case is currently before the Supreme Court, following an appeal filed against the ruling of the Conakry Appeals Court of 28 February 2024. The Government states that no action may be taken while the verdict is still pending with the Supreme Court. The Government also indicates that no prison sentence involving compulsory labour has been imposed on any person in Guinea and that efforts will be made to transmit statistical information on the court decisions issued under these provisions.

The Committee recalls that during the discussion in the Conference Committee, several speakers, including the Worker members and the Employer members, denounced the repressive measures taken by the Government against civil liberties, including freedom of association and demonstration. The Committee notes that in its observations, the ITUC indicates that, against a backdrop of highly restricted civil liberties, with attacks against freedom of the press, there are concerns that these provisions are being implemented with the aim of silencing the opposition and the trade unions. The Committee also notes that United Nations reports refer to restrictions to civic and political space, and to arrests of human rights defenders. For example, in a press release on 10 October 2024 of the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), United Nations human rights experts raised the alarm concerning the arbitrary arrest and secret detention of two human rights defenders (see also document S/2024/51, Report of the Secretary-General on activities of the United Nations Office for West Africa and the Sahel (UNOWAS)).

The Committee expresses its concern at the absence of progress both at the legislative level and in practice towards the implementation of the recommendations made by the Conference Committee. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no punishments involving compulsory labour, including as part of a prison sentence, may be imposed on persons who express certain political opinions or who peacefully express views ideologically opposed to the established system, including in the context of peaceful public demonstrations. The Committee once again hopes that, within the framework of the reform undertaken by the Government, the above provisions of the Criminal Code and of the Act of 23 December 1991 establishing a charter of political parties will be reviewed taking account of the requirements of the Convention, either by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing penalties involving compulsory labour.

The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any convictions handed down under the above-mentioned provisions, and on the acts giving rise to the convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Iraq

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously referred to the need to address the significant level of sale and trafficking of persons, particularly women and girls for both sexual and labour exploitation in the country, by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) during the armed conflict. The Committee notes that despite the end of the ISIL conflict, Iraq remains a source and destination for sex trafficking and forced labour, affecting women, children and men (press release of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) Regional Office for the Middle East and North Africa (ROMENA) of 2020). According to the 2024 Iraq Crisis Response Plan by the International Organization for Migration, the humanitarian situation in Iraq continues to be characterized by general instability and protracted internal displacement, with over more than 1.14 million people still displaced as of August 2023. Internally displaced persons, especially the 600,480 in high-severity conditions, face significant protection risks, including exploitation and trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that pursuant to Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, a Central Committee on Combating Human Trafficking and Relevant Authorities (CCCHT) has been established to follow up on cases involving human trafficking. CCCHT officials will be empowered to conduct investigations and refer victims to safe homes for support. The Committee also notes the Government's information on the measures taken to prevent trafficking and protect victims, such as the identification of victims through the establishment of proactive measures and referral to safe homes; the setting up of a free 24-hour hotline for the notification of cases; and the establishment of a statistical database on registered cases, arrests, convictions and number of victims.

The Committee further notes that, according to press releases from the UNODC Regional Office for the Middle East and North Africa (ROMENA), of March and July 2023, the Government is taking measures in collaboration with the UNODC, under the Global Action against Trafficking in Persons and the Smuggling of Migrants project (GLO. ACT), such as a coaching session in March 2023 for police and judicial investigators (13 men and 2 women) on investigative techniques related to human trafficking; meetings were held in March and July 2023, composed of representatives of both Federal Iraq and the Kurdistan Region, which aimed at developing standard operating procedures for law enforcement authorities, including those of the Kurdistan Region. The standard operating procedures consist of eight chapters, including the international legislative framework, national legislative framework, identification of traffickers and victims of trafficking, investigation, victim protection and assistance, case management, and review mechanisms.

The Committee observes that the Government has not provided information on the number of cases of trafficking identified, prosecutions or sanctions imposed, and the protection afforded to victims of trafficking.

The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons for both labour and sexual exploitation. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken for the adoption of a national plan of action on combating trafficking in persons to ensure coordinated action encompassing prevention, protection and prosecution, as well as the measures taken by the Central Committee on Combating Human Trafficking and Relevant Authorities (CCCHT) in this regard; (ii) the investigations and prosecutions carried out by law enforcement bodies and the difficulties encountered in this area, as well as the specific penalties applied under Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012; (iii) the number of victims identified and the type of assistance provided to them; and (iv) the progress made in the adoption and implementation of the standard operating procedures.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Penal Code and the Public Order Act. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend certain provisions of the Penal Code and the Public Order Act, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee referred to the following provisions, the violation of which is punishable by imprisonment that involves compulsory labour according to Rule 86 of the Prison Rules:

- section 53 of the Penal Code, under which printing, publishing, distributing, offering for sale, etc. of any prohibited publication is punishable with imprisonment; according to section 52 any publication can be declared a prohibited publication if it is necessary in the interests of public order, public morality or public health;
- section 5 of the Public Order Act (Cap. 56), under which the police are entitled to control and direct the conduct of public gatherings and has extensive powers to stop or prevent the holding of public gatherings, meetings and processions (section 5(8)–(10)), contraventions being punishable with imprisonment (sections 5(11) and (17)).

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it is committed to ensuring the compatibility of sections 52 and 53 of the Penal Code as well as sections 5(8) to (10), (11) and (17) of the Public Order Act with the Convention and is therefore actively considering amending these provisions. The Government states that the amendments to the above-mentioned provisions shall ensure that the penalties involving compulsory labour will be strictly applicable to instances of violence or incitement to violence and that alternative sanctions, such as fines and other non-custodial measures, shall be introduced for non-violent actions related to the expression of views or participation in public gatherings.

The Committee also notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern about reports that the requirements in the Public Order Act to notify the police of all assemblies are being used in practice to deny authorization for peaceful assemblies as well as reports of arbitrary detention and arrest of human rights defenders for exercising their right to peaceful assembly (CCPR/C/KEN/CO/4).

The Committee takes due note of the Government's commitment to review its legislation and expresses the firm hope that it will take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that sections 52 and 53 of the Penal Code and sections 5(8) to (10), (11) and (17) of the Public Order Act, are reviewed in such a way as to ensure conformity with the Convention by either limiting their scope to acts of violence or incitement to violence or by replacing sanctions involving compulsory labour with other kinds of sanctions, such as fines. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any convictions handed down under the above-mentioned provisions of the Penal Code and the Public Order Act, indicating the sanctions applied and the facts that led to the convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Libya

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons, and arbitrary detention leading to the forced labour of migrants. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that the draft Law on combating human trafficking has been prepared. The Committee observes with regret, however, that the Government provides no information on any measures taken to protect migrant workers from forced labour, including trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes that the United Nations Independent Fact-Finding Mission on Libya, in its final report of 3 March 2023, expressed deep concern over the country's deteriorating human rights situation and found reasonable grounds to believe that, since 2016, migrants across Libya are victims of enslavement and sexual violence committed in connection with their arbitrary detention, including in cases of alleged trafficking and deprivation of liberty for ransom in connection with smuggling and trafficking. The Fact-Finding Mission found reasonable grounds to believe that migrants were enslaved in detention centres of the Directorate for Combating Illegal Migration – the official body under the Ministry of the Interior responsible for migrant detention centres across Libya – in Abu Salim, Zawiyah and Mabani, as well as in places of detention in al-Shwarif, Bani Walid, Sabratah, Zuwarah and Sabha, and that sexual slavery was committed in the trafficking hubs of Sabratah and Bani Walid. The report of the Fact-Finding Mission further reveals that the ongoing, systematic and widespread character of the documented crimes strongly suggests that personnel and officials of state institutions – more particularly the Directorate for Combating Illegal Migration, the Libyan Coast Guard and the Stability Support Apparatus (established in January 2021 by the Presidential Council and made up of an alliance of armed groups) – are not only implicated at all levels, but have colluded with traffickers and smugglers, who are reportedly connected to militia groups, in the context of the interception and deprivation of liberty of migrants. Among other things, trafficking, enslavement, forced labour and imprisonment have generated significant revenue for individuals, groups and state institutions (A/HRC/52/83).

Moreover, according to the May 2023 Report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on violence against women and girls, its causes and consequences, the climate of impunity for rape and other sexual violence against migrant and refugee women and girls, coupled with the lack of female guards or safeguards, including regular independent unannounced monitoring or compliance mechanisms, create an environment in which women and girls in detention are vulnerable to sexual violence and exploitation. They have no recourse to justice or redress and are subjected to systematic and large-scale violations of their fundamental human rights at the hands of armed groups, smugglers and traffickers, individuals and institutions affiliated with the State and within the community. Such violations include abduction for ransom, sexual exploitation, forced prostitution, trafficking in persons, forced labour and exploitation. Impunity for these acts continues to be rampant (A/HRC/53/36/Add.2).

Similarly, according to the report of the Secretary-General of 8 August 2024 on the United Nations Support Mission in Libya (UNSMIL), human rights violations against migrants and refugees, in particular those in detention, continued to occur, UNSMIL having received reports of migrants and asylum-seekers being arbitrarily arrested and detained in abhorrent conditions in Bi'r al-Ghanam, with guards engaging in persistent patterns of abuse, exploitation, forced labour, extortion, torture and other forms of ill-treatment, and of serious human rights abuses against migrants and refugees arbitrarily detained in a facility used for human trafficking near Sabha. The Secretary-General urged the Libyan authorities to adopt a comprehensive legal and policy framework on migration that prioritizes the human rights, dignity and well-being of migrants, refugees and asylum seekers, and addresses the issues of decriminalization of irregular entry, exit and stay, non-custodial measures as alternatives to detention and increased protection from arbitrary detention, forced labour, slavery and trafficking in persons (S/2024/598).

The Committee deplores the situation of migrants who are intercepted, arbitrarily detained and subjected to forced labour practices, including trafficking and sexual slavery, which continues to be of serious concern. Furthermore, the Committee is deeply concerned about the reports of complicity by the Libyan authorities. It considers that this constitutes a gross violation of the Convention, since the victims are forced to perform work for which they have not offered themselves voluntarily, under extremely harsh conditions, combined with ill-treatment which may include torture and death, as well as sexual exploitation.

While the Committee notes the complex institutional, political and security situation prevailing in the country, it urges the Government to take urgent and systematic action, commensurate in scope to the gravity of the problem, to combat and end the arbitrary detention and exploitation of migrants and prevent them from being subjected to forced labour, trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation. It further requests the Government to take immediate measures for the protection and assistance of victims, including through voluntary repatriation and reintegration.

Recalling that Article 25 of the Convention provides that the imposition of forced labour shall be punishable by penalties that are strictly enforced, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in-depth investigations are undertaken, alleged perpetrators are prosecuted, including complicit state officials and members of armed groups, and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions imposed on those who exact any form of forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and the results achieved.

Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to combat trafficking in persons and protect the victims. It urges the Government to ensure that the Bill on combating trafficking in persons is adopted shortly and requests the Government to provide a copy.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee deplores the grave and systematic human rights violations against migrants and refugees in Libya, who are arbitrarily detained in centres managed by both official and unofficial entities and where they are subjected to enslavement, forced labour and sexual slavery, with near-total impunity for the perpetrators. The Committee also expresses deep concern about the reports of complicity and active collusion by Libyan authorities with traffickers and militia groups, who are exploiting and profiting from these abuses. The Committee therefore considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 90 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Publications Act No. 76, 1972 and the Penal Code. The Committee recalls that it has been referring for a number of years to various provisions of the Publications Act No. 76, 1972, under which persons who express certain political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system may be punished with penalties of imprisonment. These provisions – sections 28, 29, 37, 38 and 43 – concern restrictions on publication, printing and dissemination of information and provide for the imposition of penalties of imprisonment involving the obligation to work by virtue of sections 20, 21, 23 and 24(1) of the Penal Code. According to these provisions of the Penal Code, sentences of life imprisonment or imprisonment are defined as the confinement of a person in a place designated for the purpose and the infliction of compulsory labour, in accordance with the Prison Regulations. In cases of sentences of detention for a period of one year or more, the judge may order that the detention be with compulsory work.

Moreover, the Committee takes note of the following provisions of the Penal Code under which certain acts are punishable with imprisonment or life imprisonment, involving compulsory labour:

- section 175 providing for life imprisonment for anyone who intentionally circulates news, information or rumours that are false, biased or provocative propaganda in times of war and are such as to cause harm to the military preparations for defence of the country, [sow terror among the people] or to undermine the resilience of the nation;
- section 178 providing for life imprisonment for any Libyan abroad who disseminates or reports rumours or information which are false, exaggerated, or provoke concern about the internal condition of the Libyan Arab Republic;
- section 195, amended by Law No. 5 of 2014, making punishable by imprisonment "making any statements that insult the 17 February Revolution";
- section 205 providing that anyone who publicly insults the Libyan nation, its national flag or State emblem, is liable to imprisonment;
- sections 206 and 207 providing that certain acts pertaining to unlawful organizations and formations and the promotion of any act against the system of the State are liable to penalties of death or life imprisonment;
- sections 220 and 221, providing that anyone who offends or insults the Government, the legislature, foreign Heads of State or accredited diplomatic representatives, is liable to imprisonment;
- sections 245 and 290, according to which anyone who insults a public official, judicial officer or judicial or administrative body or attacks, by any means of publicity, any religious faith, is liable to detention.

The Committee notes the Government's reiteration, in its report, that it will take the necessary measures to: (1) bring the Publications Act No. 76, 1972, into conformity with the Convention; and (2) take the Committee's comments into consideration to ensure that no penalty of imprisonment involving compulsory labour is imposed on persons who express political views or opinions opposed to the political system without resorting to violence.

The Committee notes that, according to the final report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission (FFM) on Libya of 3 March 2023, investigations underscored that Libyan authorities, notably the Internal Security Agency (a civil institution of the Libyan State with country-wide jurisdiction), are curtailing the rights to assembly, association, expression and belief to ensure obedience, entrench self-serving values and norms, and punish criticism against authorities and their leadership. Persons were detained for their criticism of the State and affiliated actors, and expression of divergent political, religious and social views and norms, including their opposition to patriarchy and sexism (A/HRC/52/83).

The Committee reiterates its deep concern at the current human rights situation in the country and recalls that restrictions on fundamental rights and liberties, including freedom of expression, have a bearing on the application of the Convention, if such measures are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory labour, as is the case in Libya when persons are convicted to a penalty of imprisonment or detention.

The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee hopes that, as reiterated by the Government in its report, it will take the necessary measures to bring the provisions of Publications Act No. 76 of 1972 into conformity with the Convention. Moreover, it requests the Government to provide specific information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provisions of the Penal Code, including the number of cases prosecuted, convictions brought, the facts that led to these convictions, and penalties applied.

Anti-Cybercrime Law, 2022. The Committee notes that certain provisions of the Anti-Cybercrime Law of 2022 criminalize behaviours with a prison sentence, which involves compulsory labour. These include section 37 concerning the use of the internet or any other electronic means to propagate or publish information or data threatening public security or peace, in either the State of Libya or any other State. Sections 9 and 39 subject the use, as well as the production, manufacturing, distribution, and so forth, of encryption technologies or tools, to the consent of the National Information and Security and Safety Authority (NISSA) – an administrative and technical governmental authority – which is otherwise punishable with imprisonment. Under sections 4 and 7 of the Law, the use of the internet and "new technologies" is only legitimate and lawful as long as "public order and morality" are respected, and NISSA is permitted to monitor all content published on the internet and any other technical platform and block websites if they are deemed to provoke "racial or regional slurs and extremist religious or denominational ideologies that undermine the security and stability of society".

The Committee notes that, in their communication of 31 March 2022, several United Nations experts expressed concern that the vague and broad nature of a number of the provisions of the Anti-Cybercrime Law would lead to their discriminate application against journalists, human rights defenders, activists and civil society actors who express dissenting views or publish, share or comment on information about the Government, its policies or actions, with such criticism being liable to interpretation as threatening to "public security or peace" or "public order or morality" (OL LBY 3/2022).

In this regard, the Committee notes, according to a press release of 25 March 2022 on the website of the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the concern expressed by the Spokesperson for the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights regarding the deepening crackdown on civil society in Libya, where arbitrary arrests and a campaign of vilification are having a chilling effect on human rights defenders, humanitarian workers and other civil society actors. Seven men, aged between 19 and 29, were arbitrarily arrested and detained by the Internal Security Agency in 2021 and 2022, for using social media to propagate atheism and contempt for religion. According to the FFM report, four of these men were sentenced to three-year imprisonment "with hard labour" and fined by a domestic court in Tripoli (A/HRC/52/83).

The Committee notes this information with concern, as these restrictions on the right to freedom of expression may be penalized through sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures, both in law and practice, to put an end to any violation of the Convention, by ensuring that no one who expresses political opinions, including dissenting opinions, or any views through the internet or any other technological tool, can be sentenced to imprisonment, under the terms of which compulsory labour is imposed. In this regard, the Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take measures to ensure that the provisions of the Anti-Cybercrime Law are amended in a way that will restrict their scope and prevent any interpretation in its application that could lead to the imposition of a penalty involving compulsory work on persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention. Compulsory labour for persons identified as "unproductive" or "anti-social". For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to repeal the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns, under which persons identified as "unproductive" or "anti-social" may be arrested and sent to re-education centres or assigned to productive sectors. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information from the Government concerning any measures adopted in this regard, in particular since the Government previously indicated that this directive was obsolete and that the re-education centres have been closed. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns, so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

Article 1(b) and (c). Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work for the purposes of economic development and as a means of labour discipline. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing the need to amend or repeal certain provisions of Act No. 5/82 of 9 June 1982 concerning the defence of the economy, amended by Act No. 9/87, which provide for the punishment of types of conduct which, directly or indirectly, jeopardize economic development, prevent the implementation of the national plan and are detrimental to the material or spiritual well-being of the population. Sections 10, 12, 13 and 14 of the Act prescribe prison sentences, which may involve compulsory labour, for repeated cases of failure to fulfil the economic obligations set forth in instructions, directives, procedures and so forth, governing the preparation or implementation of the national plan of the State. Section 7 of the Act provides for penalties for unintentional conduct (such as negligence, the lack of a sense of responsibility and so forth) resulting in the infringement of managerial or disciplinary standards. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information from the Government on any measures to repeal the above provisions which allow for the indirect imposition of labour for the purposes of economic development and for penalties involving an obligation to work as a means of labour discipline. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the provisions of Act No. 5/82 concerning the defence of the economy, amended by Act No. 9/87, which are contrary to the Convention.

Article 1(d). Penalties imposed for participation in strikes. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that despite the adoption of the new Labour Act (Act No. 13/2023 of 25 August 2023), no amendment has been made to the provisions of the previous Labour Act, now repealed (Act No. 23/2007) regarding the possibility of striking workers incurring criminal liability for failing to respect their obligation to ensure a minimum service (sections 206(1); 209(1); and 269(5) of Act No. 13/2023). The Committee recalls that no provision in the Criminal Code explicitly refers to penalties that may be faced by striking workers in cases where their criminal liability is incurred. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indication that the penal sanctions are applicable to striking workers in situations where the strike is considered illegal, that is, when the strike is called and held outside the framework of the law: in the event of a prohibited strike, violation of the procedures for notification of a strike, the use of violence against persons and the destruction of property, or non-respect of the minimum service putting human life and health at risk.

The Committee again draws the Government's attention in this regard that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, persons who participate peacefully in a strike, and therefore in the simple exercise of an essential right, cannot be liable to penal sanctions, and that therefore sentences of imprisonment must in no case be imposed. Such sanctions may only be envisaged where, in the course of a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious violations of criminal law have been committed, and these sanctions may only be imposed under the legislation reprimanding such acts, such as the Criminal Code. The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who participate peacefully in a strike can in no case incur criminal liability resulting in a sanction involving compulsory labour. It requests the Government to provide information on penalties imposed on striking workers on the grounds of their criminal liability for participation in an illegal strike, specifying the circumstances and the legal provisions applied. The Committee also refers to its comments regarding the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1955)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry (UMFCCI) and the Myanmar Seafarers Federation (MSF), sent with the report of the military authorities.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee recalls that it previously urged the military authorities to take steps to fully and effectively implement the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry, established by the Governing Body to examine the non-observance of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), in its August 2023 report. The Committee notes that the Governing Body discussed the follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry at its 350th, 351st and 352nd Sessions (March, June and November 2024). At its 352nd Session, the Governing Body noted with utmost concern the absence of any concrete action towards the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and expressed once again its profound concern over the conclusions set out in the Commission's report concerning the exaction of forced labour by the military authorities and called for immediate action to be taken to put an end, in law and in practice, to any forced recruitment into the military contrary to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), including the forced recruitment of children. The Governing Body also decided to place on the agenda of the 113th Session (2025) of the International Labour Conference an item concerning measures under article 33 of the Constitution to secure compliance by Myanmar with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and requested the Director-General to submit to the Governing Body at its 353rd Session (March 2025) a draft resolution concerning the measures to be taken under article 33 of the ILO Constitution in light of its discussion.

The Committee notes with deep concern the above information which shows a complete lack of progress in implementing the 2023 recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and a total denial by the military authorities of the gravity of the situation as regards the continued and widespread exaction of forced labour from the population in Myanmar.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Elimination of all forms of forced labour. 1. Legal framework. The Committee has previously pointed to non-compliance of national legislation with the Convention on the following issues:

- Article 359 of the Constitution, allowing for the exaction of forced labour in the context of "duties assigned thereupon by the Union in accord with the law in the interests of the people".
- Section 374 of the Penal Code and section 27A of the Ward or Village Tract Administration Law, establishing penalties for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour. The Committee recalls that these penalties, i.e. imprisonment up to one year or a fine, cannot be considered really adequate considering the seriousness of the crime in question.

The Committee therefore reiterates the importance of bringing the above provisions into conformity with the Convention, once the democratic institutions are restored, in order to ensure that the Constitution does not allow for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour and that the penalties for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour are really adequate and commensurate with the seriousness of the crime.

2. Systematic and widespread use of the population by the Myanmar military to perform a range of different types of work or service. In their report, the military authorities contend that the information included in the Committee's previous comments relied on false news and unsubstantiated allegations with documents from social media which have not been thoroughly verified and were based on the information from opposing organizations and terrorist groups, not reflecting the actual situation in Myanmar. They also state that Tatmadaw personnel who have committed a crime, including forced labour, were identified through investigations by higher officials and complaints from the victims and their family members and that necessary investigations were conducted and actions taken based on the findings of these inspections.

The Committee notes, however, the information in the report on the follow-up to the report of the Commission of Inquiry, submitted to the 352nd Session of the Governing Body (follow-up report) according to which the Confederation of Trade Unions of Myanmar (CTUM) reported that the practice of forced labour, particularly sentry duty, the use of child labour and the use of human shields in conflict zones, remains ongoing in Myanmar. The follow-up report also refers to sources from the United Nations (UN) indicating that they have received recent reports of an escalation of forced labour practices involving Rohingya internally displaced persons, including coercion by an infantry battalion of individuals to provide labour for road construction and the taking of approximately 100 Rohingya per day to work, without wages or support, on a road leading through areas previously vacated by local residents under military order.

The Committee further notes that the most recent evidence collected by UN bodies continues to support reports of forced recruitment practices. In his October 2024 report, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, refers to the stoking of tensions between ethnic Rakhine and Rohingya communities by the junta, notably through the conscription of thousands of young Rohingya men and their deployment to the frontlines (A/79/550). Moreover, the Special Rapporteur indicates that, like the junta, the Arakan Army has been accused of forcibly recruiting Rohingya men and deploying them in combat against junta forces, while other Rohingya militant groups, having aligned with junta forces, have forcibly recruited Rohingya men and boys in refugee camps in Bangladesh for deployment to the conflict in Rakhine State.

The Committee deeply deplores the continued imposition of forced labour practices in Myanmar, in particular the continued use of persons, including Rohingya internally displaced persons, to perform work and services, as well as continued forced recruitment practices, by both the military and other armed groups. The Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take all necessary measures to immediately put an end to all of these forced labour practices, in particular the forced recruitment of persons by armed forces and armed groups in Myanmar.

3. Forced labour of prisoners. The Committee notes the military authorities' statement, that the prison department does not force prisoners who have been sentenced to simple imprisonment to work, while those sentenced to rigorous imprisonment (section 53 of the Penal Code), work under conditions determined by the rules and procedures of the Prison Law. However, as noted in the follow-up report, while the military authorities claim that prison labour is monitored by the Myanmar National Human Rights Commission, no concrete information was provided regarding the recommendation of the Commission of Inquiry to cease the exaction of prison labour as a consequence of a criminal conviction imposed since 1 February 2021 through proceedings manifestly lacking independence, impartiality and due process guarantees.

The Committee observes that UN bodies also report unlawful imprisonment of perceived opponents of the military regime through arbitrary detention and manifestly unfair trials. Most recently the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, in its report of September 2024 (A/HRC/57/56) reveals that, within the reporting period, at least 1,648 individuals were convicted for opposing military power in Myanmar, where the lack of fair trial guarantees and the absence of independence and impartiality of the judiciary remained a serious concern (paragraph 24). Examples include the lack of instances of acquittals or successful appeals, frequent hearing postponements, defence counsel facing severe restrictions, chaotic proceedings and even, in some cases, the arrest, ill-treatment or torture of defence lawyers. The OHCHR received reports of political prisoners being subjected to forced or involuntary labour in prisons.

The Committee recalls that in order not to be considered as forced labour under the meaning of the Convention, compulsory prison labour can only be required from persons who have been found guilty of an offence and as a result of a due process of law. This implies respect for guarantees such as the presumption of innocence, equality before the law, regularity and impartiality of proceedings, independence and impartiality of courts, guarantees necessary for defence and a clear definition of the offence.

The Committee expresses its deep concern regarding the large number of persons convicted following legal procedures that manifestly lacked independence, impartiality, and due process of law, including those who oppose military power in Myanmar, and from whom compulsory labour is exacted in prison. In this regard, the Committee also refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 No. 87, regarding arrests, detention, threats and other restrictions on civil liberties. The Committee therefore once again strongly urges the military authorities to take all the necessary measures to immediately put an end to all forms of forced or compulsory labour identified above which constitute a grave violation of the Convention and to take all the necessary steps to fully and effectively implement the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry.

4. Forced labour imposed under mandatory conscription. The Committee takes note of the information contained in the follow-up report regarding the activation by the State Administration Council (SAC) of the People's Military Service Law, 2010, in February 2024. The Law requires every citizen to undergo military training and serve in the armed forces. The Committee observes that the duration of military service will be between 24 and 36 months for men aged 18 to 35 and women aged 18 to 27 and that it can be extended up to five years in emergency situations. The Committee notes in this regard that on 31 July 2024, the state of emergency declared by the military authorities was extended until 31 January 2025. The Committee notes that the military authorities have not submitted the final version of the conscription rules, as a standard operating procedure (SOP) for the recruitment process.

In this respect, the Committee recalls that, under Article 2(a) of the Convention, compulsory labour required as a part of mandatory military service is excluded from the definition of forced labour only if it is confined to work of a purely military character. This limitation on the scope of work that may be imposed on conscripts is intended to prevent their deployment for general public works. Furthermore, the conditions and duration of military service must be strictly confined to what is necessary to address the specific exigencies of preparing citizens for national defence of the country. The extension of the duration of the service to five years in emergency situations goes beyond the objective and scope of the exception.

In line with the above, the Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, any work imposed on conscripts under compulsory military service is limited to military training or work of a purely military character and that the duration and conditions of such work respond specifically to the exigencies of the situation.

5. Trafficking in persons. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the military authorities regarding the measures taken to combat trafficking in persons, in particular, the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons Law of 2022, the objectives of which include the comprehensive and effective prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons through identification and prosecution, and the rescue, repatriation, protection and rehabilitation of victims. The military authorities provide information regarding the various prevention and awareness-raising measures taken in application of this Law and the number of prosecutions and convictions in trafficking cases. For example, in 2023, nine cases of trafficking in persons were investigated, involving 18 victims, and resulting in the arrest and prosecution of 33 defendants and 11 convictions with sentences of imprisonment ranging from five to ten years.

The Committee further takes note of recent reports arising since early 2021 regarding online scam operations and their link to human trafficking in Southeast Asia, including Myanmar, and occurring in the context of wide-ranging digital criminal activity such as romance-investment scams, crypto fraud, money laundering and illegal gambling. According to a 2023 OHCHR report entitled "Online scam operations and trafficking into forced criminality in Southeast Asia: Recommendations for a Human Rights Response", organized crime actors have operated in Myanmar for years but the situation, especially related to trafficking into these scam operations, is reported to have worsened since the military coup in February 2021. According to the report, at least 120,000 people across Myanmar may be held in situations where they are forced to carry out online scams, with online scam centres operating in locations around the Thai border. The report further indicates that, for a variety of reasons, traffickers are easily able to fraudulently recruit people into criminal operations under the pretence of offering them real jobs. Many of those who have been able to leave a scam operation report that they were fraudulently recruited, deceived into believing that they were moving to legitimate jobs, and many are deprived of their liberty in compounds in which they are confined. Moreover, traffickers hold an ever-increasing debt over the migrants, who are told they have to pay before they can be freed, placing them in a situation of debt bondage.

The Committee expresses its concern over the situation of thousands of migrant workers who are lured to online scam centres under false pretences and find themselves trapped in conditions of forced labour, including debt bondage. The Committee urges the military authorities to take the necessary measures to ensure that cases of trafficking for labour exploitation, particularly in online scam centres, are effectively detected and investigated, and strengthen mechanisms to enable the initiation of effective prosecutions of suspected perpetrators, pursuant to the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons Law of 2022. It requests the military authorities to provide information on any developments in this regard, including statistical data on cases identified, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied, as well on the measures taken to provide victims with protection and assistance.

The Committee deeply deplores the significant escalation of the conflict in Myanmar and the far-reaching humanitarian crisis in the country since the 2021 military takeover which has severely impacted livelihoods, employment opportunities and labour migration and, as a result, placed workers, migrants and displaced persons in a situation of increased vulnerability to forced labour, including trafficking. Considering the military authorities' continued denial of the severity of the situation and the absence of democratic institutions as highlighted by the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee is deeply concerned by the plight of victims of forced labour who have no access to legitimate complaint and redress mechanisms that would allow them to be recognized as victims and assert their rights without fear of retaliation.

Given the urgency and the gravity of the situation, the Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take into account the Committee's requests detailed above and to implement without delay the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry calling for the cessation or reversal of any measures or actions that violate the Convention, and to provide information on all the steps taken in this regard.

Oman

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Legal framework to prevent migrant workers from being subjected to forced labour. The Committee recalls that Oman enforces a visa-sponsorship system under the Foreign Residence Act No. 16/95, as amended in 2020, which allows foreign workers to transfer their residency from one employer (sponsor) to another who is licensed to recruit workers. Transfers are permitted if there is proof that the worker's previous employment contract has ended or been terminated, and if the competent government agency approves the new contract with the second employer.

The Committee notes that a new Labour Law, promulgated by Royal Decree No. 53 of 2023, continues to allow all workers, including foreign nationals, to terminate indefinite employment contracts at any time with a legitimate reason and upon written notice (section 38). Section 41 outlines valid reasons for leaving without notice or before a fixed-term contract ends, such as employer fraud, non-payment of wages for over two months, physical assault by the employer, or serious workplace safety threats that the employer knew about but did not address. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the number of migrant workers who have changed employers and whose work permits have accordingly been transferred to a new employer: 63,113 (52,424 men and 10,689 women) in 2020; 94,002 (77,209 men and 16,793 women) in 2021; 129,169 (104,095 men and 25,074 women) in 2022; and 66,928 (55,075 men and 11,853 women) up to June 2023.

The Committee further notes sections 8 to 14 of the Labour Law, regulating the grievance and dispute resolution mechanisms. Section 9 requires that disputes over workers' rights first be submitted to the Ministry of Labour before going to court (in the case of an employer with more than 50 workers, a system of grievance must be put in place for complaints and grievances within the establishment (section 8)). If a settlement is not reached within 30 days, the Ministry must refer the dispute to the court within 7 days. All lawsuits related to the Labour Law, filed by workers or their beneficiaries, are exempt from judicial fees (section 13).

The Committee takes due note of these provisions and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to increase awareness and understanding among migrant workers of their rights so that they can easily access dispute resolution mechanisms, lodge complaints and seek redress in the event of violations of their rights or of abuses. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of disputes settled by the Ministry of Labour, of cases before the complaints mechanisms and before the courts, as well as more specific information on violations reported, the follow-up given to the complaints, the sanctions imposed and the remedies obtained.

Specific situation of migrant domestic workers. The Committee notes that the new Labour Law does not apply to domestic workers, as section 2 excludes workers governed by special laws. Consequently, migrant domestic workers are still regulated by Ministerial Decree No. 189/2004, which outlines special terms and conditions, and by the Standard Employment Contract of 2011. The Committee recalls that, under section 8 of Ministerial Decree No. 189/2004, either the employer or the domestic worker can terminate the employment contract with one month's notice. Additionally, the worker can end the contract in cases of abuse by the employer or his or her family. However, according to section 7(4), a migrant domestic worker can only work for another employer if the first employer (the "recruiter") agrees to release their sponsorship and completes the required procedures.

The Committee further notes that, although Ministerial Decree No. 189/2004 and the Standard Employment Contract include some regulations for domestic workers as regards the payment of wages, room and board, and medical care, other areas like working hours, rest days and annual vacation are not legally regulated. Additionally, the decree does not specify penalties or monitoring mechanisms to ensure its provisions are enforced but provides that disputes are handled by the department under the Ministry of Labour responsible for settling labour disputes, which must take all necessary measures to settle them amicably within two weeks. If no agreement is reached or if one party refuses to comply with a settlement, the above department must refer the case to the competent court within two weeks.

The Committee observes that, in its concluding observations of February 2024, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern about: (1) the fact that the Labour Law does not apply to migrant domestic workers and that the Standard Employment Contract does not offer adequate protection from the exploitation of migrant domestic workers; (2) the absence of specific legislation that addresses the lack of labour inspection mechanisms, the deportation of an "absconding" worker, and the absence of sanctions applied to employers for withholding the passports of domestic workers, although there is legislation prohibiting these practices; and (3) the absence of effective complaints mechanisms with adequate enforcement measures against employers engaging in abusive practices and the lack of a monitoring system to conduct workplace inspections (CEDAW/C/OMN/CO/4).

The Committee observes with concern that the lack of a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the labour relations of migrant domestic workers increases their risk of being victims of abusive practices and working conditions that may amount to the exaction of forced labour. In this regard, the Committee highlights the importance of taking effective action to ensure that the system of employment of migrant domestic workers does not place them in a situation of increased vulnerability, particularly when they are confronted with a lack of regulations on labour rights, as well as weak or absent enforcement and complaints mechanisms, and employment policies that result in, inter alia, difficulties in transferring employers, retention of passports, non-payment or underpayment of wages and deprivation of liberty.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to provide migrant domestic workers with adequate legal protection, with a focus on preventing the risks of becoming victims of forced labour, including by extending protection to domestic workers concerning the employment relationship, monitoring their conditions of employment and facilitating access to the complaints mechanisms in the country. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of migrant domestic workers who have been able to change employers; those who have terminated their employment at their own request; and those who have had recourse to the complaints mechanisms established under Ministerial Decree No. 189/2004, as well as more specific information on the violations reported, the follow-up given to the complaints, and the remedies obtained.

Article 25. Penalties for the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes that the new Penal Code, adopted in 2018, does not retain the provisions previously criminalizing forced prostitution and slavery, nor does it include any provision relating to the exaction of forced labour. Further, section 5 of the Labour Law prohibits employers from imposing any form of compulsory or forced labour on the worker, and violations of this section are punishable by imprisonment, from ten days to one month, and/or a fine.

The Committee recalls that Article 25 of the Convention requires that the exaction of forced labour be punishable as a penal offence, and that the penalties imposed by law be really adequate and strictly enforced. It draws the Government's attention to the fact that legislation that provides for a fine and/or a short term of imprisonment cannot be considered effective, given the seriousness of the offence and the dissuasive effect that the penalties should have. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that, in accordance with Article 25 of the Convention, persons who impose forced labour on migrant workers, including domestic workers, are prosecuted and sanctioned with dissuasive penalties, including by strengthening the capacity of law enforcement bodies to identify and proactively investigate situations of forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the judicial cases, penalties imposed and the legal provisions invoked to convict perpetrators.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sentences of imprisonment involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing certain political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference, in its report, to section 35 of the Basic Statute of the State, guaranteeing freedom of opinion and expression through speech, writing and all other means of expression, within the limits of the law. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information on the application of several provisions of the national legislation allowing for the imposition of penalties of imprisonment in circumstances covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee recalls in this regard that, under section 15 of the Prisons Act (Decree No. 48 of July 1998), penalties of imprisonment involve the obligation to work. These provisions include:

- the Law on publication and printing (Royal Decree No. 84/49 of 26 May 1984) prohibits publications that harm the Sultan or Royal family, threaten the regime, oppose Islamic principles (section 25), damage the national currency, or create confusion about the economy (section 27). It also forbids publishing information without prior authorization from the Ministry of Information (section 33). Violators face up to two years of imprisonment (section 36).
- sections 5 and 54 of the Law on private associations (Royal Decree No. 14/2000) prohibit the formation of associations or parties for political or religious purposes. Those participating in activities beyond the association's purpose face up to six months of imprisonment.
- section 61 of the Law on telecommunications (Royal Decree No. 30 of 12 March 2002) provides for penalties of imprisonment for up to one year (doubled for repeat offences) for anyone using telecommunications to send messages that disrupt public order, violate morals, or harm others with false information.
- section 19 of the Cybercrime Law (Royal Decree No 12/2011) provides for imprisonment of one month to three years for using information networks or technology facilities to produce, publish or distribute anything that might prejudice the public order or religious values.

The Committee further takes note of several provisions of the Penal Law, promulgated by Royal Decree No. 7/2018 (as amended by Royal Decree No. 68/2022) pursuant to which prison sentences may be imposed in circumstances covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention, in particular:

- section 97 provides for a penalty of imprisonment ranging from three to seven years for publicly or through publication appealing against the Sultan's rights or authority, or publicly defaming his wife, the Crown Prince, or his other children.

- section 115 provides for imprisonment of three months to three years for broadcasting or publishing false or malicious news, data, rumours or propaganda that undermines the State or weakens confidence in its financial market. The same applies to possessing, obtaining or transporting such materials.
- section 116 provides for imprisonment of three to ten years for anyone who founds, organizes, manages or funds an entity that opposes the political, economic, social or security principles of the State. Joining such entities is punishable by one to three years of imprisonment.
- sections 121 and 123 provide for a penalty of imprisonment of three months to one year for participating in a public gathering of ten or more people that threatens security. Those who call for or incite such gatherings face imprisonment of three to six months.
- section 248 makes punishable by imprisonment of six months to three years the act of publicly disregarding the respect due to the judiciary in a manner that challenges its integrity.

The Committee observes that the provisions above either prohibit certain activities through which citizens can express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established system, or are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to an interpretation and application that could be incompatible with Article 1(a), in so far as they could be used as a means of punishment for peacefully expressing political views through the imposition of sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour. In this regard, the Committee notes that when Royal Decree No. 7/2018 was enacted, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression expressed "serious concern that Royal Decree No. 7/2018 in its current form uses overly broad terms that lack sufficiently clear definitions and permits authorities to severely criminalize expression. This allows authorities unbound discretion to punish public expression of any kind, which could lead to the institutionalization of violations of the fundamental rights to freedom of expression for individuals, in particular activists, human rights defenders or journalists" (Special Rapporteur communication to the Government of Oman dated 26 March 2018).

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the above-mentioned legal provisions of the Law on publication and printing (Royal Decree No. 84/49 of 26 May 1984), Law on private associations (Royal Decree No. 14/2000), Law on telecommunications (Royal Decree No. 30 of 12 March 2002), Cybercrime Law (Royal Decree No. 12/2011) and Penal Law (Royal Decree No. 7/2018), are not used to punish persons who express political views or in a peaceful manner oppose the established political, social or economic system, with penalties involving compulsory labour. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the above-mentioned provisions in practice, including on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed, as well as on the facts that led to the imposition of convictions.

Pakistan

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) received on 31 August 2023.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Debt bondage. 1. Legislative framework. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Balochistan Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 2021 was enacted in 2021 while the Balochistan Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Rules, 2023 is under notification process. The Government also indicates that in February 2022, the Department of Labour conducted three consultative workshops on the Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 2021 for workers' and employers' organizations and Government officials; launched an awareness campaign in the brick kilns and other commercial establishments; and carried out training for 66 labour officials on the standard operation procedures for inspection of forced, bonded and child labour. Moreover, monthly inspections were carried out in workplaces and brick kilns. In addition, 51 workers were interviewed in person to examine the existence of any elements of forced and bonded labour at the workplace. However, no cases of forced or bonded labour were reported. During this process, 22 cases pertaining to payment of wages, minimum wages, working conditions and the social security scheme were reported, and a complaint was filed before the Director General of Labour Welfare/Chief Inspector of Factories/Chairman of the Minimum Wages Board for fixation of piece rate for making a brick.

With regard to the initiatives undertaken in the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province (KPK), the Committee notes the Government's information that the KPK Bonded Labour (Abolition) Rules 2021, have been notified. It also states that in 2022 the Department of Labour intensified its efforts to eliminate forced and bonded labour by conducting regular inspections at various brick kilns, in addition to complaint-based inspections. Accordingly, in 2022, 500 inspections were carried out and no violation was found. The Government further indicates that the Labour Welfare Department of the Islamabad Capital territory is strictly implementing the Bonded Labour Abolition Act of 1991 and no cases of forced and bonded labour have been reported.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its observation, the APFTU indicates that the Convention is not fully implemented on account of limited independent labour inspection machinery, which needs to be enhanced and strengthened.

The Committee notes from the report of the National Commission for Human Rights, The Issue of Bonded Labour in Pakistan, 2023, that bonded labour is a widespread socio-economic phenomenon in the country affecting more than 3 million people. It is especially prevalent in the rural and agricultural sectors, particularly in the brick kiln sector in Punjab and in the tenant farms of Sindh. According to this report, an estimated 700,000 persons could be in the grips of bonded labour systems across more than 4,000 brick kilns in Pakistan. Victims of bonded labour in the agricultural sector are tenant farmers who often work with their entire families under a share-cropping arrangement with their landlord, or peasant workers who are hired on a wage basis. Peasant workers of Sindh suffer conditions of serfdom or agricultural feudalism far greater than in any other province. This report also indicates that although the law criminalizes bonded labour, the Government and law enforcement agencies have failed to secure a single conviction of bonded labour perpetrators. The police and local administration have been unable or unwilling to implement bonded labour laws and adequately monitor and address instances of debt-bondage.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provincial laws abolishing bonded labour are strictly and effectively enforced and that adequate penalties are imposed on persons who involve others in bonded labour. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies, particularly the labour inspectors and the police, to detect and investigate bonded labour, including in the rural brick and agricultural sectors of the KPK, Punjab and Sindh, and to provide information on any results achieved or progress made in this regard. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of violations identified, indicating whether they come from complaints or regular inspections, as well as the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied to perpetrators of bonded labour for each of the three provinces.

2. Programmes of action. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that as part of the National Strategic Framework to Eliminate Child and Bonded Labour in Pakistan, several amendments were introduced to the bonded labour laws of Punjab and Balochistan. In the KPK, the Child and Bonded Labour Units are being reactivated and several training sessions on child labour and bonded labour were conducted for labour inspectors in 2022. The Committee notes from the report of the National Commission for Human Rights that, according to the 2022 report of the Hari Welfare Association (a non-governmental organization active in the promotion of peasant workers' rights), since 2013, more than 10,000 people have been released from the bonded labour system in the agricultural sector of Sindh. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent and eliminate bonded labour in the brick kilns and in the agricultural sector, as well as to adopt measures to rehabilitate and reintegrate into society the freed bonded labourers, including through the provision of skills development and other income-generating activities. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, indicating the number of bonded labourers withdrawn and rehabilitated.

3. District vigilance committees (DVCs). In response to its previous comments concerning the establishment of the DVCs and their functioning, the Committee notes the Government's information that in Balochistan, the DVCs will be established following the notification of the Balochistan Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Rules, 2023. However, currently the Provincial and District Anti-human Trafficking and Anti-bonded Labour Monitoring Committee is active and functional. The DVCs in the province of the KPK, one of the members of which is a district labour officer, carry out regular meetings during which the situation of bonded labour is assessed. Moreover, a Child and Bonded Labour Unit has been established in the Directorate of Labour and the recruitment process for its 12 positions is in the final stage. In Sindh, the Labour Department has undertaken initiatives to reconstitute and activate the DVCs and to provide training to ensure better implementation of the bonded labour laws. The Government further indicates that, in Punjab, 12 DVCs were provided training on the implementation of the national strategic framework to eliminate bonded labour with the support of the ILO in 2022; 412 DVC meetings were held; and 27 complaints of bonded labour were reported and amicably settled by the DVCs. The Committee notes however from the report of the National Commission for Human Rights that the provincial government has not yet notified the DVCs in all the districts of the province. According to the same report, the DVCs are practically non-functional even where notified, which is borne out by the fact that not a single case of bonded labour has been detected in any district. Those DVCs that have been notified indicate a poor track record in reporting and addressing cases of bonded labour. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to enhance and strengthen the capacity of the DVCs in all the provinces so as to enable them to effectively monitor the implementation of the bonded labour laws, identify and rescue bonded labourers, and provide them with appropriate assistance. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of cases of bonded labour identified and labourers withdrawn by the DVCs.

4. Data-gathering measures to ascertain the current nature and scope of bonded labour. The Committee notes with deep regret that, despite its repeated indication over several years, the Government has taken no concrete measures to undertake a statistical survey on bonded labour in the country. The Committee once again points out that accurate data are a vital step for developing the most effective policies to combat bonded labour and for providing a solid base for the assessment of the effectiveness of these policies. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that a survey to assess the full extent and prevalence of bonded labour in the country is undertaken in each province, particularly in Punjab and Sindh, in the near future, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations and other relevant partners. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard, as well as copies of the surveys, once completed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Article 1(a) and (e) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views and as a means of religious discrimination. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to sections 10–13 of the Security of Pakistan Act 1952; sections 5, 26, 28 and 30 of the Press, Newspaper, News Agencies and Books Registration Ordinance 2002; section 33(2) and (3) of the Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance 2002; and sections 8 and 9 of the Anti-Terrorism Act 1997, which provide for restrictions on the expression of political views and entail penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour in cases of violations. It also referred to sections 298B(1) and (2) and 298C of the Penal Code, inserted by the Anti-Islamic Activities of Quadiani Group, Lahori Group and Ahmadis (Prohibition and Punishment) Ordinance, No. XX of 1984, under which any person of these groups who uses Islamic epithets, nomenclature and titles is punishable with penalties of imprisonment (which involve compulsory labour) for a term of up to three years. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the above-mentioned provisions are amended so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee recalls that the Convention protects persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system by providing that they cannot be punished for these activities by penalties which involve compulsory labour (including compulsory prison labour), unless for situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 10–13 of the Security of Pakistan Act 1952; sections 5, 26, 28 and 30 of the Press, Newspaper, News Agencies and Books Registration Ordinance 2002; section 32(2) and (3) of the Electronic Media Regulatory Authority Ordinance 2002; sections 8 and 9 of the Anti-Terrorism Act 1997; and sections 298B(1) and (2) and 298C of the Penal Code, either by clearly restricting their scope to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing penalties involving compulsory labour. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provisions, specifying the number of prosecutions, convictions and the types of penalties imposed.

Article 1(c) and (d). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline and as a punishment for having participated in strikes. 1. Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 2001. For many years, the Committee has been referring to sections 204, 206, 207 and 208 of the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 2001, under which penalties of imprisonment, which may involve compulsory labour by virtue, inter alia, of section 3(26) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, may be imposed in respect of various breaches of labour discipline by seafarers (such as absence without leave, wilful disobedience, or combining with the crew in "neglect" of duty), and seafarers may be forcibly conveyed on board ship. The Committee observed that provisions of the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 2001 did not appear to be limited in scope to circumstances endangering the safety of the ship or the life or health of persons. Noting the Government's information that the Ministry of Maritime Affairs was in the process of amending the above-mentioned provisions of the Merchant Shipping Ordinance, the Committee hoped that such amendments would be adopted in the very near future.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information with regard to the amendments made to the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance. The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(c) of the Convention expressly prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline and that the punishment of breaches of labour discipline with sanctions of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour) is incompatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance that prescribe penalties for breaches of labour discipline, under which seafarers may be imprisoned or forcibly returned on board ship to perform duties are amended or repealed without delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

2. Essential Services (Maintenance) Act, 1952. For many years the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Pakistan Essential Services (Maintenance) Act, 1952, and corresponding provincial Acts, under which employees are prohibited from leaving their employment without the consent of the employer, as well as from striking, subject to penalties of imprisonment that involve compulsory labour. It urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Pakistan Essential Services (Maintenance) Act and corresponding provincial Acts, are amended in order to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(c) of the Convention prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline and that Article 1(d) of the Convention prohibits the imposition of sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. It also recalls that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of organizing or peacefully participating in strikes (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 315). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Pakistan Essential Services (Maintenance) Act, 1952, and corresponding provincial Acts, which impose penalties involving compulsory labour on employees for leaving their employment without the consent of the employer or for participating peacefully in strikes, are amended or repealed without delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

3. Industrial Relations Act, 2012. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that, according to sections 32(1)(e) and 67(3) of the Industrial Relations Act 2012, unfair labour practices of a worker, including to commence, continue, instigate or incite others to take part in, or expend or supply money or otherwise act in furtherance or support of, an illegal strike or a go-slow, is liable to imprisonment for up to thirty days, which may involve compulsory labour. Recalling that the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having peacefully participated in strikes is incompatible with the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above-mentioned provisions of the Industrial Relations Act into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the draft amendments to the Industrial Relations Act, 2012 which include amendments to sections 32(1)(e) and 67(3) have been prepared and are awaiting to be presented before the Parliament after consultation with relevant stakeholders. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendments to the Industrial Relations Act of 2012, which shall bring sections 32(1)(e) and 67(3) into conformity with the Convention, will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Institutional framework for action to combat forced labour. With regard to the results achieved in the implementation of the National Strategy for the Prevention of Forced Labour and the Plan of Action for the Prevention and Eradication of Forced Labour, the Government states in its report that through a broad tripartite consultation process led by the National Commission on Fundamental Labour Rights and the Prevention of Forced Labour (CONTRAFOR), it adopted the Second National Strategy for the Prevention of Forced Labour 2021–24, the general objective of which is to prevent and eradicate forced labour through a system of comprehensive support for victims. This National Strategy has five strategic axes: (i) institutional strengthening; (ii) prevention; (iii) detection; (iv) support for victims; and (v) punishment. The Government provides information on the process of the development of the Second National Strategy, as well as on the activities developed under the Second National Strategy between 2021 and 2023 and, in particular, on the training and awareness-raising workshops carried out, the drafting of proposals for inter-institutional cooperation, and the framework and specific inter-administrative agreements between the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) and other administrative bodies in order to prevent and eradicate forced labour, such as Specific Agreement No. 1 (31 May 2023) between the MTESS and the Paraguayan Association of Mennonite Communities (ACOMEPA).

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on the roles assigned to the institutions responsible for the implementation of the National Strategy, or on the regional plans or the annual report by the Monitoring and Evaluation Commission. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to combat forced labour and to provide detailed information on the measures taken under the strategic axes of the National Strategy and on the results of the monitoring and evaluation of its implementation. The Committee also hopes that regional plans will be adopted to ensure coordinated and systematic action to combat forced labour at the national and regional levels and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

2. Exploitation of the labour of indigenous workers in the Chaco. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information on the action taken by the labour inspectorate and cooperation between the Ministry of Labour, the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute (INDI), the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the police for the investigation of cases of forced labour in the Chaco and the protection of victims. In response, the Government reports that thorough inspections in livestock undertakings in the departments of Boquerón and Alto Paraguay have been established by MTESS Resolution No. 1212/2021, and that efforts have been intensified to facilitate the access of indigenous workers to administrative and judicial procedures to report possible cases of forced labour. In this regard, it indicates that there are Ombuds Offices in the departments of Alto Paraguay (Fuerte Olimpo and Puerto Casado), Presidente Hayes (Villa Hayes) and Boquerón (Filadelfia), which provide free assistance and representation to parties interested in initiating proceedings or filing a complaint with the respective jurisdictional authorities. It adds that the Regional Office of Indigenous Peoples frequently participates in the tripartite meetings of CONTRAFOR that are held in the city of Asunción.

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided for 2021, labour inspections were conducted in 13 undertakings in the western region (Chaco Paraguayo), 2 of which were conducted in the livestock sector. Of the 13 inspections conducted, 8 were closed, while the remaining 5 identified labour legislation violations, affecting more than 170 workers, and for which violation reports were prepared to initiate the administrative summary proceeding. The Committee also notes the report of the Office of the Labour Department for Indigenous Peoples of Boquerón (of 23 March 2023), which provides statistical information on the persons counselled, the settlements made, the mediation hearings held and the agreements signed by the parties between 2020 and 2022. The Government indicates that the indigenous communities have participated and that awareness-raising activities, such as meetings and workshops, have been carried out, which have allowed some cases of non-compliance to be resolved and others to be escalated to judicial bodies.

The Committee also notes that under the Okakuaa project, awareness-raising activities on labour rights have been carried out, with a special focus on indigenous populations in the department of Boquerón, and that under the ATLAS Project (2019–22), awareness-raising and training has been held for labour inspectors and materials for the training and dissemination of labour rights have been developed.

While noting these measures, the Committee notes the lack of information on the number of inspections undertaken specifically in the Chaco region, the complaints received, and the administrative and criminal penalties imposed. In this regard, the Committee observes that, while examining the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), in June 2024, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards noted with concern various issues relating to the effective functioning of the labour inspection system in the country, including a lack of human and material resources, the instability of employment of labour inspectors, and the absence of means to function effectively and independently through the unrestricted access of labour inspectors to workplaces without prior authorization.

The Committee urges the Government to continue implementing measures to facilitate the access of indigenous workers to administrative and judicial procedures to report situations of forced labour, taking into account their geographical location, linguistic and cultural situation, and educational level. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to continue intensifying its efforts to ensure the presence of labour inspectors in the most remote areas of the Chaco, where indigenous workers are present, and to provide information on the frequency with which inspections are carried out, the current number of inspectors covering this region, the violations detected, as well as the administrative and criminal penalties imposed. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the MTESS, the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the police coordinate the detection and investigation of cases of exploitation that could constitute forced labour, as well as the coordination between the MTESS and INDI to address the problems affecting the indigenous peoples of the Chaco.

Article 2(2)(c). Obligation to work imposed on non-convicted detainees. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it emphasized the need to amend the Act on the prison system (Act No. 210 of 1970), under the terms of which prison labour shall be compulsory for persons subject to security measures in a prison (section 10 in conjunction with section 39). The Government reports that the Ministry of Justice, by Note MJ/VPC/061/22 of 2022, issued a legal concept according to which Act No. 5162 of 2014 implicitly or tacitly repeals section 39 of Act No. 210 of 1970, concluding that there are no legal impediments to continuing the process of express repeal and that the formalization of the repeal is only to make it explicitly clear. The Committee urges the Government to continue taking the necessary measures for the prompt approval of the draft legislation repealing section 39 of Act No. 210 of 1970 on the prison system, so that, in accordance with Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention, compulsory labour can only be imposed on persons deprived of their liberty who have been sentenced by a court decision, which is not the case of persons subject to security measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Peru

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2021)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Peru of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Protocol, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 1 September 2023.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. 1. Action to combat forced labour. (i) National plan against forced labour. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the measures taken under the Third National Plan to combat forced labour 2019–22 (PNLCTF-III). It notes in particular that: (i) the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion (Ministry of Labour) worked with the regional labour departments and directorates to coordinate actions on forced labour in regional or local plans; (ii) teams were formed and trained to raise public awareness of forced labour in ten regions; (iii) training activities were implemented for the general public and for public servants on how to identify and report possible cases of forced labour; and (iv) progress was made on formulating a proposal for a national multi-sectoral policy for the prevention and elimination of forced labour with the assistance of the ILO.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption in 2021 of Act No. 31330, declaring the implementation of public policies for the prevention and elimination of forced labour, and the setting up of the National Observatory on Forced Labour, to be of public interest, as well as its regulations (Supreme Decree No. 005-2022-TR). Under section 9 of these regulations, the goal of the Observatory is to generate, compile, consolidate, systematize, analyse and disseminate information held by public bodies on forced labour, and thereby to strengthen public policies that help to eliminate it. The Observatory's activities include the development of forced labour indicators, the production of statistics on forced labour, and the provision of technical and methodological advice on forced labour to national and regional bodies. The Government also indicates that, since May 2022, steps have been taken to make the Observatory operational, including carrying out an institutional analysis and formulating an implementation strategy and training plan.

The Committee also notes that the CATP in its observations points out that, despite the fact that Act No. 31330 provides that the Ministry of Labour shall send an annual report to Congress regarding progress on the implementation of public policies to prevent and eliminate forced labour, this report has not been made available to the trade unions belonging to the National Council for Labour and Employment Promotion. Nor have the unions been able to access information on the status of activation of the Observatory, the results of the surveys on the prevalence of forced labour, and the evaluation of the PNLCTF. The CATP also refers to the limited operational capacity of the public institutions responsible for the elimination of forced labour.

The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat forced labour by strengthening the capacity of institutions that have responsibility in this area, and by the adoption, in consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations, of the national multi-sectoral policy for the prevention and elimination of forced labour. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the National Observatory on Forced Labour and the results of the evaluations carried out by the National Committee on Combating Forced Labour (CNLCTF). Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on the scale of forced labour in the different regions of the country.

(ii) Strengthening of labour inspection. With regard to the capacity of the labour inspectorate to identify situations of forced labour, the Committee recalls the existence of the Specialist Inspection Group on Forced and Child Labour (GEIT-TFI), as well as a Protocol of Action against forced labour adopted by the National Labour Inspection Supervisory Authority (SUNAFIL). The Committee notes that the Government indicates in general terms that between 2022 and 2023 a total of 110 inspection orders were issued, but does not specify the number of cases in which possible situations of forced labour were identified. The Committee also notes the CATP's observation that in 2021 a total of 47 inspections were carried out in the area of forced labour (11 as a result of complaints and 36 as SUNAFIL operations) and that, of the 47 inspections, 8 resulted in violation reports, but it is not known whether the fines imposed were actually paid or whether these cases were referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office to initiate the corresponding criminal proceedings.

The Committee recalls that labour inspection is an essential link in the fight against forced labour, since it not only enables workers to be released from the situations of forced labour in which they find themselves but also provides evidence to be gathered that will serve to initiate civil and criminal prosecutions against the perpetrators of these practices. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures to strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors to identify situations of forced labour, particularly for the Specialist Inspection Group on Forced and Child Labour (GEIT-TFI) in areas and economic activities where forced labour is present. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on violations involving forced labour which have been detected and also on other very serious labour violations which can be indicators of forced labour. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the number of cases of forced labour identified by the labour inspectorate which have been referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings.

(iii) Effective application of penalties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that actions were carried out in the context of the PNLCTF-III to train judicial officials in the investigation and prosecution of the crime of forced labour, and the Protocol of the Public Prosecutor's Office for prosecution action in the prevention, investigation and punishment of cases of forced labour was adopted. The Committee also notes that between 2019 and 2021 8 criminal proceedings for forced labour (section 129-O of the Penal Code) were carried out, of which 4 cases resulted in convictions (in 1 case the defendant was acquitted and in the other 3 cases a custodial sentence was imposed); 18 criminal proceedings for the offence of sexual exploitation (section 129-C of the Penal Code), 9 of which resulted in convictions (in 3 cases the defendant was acquitted and in the other 6 cases a custodial sentence was imposed); and 2 criminal proceedings for the offence of slavery and other forms of exploitation (section 129-Ñ of the Penal Code), which are at the investigation stage.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CATP indicates that the number of cases of forced labour reported is very low, which could be due to lack of knowledge of the problem and of the concept of forced labour, or of which authorities forced labour should be reported to. The CATP considers that training and awareness-raising strategies should focus on population groups most vulnerable to forced labour, mainly in the regions most at risk, and on officials who come into direct, ongoing contact with these groups.

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking steps to train judicial officials to enable proactive identification and investigation of situations of forced labour; to inform the public, especially in areas with a high prevalence of forced labour, regarding the means that exist to report situations of forced labour; and to facilitate access to such mechanisms. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the judicial proceedings under sections 129-O (forced labour), 129-C (sexual exploitation) and 129-Ñ (slavery and other forms of exploitation) of the Penal Code, and also on the difficulties encountered by judicial officials in conducting investigations in relation to these crimes.

2. Forced labour practices connected with illegal logging and illegal mining. In its previous comments under the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), the Committee noted the allegations relating to the practice of forced labour in indigenous communities in Peruvian Amazonia, particularly the Ucayali region, linked to illegal timber extraction under a system known as habilitación. This system involves timber dealers from outside the community providing indigenous workers with work and subsistence items, establishing debts that the workers are required to pay by providing timber.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, within the framework of the PNLCTF-III, case studies were examined in the regions of Cusco, Loreto, Madre de Dios, Puno and Ucayali, revealing the presence of forced labour in activities linked to illegal timber extraction and gold mining. According to the records of the National Committee on Combating Forced Labour (CNLCTF), training and awareness-raising activities have been carried out for public servants and the general public in the regions of Junín, Lima Provincias, Madre de Dios, Moquegua, Pasco, Piura, Puno, San Martín, Tacna, Tumbes and Ucayali, with 79 participants (record of ordinary session No. 133 of January 2024). The Committee further notes that the Government, the Regional Directorate of Labour and Employment Promotion of Ucayali (DRTPEU) and the ILO held a workshop on forced labour and safety and health in work areas, which addressed representatives of indigenous communities in Ucayali.

The Committee also notes that, according to the information provided by the Government in the report on Convention No. 169, none of the specialist prosecution offices (dealing with environmental matters and cases of organized crime) in the Ucayali special district identified complaints relating to forced labour (the habilitación system). The Government indicates that SUNAFIL, the Ministry of Labour and the regional government have coordinated actions aimed at establishing a regional committee in Ucayali for tackling the problem of forced labour. In this regard, the Committee notes that while the trade unions (CGTP, CUT and CATP) indicate in their observations on Convention No. 169 that the proposal to set up a regional committee is to be recommended, they emphasize that this should not only be a coordination forum for the authorities and they highlight the lack of information on the results achieved by the national plan and strategy for combating forced labour.

The Committee also notes that, according to surveys of members of the regional round tables, networks and committees against trafficking in persons (the results of which are included in the National Plan up to 2030 against trafficking in persons and related forms of exploitation), 41 per cent of those surveyed consider that scrutiny of illicit activities such as illegal logging and illegal mining is non-existent in both urban and rural areas, and 29 per cent consider it to be ineffective. The Committee also notes that 25 per cent of respondents consider that inspection of spaces and activities in areas where the risk of labour and sexual exploitation is prevalent is non-existent in rural areas; 39 per cent consider that it occurs occasionally in rural areas; and 28 per cent consider that these preventive actions are never carried out anywhere. The Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 2023, noted that forced labour persists, especially in the extractive industries, including in areas with significant mining activities and in informal and small-scale mining (CCPR/C/PER/CO/6).

The Committee notes with concern that challenges remain regarding the capacity of the competent authorities to monitor and prevent forced labour practices associated with illegal logging and illegal mining in remote regions. The Committee urges the Government to take steps without delay to prevent, investigate and punish forced labour practices associated with the illicit extraction of resources (such as illegal logging and gold mining), especially in indigenous communities. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the action taken to establish the Ucayali regional committee for combating forced labour. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information, once this committee has been set up, on the actions taken to reinforce the presence of government agencies in the Ucayali region, to facilitate access for indigenous workers to administrative and judicial mechanisms to report situations of forced labour and receive adequate protection, and to investigate cases of forced labour. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on any evaluations by the National Committee on Combating Forced Labour (CNLCTF) of measures taken, under the Third National Plan to combat forced labour 2019–22 (PNLCTF-III), in remote regions such as Ucayali and Madre de Dios.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Impact of the obligation to work for persons sentenced to a custodial sentence on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the adoption in February 2021 of the Supreme Decree approving the single consolidated text of the Penal Enforcement Code (Supreme Decree No. 003-2021-JUS). Section 73 of this Decree establishes that work is a right and a duty for inmates. The Committee also notes that section 104 of the regulations implementing the Penal Enforcement Code (Supreme Decree No. 015-2003-JUS) provides that work in prisons is compulsory for convicted prisoners, while it is voluntary for inmates awaiting trial. The Committee further recalls that under sections 31 and 32 of the Penal Code, taken together, the penalty of community service can be applied as an autonomous penalty when it is specifically designated for a crime, or as an alternative penalty to a custodial sentence. Hence, the Committee observes that the current criminal legislation establishes the obligation to work for persons serving a custodial sentence, as well as for those who have been sentenced to community service. The Committee emphasizes that penalties involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention when applied in one of the scenarios established in Article 1 of the Convention.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of community service as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to section 132 (defamation) and section 200(3) (extortion) of the Penal Code, which establish penalties of imprisonment (involving the obligation to work) or performance of community service for offences which, as a result of being worded in very general terms, could have an impact on Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that there is nothing in the national criminal legislation that criminalizes the expression of political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system. In response to the Committee's request for information on the application of the above-mentioned provisions, the Government provides information on the number of proceedings instituted and rulings handed down for the crime of extortion (section 200(3) of the Penal Code) between 2018 and 2022. During this period, 58 convictions were handed down for this offence. The Government also refers to the ruling of the Constitutional Court of Peru handed down in case 0009-2018-PI/TC in which the Court considered that section 200(3) of the Penal Code does not violate the fundamental right to freedom of assembly, since it is not about accommodating violence or unduly seeking economic or other benefits or advantages.

The Committee also notes the report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, of 19 October 2023, containing observations on the human rights situation in the context of the protests in Peru. According to this report, up to August 2023, a total of 36 persons were under investigation for alleged crimes in the context of the protests, including for extortion, which is criminalized under section 200 of the Penal Code.

The Committee also notes that, according to the report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights on the situation in Peru in the context of social protests, published in April 2023, criminal offences such as extortion, obstruction of public throughfares and disturbance of public order are commonly used indiscriminately to criminalize protest. Regarding this last point, the Committee notes section 452 of the Penal Code, establishing the offence of disturbing public order, under which any person who slightly disturbs the public peace by using means likely to cause alarm, or who verbally shows lack of respect or consideration towards an authority without seriously offending it, or who disobeys orders given by it, shall incur the penalty of community service of 20 to 40 days.

Lastly, the Committee notes that the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, in its special report on the situation of freedom of expression in Peru, published in December 2023, referred to the use of criminal law mechanisms against journalists legitimately exercising their right to provide information. Specifically, it highlighted the constant use of judicial harassment, particularly towards investigative journalism, through criminal law concepts (libel, slander and defamation) as a mechanism for putting pressure on journalists and communicators.

The Committee wishes to recall that the primary objective of Article 1(a) is to protect persons who, in the exercise of freedom of expression or other related civil liberties, express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, by stipulating that penalties involving an obligation to work cannot be imposed on them. The Committee also recalls in this regard that situations where the expression of views opposed to the established system occurs through recourse to violence or incitement to violence are outside the scope of the protection granted by the Convention (see 2023 general observation on the Convention).

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government and that contained in the reports of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the criminal provision covering the offence of extortion (section 200(3)) is applied in practice and convictions have been handed down on the basis of this provision. With regard to the offence of disturbing public order (section 402), which is reportedly invoked against persons participating in protests, the Committee notes that this is also drafted in sufficiently broad terms to have a potential impact on Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that individuals who express political views or peaceful opposition to the established political, social or economic system cannot incur penalties involving the obligation to work, including measures to strengthen the knowledge of judicial officials regarding the scope of limitations on the exercise of liberties permitted for the purpose of safeguarding public order. In this regard, the Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of sections 132, 200(3) and 452 of the Penal Code, including information on the number of charges brought, court rulings handed down, specific penalties imposed and acts that have resulted in convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Institutional framework. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT) and the Department of Social Workers Development (DSWD) have been implementing the National Strategic Action Plan (NSAP) 2017–2021, and a total of 141 activities out of the 257 planned were successfully completed. Within the framework of this NSAP: (i) initiatives to formulate policies and programmes addressing emerging trends in trafficking in persons were undertaken; (ii) social welfare and protective care services for victims of trafficking were enhanced; (iii) a Justice Coordination System Mechanism (JCSM) in partnership with the Office of the Court Administrator, to enhance monitoring and adjudication of trafficking cases, was established; (iv) consultation workshops with stakeholders from various sectors, which allowed flexibility and adaptability in the implementation of the NSAP, were conducted; and (v) a Memorandum of Understanding was signed between the IACAT and the International Justice Mission (IJM) to co-develop a comprehensive, harmonized and quality data collection system and an analysis of data on trafficking in persons. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Fourth NSAP 2023–2027 which aims to effectively design, plan, implement, monitor and evaluate anti-trafficking interventions in the four key result areas including, prevention and advocacy, protection and reintegration, prosecution and law enforcement, and partnerships, was launched on 18 April 2023.

The Government further indicates that several anti-trafficking in persons awareness-raising programmes were carried out and an anti-trafficking hotline, IACAT 1343 Actionline, to receive and immediately respond to requests for assistance, inquiries and referrals for victims of trafficking was set up. In 2020, IACAT 1343 Actionline received 55 reports of trafficking in persons, involving 31 victims. The Committee also notes from the 2020 Accomplishment Report of the IACAT that, as of December 2020, 70 per cent of the 81 provinces, 88 per cent of the 145 cities and 83 per cent of the 1,489 municipalities of the country had established the respective Committees on Anti-Trafficking and Violence against Women.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 2023, while commending the State party's efforts to strengthen its legal and policy framework to combat trafficking in persons, expressed concern that the State party remains a source, destination and transit country for trafficking in persons, in particular women and girls, for purposes of sexual exploitation and labour exploitation. CEDAW was particularly concerned at the limited progress in addressing the root causes of trafficking within the State party, including poverty and lack of economic opportunities, in particular in rural and remote areas (CEDAW/C/PHL/CO/9). The Committee welcomes the continued strengthening of the institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons, and requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to combat trafficking in persons both for labour and sexual exploitation, particularly of women and girls, including by effectively implementing the four key areas under the National Strategic Action Plan, 2023–2027. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as on any assessment of the results achieved, the difficulties encountered and the measures taken as a result. The Committee lastly requests the Government to provide information on the role played by the provincial, city and municipal Committees on Anti-trafficking and Violence against Women in combating trafficking in persons, particularly in rural and remote areas.

2. Law enforcement measures and penalties. The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act No. 9208 of 2003 has been amended by the Expanded Anti-Trafficking in Persons Republic Act No. 11862 of 2022 (RA 11862) with the aim of combating trafficking more effectively and ensuring enhanced protection to victims of trafficking. The Committee notes that under RA 11862 the "internet intermediaries" and the "financial intermediaries" that allow their internet infrastructure, services or applications to be used for promoting trafficking in persons, as well as producing, printing, and issuing or distributing unissued, tampered or fake passports and birth certificates are considered acts that promote trafficking in persons (section 5); and offences of trafficking in persons committed by or through the use of information and communications technology or any computer system are classified as Qualified Trafficking in Persons (section 6). Moreover, according to section 8, the law enforcement agencies are mandated to immediately initiate an investigation and counter-trafficking intelligence within ten days upon receipt of any statements, reports, affidavits or any information concerning any possible violations under this Act. The Government also indicates that the IACAT endorsed the revised Act No. 11862, which serves as a comprehensive guide to the practical application of the aforementioned statute, clarifying procedural aspects and establishing standardized practices.

The Committee also notes the Government's information that the Secretary of Justice issued Department Order No. 075 in February 2023, directing the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) to coordinate with the IACAT for case build-up and investigations, and Department Circular No. 20 in March 2023, providing directives and guidelines to prosecutors to take an active role for stronger case build-up, in close cooperation with the complainants and/or law enforcement agencies. Moreover, the Philippine Judicial Academy (PHILJA) and Australia-Asia Program to Combat Trafficking in Persons (AAPTIP), in coordination with the IACAT conducted a series of focus group discussions with the judiciary, with the aim of providing a deeper understanding of the international and domestic legal framework, and increase their competencies in the prosecution, adjudication and revision of cases related to trafficking in persons.

With regard to the statistical information provided by the Government on the cases of trafficking in persons brought before the courts, the Committee notes that from 2005 to 2023, 4,666 cases of trafficking in persons were filed, of which 1,235 cases were decided by the courts with 878 convictions and 357 acquittals. The Government also indicates that a total of 2,084 victims of trafficking, including 1,298 minors, were involved in the above cases. The Government further indicates that the national police conducted 329 anti-trafficking in persons operations in 2021, and 300 cases were filed before the Prosecutor's Office; and the Anti-Human Trafficking Divisions conducted 16 anti-trafficking operations and investigated 145 cases, of which 87 were closed and 5 were filed for prosecution. The Committee observes that no information has been provided on the penalties imposed for the offences related to trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that all identified cases of trafficking be subject to in-depth investigations with a view to prosecution, and to allow for the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive penalties for persons engaged in trafficking. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities carried out by the IACAT, including on its collaboration with other law enforcement bodies, and on the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out in cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation, and on the number of convictions handed down and penalties imposed.

3. Complicity of law enforcement officials in trafficking activities. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding the approval by the IACAT, on 24 April 2023, of the Guidelines on the Investigation, Reporting and Monitoring of Trafficking in Persons Cases Facilitated by Corruption (Anti-Corruption Guidelines), which will aid all national government agencies, local government units, law enforcement agencies and non-governmental organizations in the investigation, reporting and monitoring of corruption-related trafficking in persons cases. These Guidelines aim to hold corrupt public officials and employees accountable for their participation, directly or indirectly, in the crime of trafficking in persons. The Government also indicates that in order to curb the involvement of officials in trafficking in persons, the Bureau of Immigration undertook several immediate interventions such as: (i) issuing show cause orders against immigration officers; (ii) reassigning and transferring immigration officers involved in trafficking of persons; (iii) implementing system-based counter assignments which eliminated human intervention in the assignment of duties to immigration officials; and (iv) coordinating and re-establishing the IACAT Task Forces in all international airports. The Committee further notes from the Government's report that from 2020 to 2023, eight Government officials, including a Baranguay Captain, a Staff Sergeant, a Mayor, four police officers and a teacher were convicted for offences related to trafficking in persons. In addition, a total of 233 administrative investigations into the possible involvement of immigration officials in trafficking in persons are pending before the Bureau of Immigration. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take proactive measures to ensure that investigations are duly conducted in cases of corruption and complicity of law enforcement officials, and that appropriate penalties are imposed. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the measures implemented for this purpose, and updated information on the number of cases registered and prosecuted, as well as the penalties imposed.

4. Protection and assistance to victims. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that from 2022 to the first semester of 2023, a total of 3,192 victims of trafficking benefited from the Recovery and Reintegration Program for Trafficked Persons (RRPTP), through the provision of psychosocial, medical, legal and other support services. It notes that since the implementation of the RRPTP, a total of 17,848 victims of trafficking have been assisted, 21 per cent of whom were minors. In addition, 322 victims were provided temporary shelter in residential care facilities. The Government indicates that a new facility, Tahanan ng Inyong Pag-asa (TIP) Center was established in December 2020, which serves as a temporary shelter for rescued victims of trafficking. The TIP Center assisted 482 potential victims of trafficking, of whom 83 were minors. From 2020 to 2021, the IACAT Operations Center (OpCen) provided witness location and security assistance to 135 witnesses (17 minors) to testify in Court, and provided transportation and security assistance to 242 trafficked victims, 81 of whom were minors, and ensured their attendance at case conference or trial. The Government further indicates that in 2023 the RRPTP had funds allocated to assist victims of trafficking who are returning or returned home; families and relatives of the victims of trafficking; witnesses of cases of trafficking in persons; and communities with an incidence of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that appropriate protection and assistance are provided to victims of trafficking, including measures to ensure early identification and referral of victims of trafficking. It requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard, including on procedures aimed at allocating funds for assistance to victims, and to indicate the manner in which these resources are used. Lastly, it requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of victims of trafficking who have been identified and assisted, as well as those who have benefited from RRPTP services.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1). Vulnerable situation of migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that, pursuant to the adoption of the Republic Act No. 11641 of 2021, the Department of Migrant Workers (DMW) was established to strengthen and streamline the delivery of services to migrant workers, and to address both their long-standing and emerging concerns throughout the full cycle of migration, from pre-employment up to their return and reintegration. The DMW offers services, such as: (i) protection against illegal recruitment and trafficking; (ii) a digitalization programme that aims to shorten the cycle time of frontline services; (iii) negotiation of bilateral agreements; (iv) engagement with stakeholders, both domestic and foreign; (v) conducting of advanced, strategic and up-to-date studies and research on global migration and development trends; (vi) the National Reintegration Programme; and (vii) One-Repatriation Command Center (ORCC), a centralized system to respond to requests for intervention and repatriation of overseas Filipino workers (OFWs). The Government also indicates that the DMW took over the operation of the OFW Hospital in January 2023 and has provided medical services to more than 11,000 patients. The OFW Help Hotline, which provides assistance all day every day of the week for all migrant workers, has been made available by the Philippine Foreign Service Posts, the Department of Foreign Affairs and the Office of the Undersecretary for Migrant Workers Affairs (DFA-OUMWA).

The Government also indicates that the 2015 Guidelines on Departure Formalities for International-bound Filipino passengers were revised in June 2023, thereby strengthening passenger screening procedures at the country's ports of exit. Accordingly, a total of 30,043 passengers were referred to the Travel Control Enforcement Unit of the Bureau of Immigration for secondary inspection, and 39 per cent of them were denied permission to depart due to fake travel documents or being tagged as tourist workers. The Government further indicates that it has concluded bilateral agreements on recruitment and labour protection with several countries including, the Russian Federation, Canada, Taiwan, Trinidad and Tobago and the Republic of Korea.

The Committee notes that CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 2023, expressed concern that a significant number of women OFWs are exploited in domestic work and prostitution. Moreover, the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of all Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), in its concluding observations of 2023, expressed concern at the persistently high number of complaints made by OFWs, and disproportionately, by women domestic migrant workers in Gulf States, on issues related to non-payment of wages or illegal deductions, insufficient food and rest periods, allegations of physical, psychological and verbal abuse, including sexual abuse, and extreme violence that has even led to death (CMW/C/PHL/CO/3). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect migrant workers, including overseas women workers against abusive practices and to ensure that they are not placed in a position of accrued vulnerability to forced labour through the implementation of the various measures initiated by the Government and the DMW for the protection of migrant workers. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard, including information on international cooperation efforts undertaken to protect and support migrant workers in transit and destination countries, and the results achieved in terms of the number of migrant workers who have been prevented from entering into and withdrawn from forced labour situations and assisted. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of complaints or reports received by the DMW on behalf of migrant workers who are victims of abusive practices, as well as the number of violations detected and sanctions imposed.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that sections 142 (inciting to sedition by means of speeches, proclamations, writings or emblems; uttering seditious words or speeches; writing, publishing or circulating scurrilous libels against the Government) and 154 (publishing any false news which may endanger the public order or cause damage to the interest or credit of the State, by means of printing, lithography or any other means of publication) of the revised Penal Code do not provide for a penalty of forced labour but rather for penalties of detention: prision correccional and arresto mayor. The Committee observed that the above-mentioned provisions are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to be applied as a means of punishment for the peaceful expression of views, enforceable with sanctions involving compulsory prison labour under Chapter 2, section 2, of the Bureau of Corrections manual. It also noted with regret that under section 4(c)(4) of the Cybercrime Prevention Act, libel may be punishable by a prison sentence involving compulsory prison labour.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that legal provisions such as sections 142 and 154 of the Revised Penal Code, along with section 4(c)(4) of the Anti-Cyber Crime Law, are designed to strike a balance between the protection of individual freedoms and the maintenance of a stable and secure society. The Government states that although crimes against national security and public order are punishable by administrative and penal sanctions, the Presidential Committee on the Grant of Bail, Release and Pardon (PCBRep) has been established to review cases involving individuals convicted for crimes against national security and public order. This mechanism allows for a careful consideration of individual cases and the possibility of releasing political offenders through presidential pardon.

The Committee also notes that the offences under sections 142 and 154 of the Revised Penal Code and section 4(c)(4) of the Anti-Cyber Crime Law (read in conjunction with section 355 (Libel) of the Revised Penal Code) shall be punishable with penalties involving prision correccional or arresto mayor either with or without fines. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend the above-mentioned provisions in order to ensure that no prison sentence entailing compulsory labour can be imposed on persons who, without using or advocating violence, express certain political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 142 and 154 of the Revised Penal Code and section 4(c)(4) of the Anti-Cyber Crime Law. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide examples of cases where political offenders convicted for crimes against national security and public order have been released by the Presidential Committee on the Grant of Bail, Release and Pardon.

Article 1(d). Punishment for having participated in strikes. Over a certain number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to section 263(g) of the Labor Code, under which in the event of a planned or current strike in an industry considered indispensable to the national interest, the Secretary of Labor and Employment may assume jurisdiction over the dispute and settle it or certify it for compulsory arbitration. Declaration of a strike after such "assumption of jurisdiction" or submission to compulsory arbitration is prohibited (section 264). Observing that pursuant to sections 272(a) and 264 of the Labour Code and 146 of the Penal Code, participation in illegal strikes is punishable with imprisonment that involves compulsory prison labour, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the above-mentioned provisions so as to ensure that penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) cannot be imposed for the mere fact of persons peacefully participating in strikes.

The Committee notes that as per the revised and consolidated Labour Code of 2022, sections 263(g), 264 and 272(a) have been renumbered to sections 278(g), 279 and 287(a), respectively. In this regard the Committee notes that, according to section 287(a) of the revised Labour Code, the declaration of a strike without having first bargained collectively, or after assumption of jurisdiction pursuant to section 279, shall be punishable with a fine and/or imprisonment for not more than three years. It also notes that according to section 146 of the Revised Penal Code, penalties of prision correccional or prision mayor shall be imposed upon organizers or leaders of any meeting attended by armed persons for committing crimes under this Code, and that mere participation in an unarmed assembly or strike shall suffer the penalty of arresto mayor. The Committee further notes the Government's reference to section 281 of the Labour Code which states that, except on grounds of national security and public peace or in case of a commission of a crime, no union members or union organizers may be arrested or detained for union activities without previous consultations with the Secretary of Labour. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that several labour relations Bills have been filed and are now pending before the House of Representatives' Committee on Labour and Employment. It refers to: (i) House Bill No. 7043, an Act for strengthening and protecting workers' right to strike and to eliminate dismissal and imprisonment as penalties for union officers engaging in illegal strikes; (ii) House Bill No. 7096, an Act repealing the provisions on assumption of jurisdiction under section 278(g) of the Labour Code; and (iii) House Bill No. 5536, an Act proposing the adoption of "essential services" criteria for the exercise of assumption of jurisdiction. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that House Bills Nos 7096 and 5536 and in particular House Bill No. 7043, which aim to remove penalties of imprisonment for engaging in illegal strikes, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on all court decisions issued under sections 279 and 287(a) of the Labour Code, as well as section 146 of the revised Penal Code, in order to assess their application in practice, indicating in particular the facts that gave rise to the conviction, and the penalties applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Qatar

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that the technical cooperation programme between the Government of Qatar and the ILO continues to be implemented. In this regard, the Committee notes the progress reports on the technical cooperation programme, published annually by the ILO Project Office for the State of Qatar, and in particular those published in the past three years (2021, 2022 and 2023 progress reports). Furthermore, as part of the technical cooperation programme, the Ministry of Labour (MoL) and the ILO have initiated a study to assess the impact of the kafala reforms, expected to be completed in 2024. The Committee requests the Government to provide the results of the 2024 study assessing the impact of the* kafala *reforms, and on any policy or other measure adopted as a result.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. 1. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers to conditions of forced labour. (i) Contractual system replacing kafala*. Migrant workers in the private sector.* The Committee recalls that Decree No. 19 and Ministerial Decision No. 51 of 2020 have removed the legal requirement for migrant workers to obtain a no-objection certificate from their employers to change jobs. It further recalls that Decree No. 18 of 2020 introduced legal provisions governing termination of employment with only a requirement of notification, the duration of which (one or two months) depends on the moment of termination (during or after probation) and on the number of years of employment. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that to implement these changes, the MoL created an electronic notification service, the employment change (EC) platform, which is becoming fully automated to minimize interference.

The Committee further notes, from the 2023 progress report, that from September 2020 to October 2023, the MoL received 1,037,644 job change applications, approving 669,198 and rejecting 364,053. Rejections were mainly due to non-compliance by new employers, submission errors, or workers cancelling applications. In 2023, 167,048 men and 25,295 women had their applications approved, with the most changes occurring in the construction sector. Women's job changes matched their workforce proportion of 15 per cent.

The Committee notes, however, from the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), in its concluding observations of 2023 (E/C.12/QAT/CO/1), as well as from the 2022 and 2023 progress reports, that migrant workers, in particular low-wage earners in the construction, service and domestic work sectors, are still facing challenges when attempting to change jobs. According to the progress reports, such challenges include:

- Employer retaliation against workers who wish to change jobs by cancelling their residency permits (QIDs) or filing false absconding charges against them: the Government has taken measures to tackle this issue through the linkage of the electronic systems of the MoL and Ministry of Interior (MoI) to prevent employers from taking such action after a worker has submitted their application through the MoL's electronic system or if the worker has an ongoing labour complaint with the MoL. The process for a worker to have their QID reactivated is also being revised to make it more accessible and efficient for workers, and to make the QID secure for six months once reactivated. Moreover, to curb misuse of the absconding report system, the MoI introduced procedural changes, according to which an employer reporting an absconding case must now provide additional and accurate data, under threat of penalty.
- The predominant discourse that still exists among workers and employers on the need for a no-objection certificate: even though this is not required by law or by the EC system, a no-objection certificate is still required in practice for many job applications. In this regard, communication material on the labour mobility legislation was produced in 12 languages and disseminated through various channels.

The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the Government and requests it to continue taking measures to ensure the effective implementation of migrant workers' rights to transfer or terminate jobs with notice. It requests the Government to continue to provide disaggregated information on the number of employment transfers and termination of employment contracts that have taken place, as well as on the number of transfer requests that have been refused and the reasons for such refusals.

It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to address the particular challenges still faced by migrant workers to transfer jobs, including on: (i) cases of retaliation by employers and the continued requirement of no-objection certificates by employers; and (ii) any cases of penalties applied to employers for false absconding charges.

(ii) Procedure for issuing exit visas. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes, from the 2023 progress report, that in the application of Act No. 13 of 2018 and Ministerial Decision No. 95 of 2019, giving the right to migrant workers to leave the country without prior approval from their employers, there were 45,690 requests for exit permits as of 15 October 2022, and 13,282 requests for exit permits between 1 January and 31 October 2023. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how many requests for exit permits have been effectively granted, indicating the number and category of workers, including the number of exit permits granted to domestic workers.

(iii) Recruitment process and contract substitution. The Committee previously took note of the establishment of the electronic contract system for all migrant workers (including domestic workers). Migrant workers must sign their contract electronically in a Qatar Visa Centre (QVC) from the labour-sending country before coming to Qatar, therefore allowing the worker to read the contract in his/her native language, giving him/her a better chance to understand the contract and negotiate its terms if he/she is not satisfied with any of the terms included therein. The Committee notes the Government's detailed information on the measures taken to further enhance employment and recruitment practices through legislative reforms and initiatives aimed at preventing recruitment fees and regulating recruitment agencies, so that recruitment is carried out through licensed companies that protect the rights of all migrant workers. For instance, in 2021 the ILO, the MoL, and the MoI conducted three two-day training sessions on workers' rights for staff at 14 QVCs. The Committee also takes note of the training programmes for licensed recruitment agencies that were developed with a focus on decent work for domestic workers, in coordination with the Philippine Overseas Labor Office (POLO), the International Domestic Workers Federation (IDWF), and the ILO. Furthermore, the Government has taken measures to develop tools and raise awareness in the construction and hotel sectors, including the implementation of a capacity-building strategy involving workers' groups and the MoL to share knowledge, develop best practices, and launch new recruitment and employment guidelines for Qatar's hotel sector.

Moreover, according to the progress reports, the MoL revoked the licences of 54 recruitment agencies in 2022 and four in 2023. The Committee notes in this regard that an assessment of the licensing and monitoring system for recruitment agencies was completed in July 2023 by the MoL and the ILO. This assessment reviewed policies, operating procedures and enforcement mechanisms. The third phase of the technical cooperation programme will continue developing a comprehensive inspection framework with standardized tools and guidelines, as well as building inspectors' capacity.

The Committee welcomes these measures, but notes that challenges remain with regard to recruitment practices. According to a study by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 2023 focusing on the recruitment of Nepalese workers, workers continue to pay high recruitment costs (with 99 per cent of workers surveyed having paid recruitment fees to work in Qatar) and, despite gains, migrant workers continue to be deceived about their jobs and salaries. Moreover, while 82 per cent of the workers surveyed indicated that they would work in Qatar again, less than a third of the respondents said they would use the same agency for future recruitment processes, while 72 per cent would not use the same agency again.

The Committee accordingly requests the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts to ensure that recruitment fees are not charged to migrant workers. It also requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure the effective implementation of the electronic contract system so that migrant workers are recruited through fair and decent practices and, therefore, are not deceived about their jobs and salaries, once in Qatar. To this end, it requests the Government to continue providing information on the monitoring of recruitment agencies, including the measures taken to strengthen the inspection of agencies and the number of violations committed by agencies concerning recruitment practices, and penalties imposed as a result. The Committee also requests the Government to provide the results of the 2023 assessment of the licensing and monitoring system for recruitment agencies.

(iv) Late payment and non-payment of wages. The Committee welcomes the adoption, in March 2021, of Qatar's first non-discriminatory minimum wage, which applies to all workers regardless of nationality and occupation, including domestic workers. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour continues to ensure the implementation of the Wage Protection System (WPS), in which more than 1.66 million workers are registered. The system now includes allowances for food, housing and overtime pay, enhancing clarity and transparency in wage calculations, and detecting payments below the minimum wage. The Government further indicates that, to complement an initiative by the MoL and the Qatar Central Bank to facilitate the opening of bank accounts for domestic workers, a system similar to the WPS is being considered for domestic workers.

The Committee notes, in addition, the concern expressed by the CESCR, in its 2023 concluding observations, that migrant workers frequently experience non-payment or delayed payment of wages (E/C.12/QAT/CO/1). In this regard, the Committee notes from the 2023 progress report, that a block is automatically imposed on the relevant company when the WPS detects that a worker has not been paid or has been paid less than the minimum wage and the MoL will communicate with the company to obtain additional information. If the violation is confirmed and not immediately rectified, a violation notice is issued. There were 3,102 such violation notices issued in 2021, 7,769 in 2022, and 2,927 up to August 2023. The 2023 progress report also indicates that a legislative amendment is being considered to automatically issue fines in case of non-payment of wages. The Committee observes, however, that, according to the 2021 and 2022 progress reports, the main causes of complaints concerned non-payment of wages and end-of-service benefits.

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure timely payment of wages to migrant workers and to promptly address any detected violations, ensuring that affected workers receive their due wages without delay. The Committee encourages the Government to sustain its efforts in effectively implementing the WPS and to impose appropriate penalties on companies that delay or fail to pay workers' wages and dues.

(v) Labour inspection. The Committee notes, from the 2022 and 2023 progress reports, that between October 2021 and October 2022, 19,978 worksites/facilities and 3,406 residential units were inspected, leading to the detection of 7,389 violations in workplaces and 1,427 violations in residential units. Up until September 2023, the MoL's Labour Inspection Department inspected 22,770 companies, 2,493 accommodation sites and 14,795 worksites. The Committee notes that the technical cooperation programme has continued to support the training programme with the MoL's Labour Inspection Department. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to provide information on the number and nature of cases where the Labour Inspection Department has identified violations that could amount to situations of forced labour, and that were subsequently referred to the appropriate law enforcement authorities. It also requests the Government to provide information on any training given to the Labour Inspection Department that relates to the detection and referral of forced labour practices.

(vi) Access to justice. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the detailed information in the Government's report on the measures taken to enhance the complaint and labour dispute resolution mechanism. These include facilitating methods to lodge complaints by using accessible means, such as the 24/7 hotline or other smart applications and the "Amerni" mobile application. The MoL also recently launched the Unified Platform for Complaints and Whistleblowers to enable employees and workers in the private sector and domestic workers to file complaints digitally.

The Government is also taking measures to improve the efficiency of the complaints and dispute resolution process. In addition to the MoL's extensive digital transformation plan, the Government indicates that the MoL has established a new department, tasked with reviewing complaints that escalate from the settlement stage to litigation in order to ensure that all pending cases are processed. The MoL is also working on increasing the number of labour dispute settlement committees (DSCs) in order to address the rising number of labour disputes, ensure ease of access for workers to their rights and speed up litigation procedures. According to the 2023 progress report, the number of DSCs increased from three to five in October 2022. Furthermore, the MoL conducts regular comprehensive assessments of labour complaint mechanisms, the settlement process and the DSCs.

The Committee notes, from the 2023 progress report, that 31,549 complaints were lodged in 2022 and 24,862 up to 31 October 2023. In 2022, 227 anonymous complaints were also lodged through the whistle-blower channel. The Committee further notes the statistics shared by the Government, according to which between 1 January 2020 and 31 August 2023, 24,618 cases were referred to DSCs, 12,122 decisions were issued by DSCs, and 17,914 decisions were being processed. As regards the enforcement of these decisions, the Committee notes that a bureau in charge of enforcing the DSC decisions has been established at the Ministry's headquarters to expedite and complete judicial paperwork on the spot, and to ensure the prompt enforcement of decisions delivered electronically, such as the seizure of company assets and property.

The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to facilitate the access of migrant workers to the labour disputes settlement committees (DSCs). It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and nature of complaints by migrant workers who have had recourse to the DSCs, on their outcomes in terms of penalties and reparations, including cases of seizures of company assets and property. Moreover, it requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the average period of time elapsed from the moment of lodging the complaint until the rendering of the decision by the DSCs; and (ii) the effectiveness of the monitoring and follow-up of the conciliation and DSC decisions.

2. Migrant domestic workers. Following its previous comments on Act No. 15 of 2017 for migrant domestic workers and the model contract approved by the MoL in September 2017, the Committee notes that the MoL adopted a revised standard employment contract for domestic workers in 2021. This new contract aligns domestic workers' rights with those of other private sector workers concerning overtime, termination and sick leave. The Committee notes, from the 2023 progress report, that the QVCs in Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines and Sri Lanka are now processing applications from domestic migrant workers coming to Qatar using the 2021 standard employment contract. Moreover, the digital contract certification system approved by the MoL will be expanded to include the possibility of digital certification of amended employment contracts for domestic workers. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indication that 117,435 domestic workers were registered in the established electronic contract system.

The Committee also notes the Government's detailed information on the measures to which domestic workers continue to have access, and their awareness of the complaints mechanism (see below). For instance, more than 20 information sessions and workshops with domestic workers were organized focusing on Law No. 15 of 2017, the standard employment contract, complaint mechanisms, changing of jobs and occupational safety and health; various panel discussions were held with stakeholders, such as representatives from the domestic workers' community, the International Domestic Workers Federation (IDWF), the MoL and the MoI, highlighting the impact of the labour reforms on domestic workers and the role of employers in promoting decent work for this category of workers; and two booklets were published aimed respectively at domestic workers (in 12 languages) and employers (in 2 languages), to educate them about their rights and obligations in accordance with the law, in partnership with non-governmental organizations.

The Committee further notes that, apart from the Unified Platform for Complaints and Whistleblowers, which is also accessible to domestic workers electronically, the MoL established a special department to receive complaints by domestic workers and resolve them. The Committee notes in this regard the statistics shared by the Government regarding the number of complaints received from domestic workers from 2021 to August 2023 (a total of 2,571); the number of cases resolved (2,169); and the number of cases that were under review (145). According to the statistics included in the 2023 progress report, between 2021 and October 2023, there were 2,666 complaints lodged. In 2021, 83 per cent of complaints were settled and 16 per cent were sent to DSCs. In 2022, 89 per cent of complaints were settled and 9 per cent were sent to DSCs. In 2023, 82.4 of complaints per cent were settled while 6.8 per cent were sent to DSCs.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its 2022 concluding observations, that the reported cases of abuse against migrant workers, in particular domestic workers, are under-represented owing to fear of reprisal from the employer and the risk of being accused of leaving the workplace without permission ("absconding") and then of being detained or deported (CCPR/C/QAT/C0/1). In addition, the CESCR, in its 2023 concluding observations, expressed concern about reports that many domestic workers continue to be subjected to abusive working conditions, including excessive working hours with no rest and no days off, passport and mobile phone confiscation and, in some cases, physical, verbal or sexual assault (E/C.12/QAT/CO/13).

While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to pursue its efforts to protect migrant domestic workers from abusive working conditions, in some instances in circumstances tantamount to forced labour. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) ensure the effective implementation of the 2021 standard employment contract and the identification of cases of exploitation through effective monitoring, including by the labour inspectorate; and (ii) pursue its measures aiming to facilitate the access of migrant domestic workers to the complaints mechanisms and to ensure that their complaints are treated promptly. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard, as well as on the number of migrant domestic workers registered in the electronic contract system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of complaints filed by migrant domestic workers and the outcome of such complaints, including the penalties applied to employers. It also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the protection of migrant domestic workers from employer reprisals or false absconding charges.

Article 25. Imposition of penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of section 322 of the Penal Code, providing for punishment, by a fine or imprisonment of up to six months, for the crime of obliging somebody to work, with or without a salary. The Committee also took note of the number of cases of passport confiscation and non-payment of wages that were prosecuted by virtue of this provision, but observed that the penalties imposed consisted only of fines.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that efforts are being made to increase investigations into cases of forced labour and to convict more labour traffickers in comparison to previous years by the National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking (NCCHT), through the effective implementation of the provisions of Act No. 15 of 2011 on Combating Human Trafficking (as amended by Act No. 5 of 2020). The Committee observes with regret, however, that the Government provides no information on such investigations and convictions, either on violations such as passport retention or non-payment of wages, or on instances that have been identified and prosecuted as forced labour cases, other than those related to trafficking.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable as a penal offence, and the penalties imposed by law shall be adequate and strictly enforced. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that proactive investigations into cases and prosecutions of those suspected of exploitation amounting to forced labour are carried out, and that, in accordance with Article 25 of the Convention, dissuasive penalties are actually imposed on persons who exact forced labour from migrant workers. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies to identify and undertake investigations in cases where non-payment, underpayment, delayed payment of wages, passport confiscation or worker-paid recruitment fees are detected, to assess if the situation amounts to forced labour. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on the judicial proceedings instigated, the number of judgments handed down in this regard, and the nature of the penalties applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2007)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee recalls that sentences of imprisonment (which may involve hard labour by judicial decision, by virtue of section 61 of the Penal Code, and compulsory labour, by virtue of section 62 of the Penal Code) may be imposed under certain provisions of the national legislation in circumstances which are covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention, namely:

- section 115 of the Penal Code, which prohibits the dissemination of information or false statements on the country's domestic situation which damage the economy, the prestige of the State or national interests;
- section 134 of the Penal Code, which prohibits any open criticism or defamation of the Prince or his heir (punishable by life imprisonment);
- section 46 of Act No. 8 of 1979 on publications, which prohibits any criticism of the Prince or his heir, and section 47 of the same Act, which prohibits the publication of any defamatory documents on the president of an Arab or Muslim country or a friendly country, as well as documents prejudicial to the national currency or raising confusion concerning the economic situation of the country;
- sections 15 and 17 of Act No. 18 of 2004 on public meetings and demonstrations, which prohibit public assembly without prior authorization;
- section 6 of Act No. 14 of 2014 promulgating the Cybercrime Prevention Law, providing for a maximum of three years in prison or a fine of 500,000 Qatari riyal for anyone convicted of spreading "false news" on the internet or for posting online content that "violates social values or principles," or "insults or slanders others";
- sections 42 and 53 of Decree-Law No. 21 of 2020 on private associations and foundations, repealing Act No. 12 of 2004 concerning associations, but reprising sections 35 and 43 of Act No. 12 of 2004, which prohibit the creation of political associations and provide for a penalty of imprisonment not exceeding one year for any person who carries out an activity contrary to the purpose for which an association was created.

The Committee takes note of the Government's statement, in its report, that it carries out periodic reviews of all laws and legislation with a view to ensuring compliance with international standards. The Government also states that work of judicial detainees does not constitute forced labour, as it aims to develop prisoners in preparation for their integration into society as useful and productive members following their release. The Government therefore considers that this labour differs in its essence from the concept of "forced labour", which is strictly prohibited under national legislation. The Committee recalls, in this regard, that the Convention prohibits the imposition of any form of compulsory prison labour in the situations covered under Article 1, even when the work is imposed because of a conviction by a court of law and is designed for rehabilitation purposes.

Moreover, the Committee takes note of the concern expressed by the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its 2022 concluding observations, about broad and vague provisions contained in Act No. 2 of 2020 amending the Criminal Code, under which punishment of up to five years of prison can be imposed for the dissemination of rumours or false news (CCPR/C/QAT/CO/1). The Committee observes that this refers to new section 136 bis, which authorizes the imprisonment of "anyone who broadcasts, publishes or republishes false or biased rumours, statements or news, or inflammatory propaganda, domestically or abroad with the intent to harm national interests, stir up public opinion, or infringe on the social system or the public system of the state".

The Committee also takes note of the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), in its 2024 concluding observations, about reports that journalists, bloggers and human rights defenders who have published information on the situation of migrant workers in Qatar and other related issues have been detained, arrested or deported on the basis of broad and vague legal provisions such as the dissemination of rumours or false news, or the posting online of content that violates social values or principles or spreading false information on the Internet (CERD/C/QAT/CO/22-23).

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the above-mentioned provisions of the legislation so as to ensure that, in law and in practice, no penalties involving compulsory labour shall be imposed on any person as a punishment for acts through which they express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provisions, including information on prosecutions and penalties applied, as well as on the facts that led to the convictions.

Russian Federation

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2019)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by the Russian Federation of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of Russia (KTR) communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 1(2) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided specific information as regards the allegations concerning the increased risk of falling into forced labour faced by migrant workers from neighbouring countries and the lack of effective action from the law enforcement bodies to put an end to practices of labour exploitation. The Committee further notes that in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed remaining concern that migrant workers, particularly from Central Asia and the Caucasus, still face harsh working conditions, abuse and exploitation and are subjected to discrimination in employment. (CERD/C/RUS/CO/25-26).

The Committee requests the Government to take measures to prevent migrant workers from being caught in abusive practices and conditions of work that could amount to forced labour and to ensure the effective and adequate protection of migrant workers who are victims of forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken in this respect and the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to identify and proactively investigate cases of labour exploitation and to provide information on prosecutions initiated, convictions and specific penalties imposed on perpetrators under section 127.2 (use of slave labour) of the Penal Code or any other relevant penal provision.

Article 2(2)(c). Prison labour. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that work carried out by convicts for private enterprises under sanctions involving compulsory labour, including deprivation of liberty or compulsory work, is only permitted with the free, informed and formal consent of the convicts concerned. The Committee notes with regret the absence in the Government's report of new information in this respect. The Committee notes the Government's indication that as of 1 May 2023, the average number of convicts sentenced to deprivation of liberty and engaged in paid work at the facilities of third-party organizations was 8,200. As of 1 July 2023, more than 23,000 convicts sentenced to compulsory work were employed in 1,700 organizations, engaged in construction, food production, agriculture and other areas. The Government indicates that the administration of correctional institutions ensures the supervision of convicts. The Government further refers to Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention, under which work exacted from a person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law and carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority, shall not be included under the definition of forced labour.

The Committee recalls, in this regard, that Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention sets out two conditions that apply cumulatively: the fact that the prisoner remains at all times under the supervision and control of a public authority does not in itself dispense the government from fulfilling the second condition, namely that the person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations. If either of the two conditions is not observed, the situation is not excluded from the scope of the Convention (see the 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 55). The Committee further recalls that the work of prisoners for private companies is only compatible with the Convention where it does not involve compulsory labour, which requires the formal, freely given and informed consent of the persons concerned. In this regard, the Committee notes that the KTR, in its observations, expresses concern about the increased use of prison labour by private enterprises.

Noting that the legislation allows work to be carried out for private enterprises by convicts sentenced to deprivation of liberty or compulsory work, the Committee once again strongly requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this work is only permitted with the free, formal and informed consent of the convicts concerned, without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, including the loss of rights or privileges. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of convicts working for private enterprises and the nature of those enterprises, as well as on the manner in which the free, formal and informed consent of these convicts is given.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Act of 2002 on Combating Extremism, No. 114-FZ, and the Penal Code. The Committee previously noted that the extremism-related offences provided for in sections 280 (public appeal to perform extremist activities), 282.1 (establishment of an extremist group) and 282.2 (organization of activities of an extremist group) of the Penal Code, in conjunction with the Act of 2002 on Combating Extremism, No. 114-FZ, are punishable with, among other things, penalties involving compulsory labour, including penalties of deprivation of liberty or sentences of compulsory work.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that courts impose sanctions for committing acts of an extremist nature depending on their gravity. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its 2022 concluding observations, expressed concern about the frequent use of the Act of 2002 on Combating Extremism, No. 114-FZ, to target political opponents, human rights defenders, journalists, religious communities, artists and lawyers to limit civic space, including freedom of expression (CCPR/C/RUS/CO/8).

The Committee further notes the introduction by the Federal Act of 4 March 2022, No. 32-FZ, of the following sections into the Penal Code, which establish sanctions involving compulsory labour:

- section 207.3 (public dissemination of knowingly false information about the armed forces of the Russian Federation; the exercise of powers by the state bodies; the provision by volunteer formations, organizations or persons of assistance in the performance of tasks assigned to the armed forces of the Russian Federation);
- section 280.3 (public actions aimed at discrediting the use of the armed forces of the Russian Federation to protect the interests of the Russian Federation and its citizens, to maintain international peace and security; the exercise of powers by the state bodies; the provision by volunteer formations, organizations or persons of assistance in the performance of tasks assigned to the armed forces of the Russian Federation).

In this respect, the Committee notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Russian Federation, in her 2023 report, noted the broad, vague and imprecise wording of section 207.3 of the Penal Code and disproportionate prison sentences for the legitimate exercise of the right to freedom of expression (A/HRC/54/54). The Committee further notes that the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, in its opinion No. 78/2022, concluded that the detention of a human rights defender sentenced to deprivation of liberty under section 207.3 of the Penal Code was arbitrary (A/HRC/WGAD/2022/78). In another opinion No.76/2023, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention noted the vague and overly broad provisions of section 280.3 of the Penal Code and concluded that deprivation of liberty of a person convicted under that section was arbitrary (A/HRC/WGAD/2023/76). Moreover, the United Nations Human Rights Committee requested the Government to repeal sections 207.3 and 280.3 of the Penal Code, which unduly restrict freedom of expression (CCPR/C/RUS/CO/8).

The Committee recalls that the underlying rationale of Article 1(a) of the Convention is to protect persons who, in the exercise of the right to freedom of expression or other related civil liberties, express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, by establishing that they cannot be punished by sanctions involving an obligation to work. The Committee has previously pointed to situations in which restrictions to these rights and liberties are justified and do not fall within the purview of Article 1(a); for example, situations where the expression of views opposed to the established system take place through recourse to violence or incitement to violence are outside the scope of the protection granted by the Convention. The Committee has also recalled that, as recognized by universal and regional human rights bodies, any restriction to the rights of freedom of expression and assembly should meet the requirements of legality, necessity and proportionality (2023 general observation on Convention No. 105).

The Committee notes with deep concern the use of various provisions of the national legislation to prosecute and convict persons who express opinions and views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, which have led or may lead to the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures, both in law and practice, to ensure that no one who expresses political opinions or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, can be sentenced with sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee particularly urges the Government to take the necessary measures: (i) to ensure that the provisions of the Penal Code punishing extremism-related offences are applied in such a manner that no penalty involving compulsory labour can be imposed on persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system; and (ii) to amend sections 207.3 and 280.3 of the Penal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to effective and concrete threats to public order, or the use or threatened use of violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour, such as the sanctions of deprivation of liberty and compulsory work. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to ensure the immediate release of any person convicted to sentences entailing compulsory labour, for peacefully expressing political views or opposing the established political, social or economic system.

Federal Act No. 65-FZ of 8 June 2012 amending Federal Act No. 54-FZ of 9 June 2004 on assemblies, meetings, demonstrations, marches and picketing, and the Code on Administrative Offences. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with deep regret the absence of specific information on the application in practice of sections 20.2 (violation of the established procedure for organizing or holding an assembly, rally, demonstration, march or picketing) and 20.18 (blocking transport communications) of the Code on Administrative Offences. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Russian Federation, in her 2023 report, indicated the widespread arrest and detention of largely peaceful protesters (A/HRC/54/54). Moreover, in their joint communication of 28 March 2022, the United Nations independent human rights experts expressed concern about the reports of arrests and the detention of thousands of protesters for the legitimate exercise of their right to freedom of expression and of peaceful assembly (AL RUS 3/2022).

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the application in practice of sections 20.2 and 20.18 of the Code on Administrative Offences does not lead to the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour on protesters and human rights defenders who express their dissent or criticism of the authorities peacefully. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the application of sections 20.2 and 20.18 of the Code on Administrative Offences in practice, including any prosecutions brought or court decisions handed down, indicating the penalties imposed and the facts that led to convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Work exacted as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law. For a number of years, the Committee has observed that pursuant to section 193(1) of the Prison Act (Cap 19.08), prisoners are under the obligation to undertake useful work and, according to section 193(5), no prisoner shall, except in pursuance of special rules, be employed for the private benefit of any person. The Committee noted the Government's indication that work done by prisoners for private parties included chopping down large trees, painting schools, cleaning yards and hanging street banners, and requested the Government to review the Prison Act to ensure that prisoners only undertake work or service for private persons or entities on a voluntary basis.

The Committee once again notes that the Government, in its report, continues to refer to the revision of the legislation by the National Tripartite Committee and observes the lack of progress made in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether special rules have been adopted to authorize employment of convicted persons for the benefit of persons or private entities and if so the number of convicted persons authorized, the type of work performed and the nature of the beneficiaries of such work. The Committee urges the Government to review section 193(5) of the Prison Act (Cap 19.08), either by removing the possibility of adopting special rules for the employment of convicted persons by private entities, or by ensuring that any work or service performed by convicted prisoners for private persons is voluntary, which requires the formal, freely given and informed consent of the prisoners concerned.

The Committee is raising other issues in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2008)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Mobilizing labour for purposes of economic development. The Committee previously noted that under sections 5(2)(b) and 5(2)(e) of the Village Fono Act 1990, as amended in 2017, every village fono (village council) has the power to direct any person or persons to do any work required to develop village land for the economic betterment of the village. The village fono may adopt village regulations or by-laws (faiga fa'avae or i'ugafono) in this regard, and the failure to obey these regulations or by-laws may be punishable with a fine, banishment or ostracism, or community work (sections 5(3) and 6 of the Village Fono Act 1990).

The Government indicates in its report that the introduction of village by-laws is intended to ensure that villagers are aware of the rules that regulate the way of life in the villages, for the benefit of the villages themselves. It emphasizes that the village fono is made up of a head of family (Matai) from each family in the village. It further states that limiting the scope to the definition of minor communal services as provided for in the Forced Labour Convention, 1919 (No. 29), is not necessary in the context of the small island nation of Samoa. The village setting requires all villagers to abide by village rules and by-laws to ensure control, peace and harmony. Major village projects, such as building churches, maintaining village cleanliness and building schools involve the participation of all villagers, thus promoting unity, identity and a sense of belonging to the village. The usual practice is for villagers who take part in major projects to receive money or compensation in kind for the work performed, with the exception of minor communal services in the form of cleaning areas around individual houses. The Government also indicates that section 11 of the Village Fono Act 1990 provides for a right of appeal, including against decisions of the village fono regarding punishment.

The Committee notes that the Government refers also to the "improvement of living standards", under section 5(2)(d) of the Village Fono Act 1990, under which every village fono may make rules regarding the improvement of living standards. The Committee points out in this regard that its comments do not relate to section 5(2)(d) of the Village Fono Act 1990, and that the Convention does not prevent decisions from being taken for the improvement of living standards, in so far as such decisions do not allow compulsory labour to be imposed for purposes of economic development. The Committee recalls that Article 1(b) of the Convention requires the abolition of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to eliminate, both in law and in practice, the possibility of resorting to compulsory labour in the context of village* fonos*, particularly for the realization of major village projects which are not limited to minor communal works and can constitute a method of mobilizing labour for the purposes of economic development. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application of sections 5(3) and 6 of the Village Fono Act 1990, indicating the number of persons who have been sanctioned and the penalties imposed for failure to obey regulations and by-laws.

Article 1(c). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. Regarding the need to amend sections 127(e) and 128 of the Act, under which a seaman who wilfully and persistently neglects his duty, disobeys any lawful command, or combines with other seamen for these purposes, or to impede the navigation of the vessel, may be subject to a sentence of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour), the Committee noted the Government's indication that the Shipping Act 1998 was under revision.

The Government indicates that it takes due note of the Committee's comments, and that the revision of the Shipping Act 1998 will be conducted in phases, depending on the funding and support that the Ministry of Works, Transport and Infrastructure is able to secure from donors and technical partners. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend sections 127(e) and 128 of the Shipping Act 1998, in order to ensure that no compulsory labour may be imposed as a means of labour discipline on seamen for acts that do not endanger the safety of the ship, or the life or health of persons. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any practical application of sections 127(e) and 128, as well as on the penalties that have been imposed in such cases.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1978)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2021)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Saudi Arabia of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Protocol, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

Representation made pursuant to article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes that the Governing Body, at its 352nd Session (November 2024), declared as admissible the representation submitted by the Building and Wood Workers' International (BWI) alleging non-observance of the Convention and its Protocol of 2014 by Saudi Arabia (GB.352/INS/20/8, paragraph 6). The Committee observes that the allegations in the representation refer to issues related to the legal framework regulating the employment relations of migrant workers and abusive practices that amount to forced labour, which were the subject of the Committee's previous observation. In accordance with its usual practice, the Committee has decided to defer the examination of these issues until the Governing Body adopts its report on the representation.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. (i) National policy. The Committee notes that Saudi Arabia has developed and implemented a National Action Plan (NAP) built around the four pillars of anti-trafficking: prevention, protection, prosecution and partnership. Building on the 2017–2020 NAP, the 2021–2023 NAP identifies priority areas that are needed to strengthen the trafficking response in the Kingdom and provides action points for the National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking (NCCHT), which spearheads the country's response to trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to implement the four pillars of the NAP and the activities undertaken by the NCCHT to develop a coordinated action to prevent and combat trafficking. It requests the Government to provide information on the assessment of the implementation of the NAP indicating the progress made and challenges encountered.

(ii) Identification and protection of victims. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding the measures taken to identify victims of trafficking, including: (1) the information campaigns undertaken by the Ministry of Human Resources and Social Development (MHRSD) on the indicators issued by the NCCTP on human trafficking, forced labour, exploitation of domestic workers and sexual exploitation; and (2) the workshops organized with foreign embassies to review and discuss the Ministry's most prominent initiatives, including those to combat human trafficking crimes. Moreover, the Committee takes note of the information regarding the measures taken to implement the national referral mechanism (NRM) for victims of trafficking in persons, including the establishment of a national team to ensure the operationalization of the NRM for the identification of victims of trafficking, their referral to assistance and rehabilitation, follow-up of cases, and the periodic review of the NRM by the NCCTP.

The Committee observes with regret, however, that the Government provides no statistics on the number of victims of trafficking who have been identified and have benefited from these measures. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2024, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), noted with concern the lack of effective procedures for early identification of victims of trafficking, case management and victim protection, limited awareness among police and other law enforcement officers about trafficking indicators, as well as the lack of gender-sensitive protocols for dealing with victims of trafficking, including trafficking for purposes of exploitation or prostitution. CEDAW also noted the limited number of homes and shelters for victims of trafficking, and the lack of support services tailored to the needs of trafficking victims (CEDAW/C/SAU/CO/5).

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective identification and protection of victims of trafficking for the purpose of both sexual and labour exploitation. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken for the proper functioning of the NRM in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to ensure that appropriate and gender-sensitive protection and assistance is provided to all victims of trafficking in persons, including by increasing the support services to this end. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the victims who have been identified and who have benefited from adequate protection, including statistical data.

(iii) Prosecution and application of penal sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the MHRSD continues to deploy efforts to build the competency of officials in charge of combating crimes related to human trafficking. In this regard, it has provided 18 training sessions to human trafficking monitors, benefiting 645 trainees, between January and June 2023. The Committee notes, however, that the Government indicates that information on the outcome of the 266 cases of trafficking in persons recorded between 2019 and 2020, and on the number of investigations and prosecutions initiated under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law, 2009, will be communicated once available. In view of the lack of information on legal action resulting in the conviction of those responsible for trafficking, the Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to proactively investigate cases of trafficking in persons. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions initiated under the Human Trafficking Act of 2009, including the specific penalties applied to those convicted for trafficking.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Sanctions for participation in strikes. The Committee previously requested the Government to amend section 56(1) of the Industrial Relations Act 1991 (IRA) according to which participation in an unlawful strike or lockout is punished with a fine and imprisonment for a term of six months. Prison sentences involve an obligation to perform labour, in accordance with section 28(1) of the Prison Act 1991. It also referred to section 52(4) of the IRA which provides that the competent Minister is allowed to declare a strike to be unlawful if he or she is of the opinion that its continuance would endanger, among other things, the "public order or the national economy".

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report regarding the procedures carried out since 2019, with the technical assistance of the ILO, to revise the provisions of the IRA and bring them into line with the international obligations of Seychelles. The Government indicates that the finalized draft law, which removes the sanction of imprisonment as a punishment for peaceful participation in strikes, has been endorsed by the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs and is pending national validation. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft law which removes the penalty of imprisonment for participation in strikes from the Industrial Relations Act will be adopted without delay in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 1(d) of the Convention. The Committee also refers in this regard to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Sierra Leone of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory agricultural work. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to formally abrogate section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act (Cap. 61), under which compulsory cultivation may be imposed on "natives". The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication, in its report, that the newly enacted Employment Act, 2023, expressly prohibits forced or compulsory labour under section 16. The Government also reiterates that section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act (Cap. 61) is not applied in practice and is unenforceable as it does not conform with article 9 of the Constitution and section 16 of the Employment Act, 2023. The Committee however notes with regret that, despite the Government's previous indication, the Employment Act, 2023, has not repealed section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act. In light of the Government's repeated indication that the Chiefdom Councils Act (Cap. 61) would be amended, the Committee reiterates the firm hope that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future in order to formally repeal section 8(h) of the Act or to bring this provision into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. Institutional framework. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Prevention and Combating of Trafficking in Persons National Policy Framework (NPF), 2019, contains a detailed three-year interdepartmental strategic plan on the implementation and coordination of activities to combat trafficking in persons, which was revised and updated in November 2022. The NPF is implemented by a multi-disciplinary and cross-sectoral approach through different national coordinating structures including the National Coordinator Secretariat, the National Inter-sectoral Committee on Trafficking in Persons (NICTIP), Provincial Task Teams (PTTs) and Rapid Response Teams (RRTs), which also includes accredited non-governmental organizations and other civil society organizations including traditional leaders, academia, international organizations, and competent state and local stakeholders. The Government states that these structures which support, protect and promote the rights of victims of trafficking constitute South Africa's National Coordination Mechanism, through which the legal and practical obligations under the Prevention and Combating of Trafficking in Persons Act (PCTP Act), the NPF, and international and regional treaties are met. The Committee also notes the Government's information on the various international partnerships concluded by the Government to combat trafficking in persons, including: (i) cooperation of the Southern African Regional Police Chiefs; (ii) collaboration between the prosecutors of South Africa and prosecutors of Botswana, Eswatini and Mozambique; (iii) a binational commission with Zimbabwe, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia; and (iv) signing of the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) with Mozambique, Botswana and Zambia. In addition, a draft MoU with the Government of Thailand is under preparation.

The Government also indicates that awareness-raising and education to reduce the incidence of trafficking in persons is being coordinated by all stakeholders. Moreover, the recommendations following the findings of the research on the scope and nature of trafficking in persons in South Africa conducted by the United States Agency for International Development is being implemented by the NICTIP. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities undertaken by the National Coordination Mechanism, including the NICTIP, the provincial trafficking in persons task teams and provincial rapid response teams, for the effective implementation of the NPF, and to provide information on the results achieved in preventing and combating trafficking in persons.

Identification and protection of victims. The Committee notes the Government's information that National Instruction No. 4/2015 and the National Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) developed by the South African police service contain guidelines on the identification of victims of trafficking and outline the assistance to be provided to them. Accordingly, the National Instruction and the SOP provide for the immediate removal of victims from the trauma or exploitation, medical assistance, protection, gathering of evidence, assessment of the quantum of damages, as well as reintegration and repatriation of the victims. The Committee also notes the Government's information that the Department of Social Development issued Regulations pursuant to section 43(3) of the PCTP Act, which regulates and guides the management and assessment of victims of trafficking. Moreover, Directives on proactively identifying, interviewing and assessing victims of trafficking and their referral to social, medical and psychological services, as well as the Safety Risk Assessment Tool to identify child victims of trafficking, were also developed in 2022–23. The Department of Social development issued copies of the Directives for distribution to provinces, with a view to enhancing the training of social workers, non-governmental organizations, as well as other relevant stakeholders.

The Committee further notes the Government's information that victims of trafficking are initially referred to the Accredited One Stop Centres and after the referral processes, they are placed at the facility by the South African police or a social worker as per the National Instruction 4 of 2015. According to the statistical information provided by the Government, a total of 77 victims of trafficking, including 39 females were identified and rescued by the Government, while 52 victims of trafficking, including 42 females, were identified and rescued by non-governmental organizations. The Government also indicates that a total of 246 victims and suspected victims of trafficking received services with Government support. The Committee also notes the Government's information that regulations under section 43(2) of the PCTP Act concerning the recovery and reflection period for foreign victims of trafficking and their repatriation in their country of origin, have been finalized. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure the early identification of victims of trafficking and to provide them with appropriate protection and assistance for their recovery and rehabilitation. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as on the number of victims of trafficking who have benefited from the assistance and protection services, indicating the specific services provided. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the regulations adopted under section 43(2) of the PCTP Act.

Prosecution and application of penalties. The Committee notes from South Africa's response to the 2022 Trafficking in Persons Report that the interpretation of section 13(a) of the PCTP Act concerning the penalties is that a person who is convicted of the offence of trafficking in persons must be sentenced to life imprisonment, unless there are substantial and compelling circumstances which justify a lesser sentence, which could include the imposition of a fine, although very unlikely. In this regard, the Committee notes that according to the information provided by the Government, in 2023, convictions were made in seven cases of trafficking for sexual purposes, involving 13 accused who were sentenced to imprisonment ranging from 15 to 18 years and life imprisonment; and in one case of trafficking of two children for forced labour, one accused was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that perpetrators of trafficking in persons are prosecuted and that effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out, as well as the convictions and types of penalties imposed. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement officials in this regard.

Article 2(2)(c). Work of prisoners for private enterprises. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, pursuant to sections 37(1)(b), 40(1) and 40(2) of the Correctional Services Act of 1998, a sentenced offender is obliged to perform labour. In addition, by virtue of section 23(2)(a) of the Correctional Service Regulations, private entities are allowed to hire convicted persons to perform labour against a prescribed tariff. The Committee noted that offenders who perform labour were paid a gratuity, and that the recruiters of prison labour were responsible for performing the duties of correctional officers in terms of safety, security and care. The Committee observed that the described working conditions of prisoners for private enterprises did not appear to approximate a free labour relationship in terms of wages or measures related to occupational safety and health. In this regard, it observed that the Strategic Plan for 2015/2016–2019/2020 of the Department of Correctional Services referred to public–private partnerships that were concluded in 2000 for the design, construction, financing and operation of the Mangaung and Kutuma-Sinthumule correctional centres, for a duration of 25 years. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that convicted persons who perform work for private entities undertake it voluntarily, with their formal, freely given and informed consent, and with working conditions approximating those of a free labour relationship.

Noting that this issue has been raised since 2010, the Committee once again notes with regret the absence of information in the Government's report on this point. The Committee therefore recalls once again that, by virtue of Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention, the compulsory labour of convicted persons is not considered forced labour when: (1) it is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority; and (2) prisoners are not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations. If either of the two conditions is not observed, the situation would fall within the scope of the Convention and compulsory labour exacted from convicted persons under these circumstances is prohibited in virtue of Article 1(1) of the Convention. However, the Committee has considered that work by prisoners for private enterprises could be held to be compatible with the Convention when: (i) the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, by giving their free, formal (in writing) and informed consent to work for private enterprises; and (ii) when the conditions of work of prisoners approximate those of a free labour relationship (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 278 and 279). Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that in both law and practice, the work undertaken by prisoners for private enterprises, only takes place voluntarily on the basis of the free, formal and informed consent of the prisoners concerned, and under conditions approximating a free labour relationship. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard, and on the number of prisoners working for the benefit of private enterprises and the manner in which their free, formal and informed consent is given.

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with deep concern that certain provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1951, which for many years the Committee has noted are incompatible with Article 1(c) of the Convention, were reproduced in the same terms under the Merchant Shipping Bill of 2020. It noted that sections 321, 322 and 180(2)(b) of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1951, on the forcible conveyance of seafarers on board ship to perform their duties, were repeated under sections 397, 398 and 142(3) of the Merchant Shipping Bill, 2020. Similarly, the following sections remained unchanged: section 372 of the Bill which provides for penalties of imprisonment (during which prison labour may be imposed, according to section 37(1)(b) of the Correctional Services Act, 1998) for breaches of discipline by seafarers, including wilfully disobeying any lawful command or neglecting duty (section 134(2)(b) and (c)); combining with any of the crew to disobey lawful commands, neglect duty, impede the navigation of the ship or retard the progress of the voyage (section 134(2)(d)); preventing, hindering or retarding the loading, unloading or departure of the ship (section 134(2)(f)); desertion (section 138(1) and (2)); and absence without leave (section 139(1) and (2)). The Committee firmly hoped that the Government will take into account the Committee's comments to review the Merchant Shipping Bill, 2020, with a view to bringing it into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the above-mentioned provisions that are not in compliance with the provisions of the Convention, have been addressed in the Merchant Shipping Bill of 2023, which has been approved by the Cabinet and is currently undergoing final editing by the Parliament. The Government indicates that, according to the new Bill, breaches of discipline will no longer be punishable with penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour, where the ship or the life or health of persons are not endangered and all the sections which promoted forcible return of seafarers on board ship to perform their duties have been restricted to situations where the ship or life or health of persons are endangered. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Merchant Shipping Bill of 2023 which amends section 134(2)(b), (c), (d) and (f), section 138(1) and (2) and section 139(1) and (2) on labour discipline, as well as sections 397, 398 and 142(3) on forcible conveyance of seafarers on board ship to perform their duties, by restricting the penalties for its breaches to imprisonment only to situations where the ship or life or health of persons are endangered, will be adopted without delay.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy once it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

South Sudan

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2012)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted section 282 of the Penal Code of 2008 which criminalizes trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation outside South Sudan. It requested the Government to indicate the provisions in national legislation that would prohibit trafficking for labour exploitation, including within the borders of the country, as well as information on the measures taken to prevent and suppress all forms of trafficking in persons. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to section 11 of the Labour Act of 2017 which prohibits any person from organizing or assisting in the organization of illicit or clandestine movement of any persons into or out of South Sudan for performing work. The Government also indicates that no information is available concerning any decision or sanction imposed by the courts under section 282 of the Penal Code.

The Committee notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Trafficking in Persons, in her report of May 2023, highlights the prevalence of trafficking in persons occurring in the context of extreme poverty, insecurity and continuing conflict and violence in South Sudan and the urgency for strengthening coordinated action to prevent and combat trafficking in persons for all purposes of exploitation. She also emphasizes the very limited assistance and protection available to trafficked persons and the need for urgent action to ensure safe accommodation, appropriate assistance and protection to victims. The Special Rapporteur indicates that South Sudan currently hosts 377,000 refugees and over 824,000 migrant workers and an estimated 2.3 million South Sudanese refugees are living in neighbouring countries making it the largest refugee crisis in Africa. This migration context, combined with limited access to livelihoods and safe, regular migration opportunities, both inward and outward, contribute to increased risks of trafficking in persons. There are reports of women and girls who are abducted and detained by State and non-state armed groups for sexual slavery and forced labour (A/HRC/53/28/Add.2).

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent and combat trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation by (i) adopting a legal framework encompassing all forms of trafficking in persons; ii) ensuring comprehensive prevention and awareness-raising activities, with a particular focus on refugees and returned refugees; (iii) ensuring appropriate assistance and protection to victims of trafficking; (iv) enhancing the capacities of the law enforcement bodies to identify situations of trafficking in persons, undertake prompt investigations and initiate prosecutions. It also requests the Government to provide information on the prosecutions carried out, the convictions handed down and the number and nature of penalties applied to perpetrators of trafficking in persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sri Lanka

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2019)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Sri Lanka of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and takes due note of the Government's first report as well as the information provided in reply to its previous comments under the Convention.

Articles 1(1), and 2(1) of the Convention and Article 1(2) of the Protocol. National policy and systematic and coordinated action. Trafficking in persons. Referring to its previous comments on action taken to combat trafficking in persons, the Committee notes the Government's information that it is implementing the four pillars of the new National Strategic Action Plan to Monitor and Combat Human trafficking (NSAP 2021–2025) which covers prevention, protection, prosecution and partnership. It notes that the National Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force (NAHTTF) which coordinates the overall efforts in this regard works closely with the 19 stakeholder institutions who are actively participating in activities related to trafficking in persons. The Ministry of Defence as the chair of the NAHTTF directly coordinates with the investigation authorities and intelligence services and monitors the implementation of the NSAP. The Government also indicates that, in 2022, the Ministry of Labour and Foreign Employment established a Task Force on the Elimination of Forced Labour, comprised of representatives from the various ministries, which aims to raise awareness among stakeholders and coordinate government efforts on forced labour. The Committee welcomes the consolidation of the institutional framework to combat all forms of forced labour and requests the Government to provide information on any assessment conducted concerning the implementation of the different components of the NSAP 2021–2025, indicating the results achieved, the challenges identified and the measures envisaged to address them. It also requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken by NAHTTF and the Task Force on the Elimination of Forced Labour and to indicate how coordination is ensured among these entities.

Article 1(3) of the Protocol and Article 25 of the Convention. Law enforcement and effective sanctions. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information on the establishment of the Human Trafficking, Human Smuggling and Maritime Crimes Division (HTHSMC Division) of the Criminal Investigation Department, in 2021, which is responsible for investigations and the institution of court proceedings in relation to trafficking and forced labour cases. Furthermore, the Department of Labour can enforce minimum standards against the employer for complaints that are construed as forced labour such as the underpayment or non-payment of wages or inhumane working conditions, while cases involving offences related to forced labour are referred to the specialized unit of the police that deals with trafficking and forced labour for further investigation. According to the Government's report there are 40 District Labour Offices, 17 Sub Labour Offices and 14 District Factory Inspecting Engineer's Offices island-wide. In 2022, the Department of Labour carried out 79,076 labour inspections island-wide including in rural areas. The Government indicates that with increased awareness among labour officers, the Department of Labour will be better equipped to effectively monitor and address forced labour, and that technical assistance has been sought from the ILO for building the capacities of the officials of the Department of Labour and the police in this regard. The Government also indicates that in 2023, the HTHSMC Division launched 34 investigations involving 60 suspected traffickers (33 for sex trafficking and 27 for forced labour). Prosecutions were initiated against 23 suspects, comprising 15 for sex trafficking and 8 for labour trafficking.

The Committee notes that in his 2022 report upon his visit to Sri Lanka, the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, while acknowledging the progress made, highlights that contemporary forms of slavery still exist in the country and they particularly affect those in vulnerable situations, including children, women, ethnic, linguistic and religious minorities as well as older persons. The report refers, inter alia, to instances of exploitation of Sri Lankan migrant workers, indicators of forced labour and domestic servitude in the domestic sector, as well as in tea plantations, and debt bondage resulting from abusive practices of microfinancing companies (A/HRC/51/26/Add.1).

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection and law enforcement bodies with a view to ensuring that cases of forced labour and trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation, are proactively identified and investigated. It requests the Government to indicate the measures taken in this regard and to provide information on the investigations carried out, especially in the sectors at risk, the prosecutions, and the convictions and specific penalties imposed on perpetrators, under sections 358A (debt bondage, forced labour) and 360C (trafficking) of the Penal Code.

Article 2 of the Protocol. Preventive measures. Clauses (b) and (e). Educating and informing employers; supporting due diligence. In the absence of information in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on education and awareness-raising activities aimed at strengthening employers' knowledge about the relevant labour legislation and at preventing their becoming involved in forced labour practices as well as on the measures taken to support due diligence by both the public and private sectors to prevent and respond to risks of forced labour in their operations.

Clause (d). Protecting migrant workers from possible abusive and fraudulent practices. The Committee previously noted the various measures taken by the Government to protect the rights of Sri Lankan migrant workers, including through awareness raising activities, pre-departure trainings, complaint handling mechanisms and consular assistance, and requested the Committee to pursue its efforts to prevent migrant workers from being trapped in forced labour. The Committee notes the Government's information that a new National Policy and Action Plan on Migration for Employment 2023–2027 was approved by the Cabinet of Ministers on 4 September 2023. The Government states that this comprehensive plan has sought inputs and perspectives from various stakeholders including migrant workers and their families, foreign employment agencies, the private sector, civil society organizations, or trade unions. The Government indicates that the issuance of licences to carry on the business of a foreign employment agency is carefully regulated and exclusively granted to individuals with a strong ethical background. Since 2023, licensed institutions are required to provide a bank guarantee of 3 million Sri Lanka rupees, further safeguarding the welfare of migrant workers. In 2022 and 2023, initiatives such as the GLOCAL Fair and consolidated programmes have been organized in various regions of the country with the aim of facilitating access to foreign employment opportunities directly, without the involvement of middlemen, and offer effective solutions to potential challenges.

The Committee also notes that the Counter Human Trafficking Unit (CHTU) actively engages in raising awareness and implementing initiatives to prevent human trafficking in the context of foreign employment. Information is disseminated through various media channels, targeting not only migrant workers but also government officials, embassy personnel and the general public. The Government further indicates that the Sri Lanka Bureau of Foreign Employment (SLBFE) maintains an online system for registering persons who wish to migrate for employment as well as for responding to migrant workers' complaints. In cases where the recruitment of a Sri Lankan national is necessary, approval from the SLBFE is mandatory, after validation of the job order with the relevant embassy or Chamber of Commerce of the respective country. Additionally, the SLBFE establishes the fee structure for such approvals, ensuring transparency and fairness. Prospective migrants are provided with mandatory pre-departure training programmes on safe migration and on ways of protecting their rights, through 17 training centres across the country. Furthermore, if issues such as unpaid salaries or inadequate medical care arise while working abroad, the SLBFE's conciliation section intervenes to investigate and issue orders to address the related problems. Officers have been stationed in 15 embassies across 13 countries with a significant Sri Lankan workforce to ensure the welfare of nationals working abroad. The Committee takes due note of the measures taken and requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent the risks of trafficking in persons and forced labour of national migrant workers in the destination countries, including through: (i) the effective monitoring of the foreign employment agencies; (ii) ensuring that recruitment fees are not borne by the workers; (iii) strengthening the capacity of the3 SLBFE conciliation section and access to consular services in the destination country; and (iv) strengthening cooperation with destination countries.

Article 3 of the Protocol. 1. Identification of victims. The Committee notes the Government's information that based on the Standard Operating Procedures for the identification, protection and referral of victims of trafficking, the SLBFE and the Department of Immigration and Emigration (DoIE) issued a circular/procedure providing guidelines for victim identification and referral to competent authorities. The Government also indicates that the Investigation Division of the DoIE maintains a list of passengers identified as potential victims of trafficking and issues instructions to the visa section to schedule interviews when these persons request a visa extension. If, following the interview, there are reasonable grounds to believe that they are vulnerable to trafficking, the visa extension is denied, and the DoIE ensures their safe return. The DoIE has also established the Border Surveillance Unit (BSU), which consists of 12 surveillance officers, stationed at international airports, to conduct random and spontaneous checks aimed at identifying potential victims.

The Government further states that several institutions operate 24-hour hotlines to receive complaints in relation to trafficking in persons that may be referred to the NAHTTF, for necessary action and thereafter to the police for investigation. The Committee finally notes the Government's information that in 2023, 59 victims of trafficking were identified, all of whom were female. Among these victims, 43 were victims of trafficking for labour exploitation, 13 were victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, and 3 were victims of both. Out of the 59 victims, 12 were identified within Sri Lanka, while 47 were identified abroad. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to ensure that victims of trafficking are properly identified and to provide information in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide more specific information on the measures taken to better identify cases of forced labour that are not linked to migration, including in the plantation sector or in domestic work.

2. Protection, assistance and rehabilitation. The Committee notes the Government's information on the protection and assistance that can be provided to all victims of forced labour under the Assistance to and Protection of Victims of Crime and Witnesses Act, No. 4 of 2015, such as the right to be treated with equality, fairness, dignity and privacy. The Government indicates that in 2023, it has referred at least 54 victims of forced labour and trafficking to various government agencies and international organizations for the provision of services, including shelters, psycho-social care, educational services as well as legal services through the Legal Aid Commission of Sri Lanka.

The Government also provides information on cases where steps were taken to assist and repatriate potential victims of trafficking or domestic servitude. Shelters and safe houses are being operated within Sri Lankan diplomatic missions in selected countries and access to legal assistance, food, accommodation and medical care is provided to all migrant workers through the SLBFE worker's welfare fund. During the period from July 2019 to September 2023, 134 migrant workers received assistance from Sri Lankan missions abroad. However, the Government indicates that these shelters were equipped only for female victims and there were complaints that there were inadequate resources to meet the needs of victims. The SLBFE also provides financial assistance to returning workers, helps them find new employment opportunities and has introduced a pension scheme for migrant workers and an employer-paid insurance scheme for female domestic migrant workers in the Middle East.

The Committee takes due note of these measures and encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure adequate protection and assistance to all victims of trafficking, including male victims. It requests the Government to provide information on the nature of the protection and assistance provided to victims of forced labour in the national territory.

Article 4 of the Protocol. 1. Compensation. The Committee notes that the Assistance to and Protection of Victims of Crime and Witnesses Act, No. 4 of 2015 enables victims of crime to obtain compensation from the persons convicted of committing offences against them (section 2(c)). Section 13(1)(f) of the Act, provides that the National Authority for the Protection of Victims of Crime and Witnesses shall make an award for payment of compensation to a victim of a crime and for that purpose implement a scheme for the grant of the compensation from the Victims of Crime and Witnesses Assistance and Protection Fund. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that all victims of trafficking and forced labour receive compensation, whether awarded by the National Authority or by the courts, and to indicate the number of victims compensated.

2. Non-punishment of victims for acts committed under constraint. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how it is ensured that both in law and practice the competent authorities do not prosecute or impose penalties on victims of forced labour, including trafficking in persons, who have participated in unlawful activities under constraint.

Article 6 of the Protocol. Consultation of employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that national policies and action plans on forced labour are formulated in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, in accordance with Articles 1(2) and 6 of the Protocol.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Prevention of terrorism regulations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sanctions of imprisonment involved compulsory labour by virtue of section 65 of the Prison Ordinance. It noted that, pursuant to the Prevention of Terrorism (Proscription of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE)) Regulations No. 1 of 2011 (sections 3, 4 and 5) under the Prevention of Terrorism Act of 1979, penalties of imprisonment might be imposed for offences defined broadly, such as taking part in meetings, promoting, encouraging, supporting, advising, assisting and causing the dissemination of information linked to the LTTE or any other organization representing or acting on behalf of the said organization, or be connected with or concerned in or be reasonably suspected of being connected with or concerned in, any such activities. The Prevention of Terrorism (Proscription of the Tamil Rehabilitation Organization) Regulations No. 2 of 2011 likewise provide for penalties of imprisonment for a range of activities linked to the Tamil Rehabilitation Organization, including attending meetings and the publication of material (sections 3, 4 and 5).

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that a revised Anti-Terrorism Bill, which aims to establish provisions for the protection of national security and the people of Sri Lanka from acts of terrorism and related offences, has incorporated all the relevant amendments and suggestions received from national and international interested bodies as well as the comments by the Committee, and will be soon submitted to the Cabinet of Ministers for approval. The Committee also notes the Government's information that the application of Regulation No. 1 of 2011 led to 54 arrests and 33 indictments, as well as 8 convictions, which included rigorous as well as suspended imprisonment, were handed down. The Government states that these penal sanctions do not involve compulsory labour prohibited under this Convention.

The Committee, however, notes that according to section 96(d) of the Anti-Terrorism Bill (Part II of 15 September 2023), all regulations made under the repealed Act, including Regulations 1 and 2 of 2011, shall be deemed to have been made under the corresponding provisions of this Act and be enforced and given effect accordingly. The Committee also notes that the Anti-Terrorism Bill provides for the penalty of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for terrorism-related offences, including encouragement to carry out an act of terrorism (section 10) and publication and dissemination or possession of terrorist publications (section 11).

Furthermore, the Committee notes that in its 2023 concluding observations on the application of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern that the broad definition of terrorism under the Prevention of Terrorism Act is used to legitimize the targeting of minorities, in particular Muslims and Tamils, as well as critics of the Government. It also expressed concern at the use of excessive force in dispersing peaceful assemblies; at the application of counter-terrorism legislation against protestors; and at the lack of effective investigations and prosecutions in these cases (CCPR/C/LKA/CO/6, paragraphs 16 and 42). The Committee further notes that the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, in its report of 22 August 2024 on the situation of human rights in Sri Lanka, stated that the Anti-Terrorism bill, which is currently before the Parliament, contains vaguely defined terms and definitions of offences and grants broad powers to the executive with limited safeguards including the power to declare any place in the country "prohibited" and to declare curfews in the totality or parts of the country. It also criminalizes freedom of expression under section 10 (A/HRC/57/19, paragraph 14).

The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee has emphasized that, while counter-terrorism legislation responds to the legitimate need to protect the security of the public against the use of violence, when drafted in general and broad terms it can become a means of punishing the peaceful exercise of civil rights and liberties, such as freedom of expression and the right to assembly. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review the relevant provisions of the Anti-terrorism Bill and its related regulations to ensure that they cannot be used to impose penalties of imprisonment, which involve compulsory labour, on persons who peacefully express opposition to the established political, social or economic system. It also requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the facts underlying any charge and indictment brought by the competent authorities under the Prevention of Terrorism Act and its Regulations. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of the above-mentioned provisions of this Act and its Regulations.

Article 1(c). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to section 127(2) of the Merchant Shipping Act (No. 52 of 1971) according to which the regulations made under section 127(1)(ii) concerning the conditions of service of those serving on board ships, including regulations providing for disciplinary offences, discipline of officers and seafarers, may provide for the imposition of penalties of imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years (involving compulsory labour). The Committee notes the Government's information that the amendments to the Merchant Shipping Act are still ongoing. A comprehensive review of the Act has been undertaken and specific areas that need to be modified, including sections 127(1) and (2), have been identified. The Committee recalls that the Convention prohibits the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline. Therefore, the Committee expresses the firm hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the above-mentioned provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act will be amended without delay to ensure conformity with the Convention, either by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour or by restricting their application to situations where the ship or the life or health of persons are endangered. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 1(d). Sanctions for participation in strikes. The Committee previously noted that the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 penalizes the participation in strikes in essential industries in violation of procedural requirements to be observed in declaring strikes in such industries with sanctions of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) (sections 32(2) and 40(1)(n), read in conjunction with section 43(1) of the Act). It also noted that section 17(2) of the Public Security Ordinance, 1947, and sections 2(2), 4(1) and 6 of the Essential Public Services Act, 1979, provide for certain restrictions on the right to strike, and that violations of these provisions are punishable with imprisonment.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that sections 32(2) and 40(1)(n) of the Industrial Disputes Act as well as the provisions under the Public Security Ordinance and the Essential Public Services Act are in place to safeguard the fundamental rights of civilians. It indicates that the Industrial Dispute Act outlines provisions for penal sanctions against individuals who commit offences under the Act, as detailed in section 43(1) and that engaging in a peaceful strike as a worker is not classified as an offence under this section or any other part of the Act. It also states that section 32(2) only requires the written notice of intention to commence a strike to be provided to the employer 21 days prior to the commencement of the strike which is enforced in order to ensure that the employee's right to freedom of association does not infringe upon the other civil rights of Sri Lankan citizens, particularly the right to life. The Government further indicates that no legal actions were taken for the breaches of section 32(2) of the Industrial Disputes Act during 2022 and 2023.

In this regard, the Committee observes that according to section 40(1)(d) of the Industrial Disputes Act, a person who, being a workman, contravenes the provisions of section 32(2) shall be guilty of an offence and that under section 43(1) any person who commits an offence under the Act would be liable upon conviction, to a fine, or imprisonment, or to both. The Committee observes that these provisions do not appear to distinguish between peaceful and other strikes and hence sanctions of imprisonment may be imposed for the participation in peaceful strikes as well. The Committee once again recalls that in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, no sanctions involving an obligation to perform labour (such as compulsory prison labour) should be imposed as a punishment for having peacefully participated in strikes, whether or not the strike has been carried out in contravention of legislative provisions establishing the requirements for the declaration or the conduct of the strikes. Referring also to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in legislation and practice, no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for peacefully participating in strikes. It therefore requests the Government to ensure that the above-mentioned provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, Public Security Ordinance, and the Essential Public Services Act are revised in order to ensure compliance with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Situations of forced labour arising from the armed conflict. Trafficking and sexual slavery. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that according to the 2016 Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic to the Human Rights Council, credible information indicates that women and girls trapped in conflict areas under the control of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) face trafficking and sexual slavery. Some specific ethnic groups are particularly vulnerable, such as Yazidis and those from ethnic and religious communities targeted by the ISIL (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 65). The Committee also notes that, according to the 2017 Report of the UN Secretary-General on conflict-related sexual violence, thousands of Yazidi women and girls who were captured in Iraq in August 2014 and trafficked to the Syrian Arab Republic continue to be held in sexual slavery, while new reports have surfaced of additional women and children being forcibly transferred from Iraq to the Syrian Arab Republic since the start of military operations in Mosul (S/2017/249, paragraph 69).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, pursuant to the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act of 2010, a Department to Combat Trafficking in Persons was established. However, since the conflict has erupted, trafficking of persons and sexual slavery have increased because of the presence of terrorist groups in the country. The Committee must express its deep concern that, after almost six years of conflict, trafficking in persons and sexual slavery are practices that are still occurring on a large scale on the ground. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to put an immediate stop to these practices which constitute a serious violation of the Convention and to guarantee that the victims are fully protected from such abusive practices. The Committee recalls that it is crucial that appropriate criminal penalties are imposed on perpetrators so that recourse to trafficking or sexual slavery does not go unpunished. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures in this respect, and to provide information on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to certain provisions under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour, pursuant to sections 46 and 51 of the Penal Code (Act No. 148 of 1949), may be imposed in situations covered by the Convention, namely:

- Penal Code: section 282 (insult of a foreign State); 287 (exaggerated news tending to harm the prestige of the State); 288 (participation in a political or social association of an international character without permission); and sections 335 and 336 (seditious assembly, and meetings liable to disturb public tranquillity); and
- the Press Act No. 156 of 1960: sections 15, 16 and 55 (publishing a newspaper for which an authorization has not been granted by the Council of Ministers).

The Committee also previously noted that the abovementioned provisions are enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year which involves an obligation to perform labour in prison.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Press Act of 1960 had been repealed and replaced by the Media Act No. 108 of 2011, under which the penalty of imprisonment has been replaced by a fine. The Government also indicates that a draft Penal Code has been prepared and is in the process of being adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, during the process of the adoption of the new Penal Code, the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that persons who express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention and that, in any event, penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour cannot be imposed on them.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Thailand

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1969)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2018)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

The Committee welcomes the detailed information contained in the Government's first report under the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930.

Article 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention and Article 1(1) and (2) of the Protocol. National policy and systematic action. The Committee notes the adoption of the Action Plan for the Prevention and Solution of Trafficking in Persons for the period 2023–2027, which focuses on the prevention of trafficking in persons (including regarding the recruitment of Thai workers for overseas employment), protection and assistance of victims, and adaptation of existing policies and strategies in light of the changing nature of trafficking in persons. The National Strategy and the National Security Policy and Plan No. 7 (2023–2027) also contemplate actions to increase the competencies of law enforcement bodies to prevent situations of trafficking in persons and expedite case management through collaboration with relevant agencies. In addition, specific action plans to prevent trafficking in persons in the fisheries sector have been adopted by the Royal Thai Police and the Ministry of Agriculture and Cooperatives. In 2021, the Government established an Anti-Human Trafficking Working Group within the Ministry of Labour to ensure effective implementation of the national policy. Furthermore, according to section 15 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee can make recommendations to the Cabinet on the national policy on trafficking in persons and coordinate the development of an integrated data base system on trafficking.

The Committee takes due note of the adoption of legislative measures that reinforce protection against forced labour, which include the Emergency Decree Amending the Anti-Human Trafficking Act, B.E. 2551 (2008), B.E. 2562 (2019), the Ministerial Regulation on Business Authorization to Bring Foreigners to Work with Domestic Employers B.E. 2564 (2021), and the Ministerial Regulation on the Protection of Labour in Sea Fisheries B.E. 2565 (2022), which complements the Labour Protection Fishing Work Act B.E. 2562 (2019).

The Committee welcomes the annual reports on anti-trafficking efforts prepared by the Government, which illustrate the achievements of the Government in prevention, enforcement and protection of victims.

The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to establish a robust institutional and legal framework to prevent and combat forced labour and requests it to provide information on: (i) the results of the implementation of the Action Plan for the Prevention and Solution of Trafficking in Persons for the period 2023–2027; (ii) any evaluation or recommendation made in this respect by the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Committee and the measures taken as a result; and (iii) any study undertaken on the current trends of forced labour in the country (sectors concerned, type of victims, root causes, and so forth).

Article 25 of the Convention and Article 1(3) of the Protocol. Definition and prosecution of forced labour. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Emergency Decree amending the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act B.E. 2562 (2019), which incorporates the offence of forced labour, in addition to the offence of trafficking in persons (section 6) in the Anti-trafficking in Persons Act. According to section 6/1 of the amended Act, any person who compels another person to work or to provide service by means including threatening to cause injury to life or reputation, intimidation, use of force, confiscation of identification documents or debt burden incurred as a consequence of an unlawful obligation, commits the offence of forced labour.

The Government indicates that from 2019 to 2023 there have been 297 cases related to forced labour that have been investigated under section 6/1 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act. It also indicates that it has continued to provide training to police officers and prosecutors on forced labour in collaboration with the ASEAN-Australia Program to combat trafficking. The Committee notes from the Thai Government's Country Report on Anti-Human Trafficking Efforts (2023) that trafficking in persons in the form of sexual exploitation continues to be a pressing issue in Thailand. A total of 45 prosecutions of cases of trafficking in persons for the purposes of sexual exploitation were initiated between 2019 and 2023.

In relation to the Committee's request for information on measures taken to ensure that cases involving the complicity of Government officials with human traffickers are investigated, the Government indicates that it established a subcommittee within the Ministry of Justice for monitoring disciplinary actions and prosecution against Government officials to avert involvement in trafficking in persons. The Committee further notes from the Thai Government's Country Report on Anti-Human Trafficking Efforts (2021) that the Complicit Officials in Human Trafficking Monitoring and Investigation Centre was established.

The Committee notes the measures taken to ensure better implementation of the anti-trafficking legislation and encourages the Government to continue providing information on the application of sections 6 and 6/1 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act (investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties), including information on the challenges faced by law enforcement bodies in enforcing this new provision, criminalizing forced labour. The Committee also requests the Government to provide more specific information on the activities undertaken by the Complicit Officials in Human Trafficking Monitoring and Investigation Centre, as well as on the number of investigations opened concerning officials complicit in cases of trafficking in persons and on the outcome of the investigations.

Article 2 of the Protocol. Preventive measures. Clauses (c) and (d). Protecting migrant workers from abusive and fraudulent practices and strengthening labour inspection. The Committee recalls that the Foreigners' Working Management Emergency Decree B.E. 2560 (2017) provides for responsibilities of employers and licensed recruitment agencies that bring foreigners to work in Thailand. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2021, the Department of Employment inspected 227 companies employing migrant workers but found no cases of misconduct. Under the Labour Trafficking Prevention Action Centre Project, a total of 56,185 establishments have been inspected, in which 1,669 migrant workers were found to be victims of misconduct.

In relation to the recruitment process and labour inspection in the fishing sector, the Government indicates that the Ministerial Regulation on the Protection of Labour in Sea Fisheries B.E. 2565 (2022) requires employers to prepare key employment documents for migrant workers in both Thai and a language that the migrant workers can understand. A process of identification of migrant workers in the fisheries sector consisting in the granting of a "seabook" has also been introduced. As of July 2023, the number of migrant workers with active seabooks was 39,139, who came mostly from Myanmar, Cambodia and Laos. Between 2019 and 2023 there were 40 legal proceedings against employers who hired workers without seabooks or expired seabooks. The Government also indicates that it has implemented Port-in-Port-out (PIPO) Control Centres to conduct labour inspection in vessels. In 2023, a PIPO Control Centre manual was issued that contains a checklist for inspection and outlines a procedure for lodging complaints and taking criminal and administrative legal action. Between 2018 and 2023, the Department of Fisheries detected 1,824 cases of violations, 330 of which were detected by PIPO Control Centres and 1,494 were detected in offshore vessel inspections. In connection with this,

1,597 compliance orders were issued, and 1,824 criminal actions were taken. The Marine Fisheries Prevention and Suppression Centre of the Department of Fisheries has established provincial working groups to coordinate inspections of vessels and workers in fisheries. As a result, the working groups coordinated 135 inspections in 22 coastal provinces that comprised 706 vessels and 8,288 workers. The Government indicates that these inspections did not give rise to reports of forced labour.

The Committee takes due note of the efforts made by the Government to strengthen labour inspections in fishing vessels and encourages it to continue taking measures to protect migrant workers in fisheries from abusive labour practices that could lead to situations of forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical data on the inspections carried out in vessels, including on the numbers of infringements detected. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect migrant workers occupied in other economic sectors from forced labour, including the agricultural sector.

Clause (e). Supporting due diligence by both the public and private sectors. The Committee notes the adoption of the Second National Action Plan on Business and Human Rights B.E 2566–2570 (2023–2027), which aims to promote responsible business practices and respect for human rights throughout supply chains. The Action Plan consists of four key issues, including labour. The Committee duly notes the Government's indication that some of the activities envisaged by the Action Plan include revising, updating and developing laws in line with the Protocol.

The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour issued, in 2020, the Thai Labour Standard: Labour Corporate Responsibility – Requirements, which is a document that enumerates voluntary standards for private companies, including a prohibition of forced labour, and contemplates actions for preventing violence in the workplace, respecting payment of wages, as well as working hours and rest periods. Pursuant to the Thai Labour Standard, companies shall prepare an action plan and allocate necessary resources to ensure that the standards are understood and implemented at all levels of the organization.

Furthermore, a Thai Sustainable Fisheries Roundtable (TSFR) operates as a joint committee between the public and private sectors. The purpose of the TSFR is to develop fishing standards following the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken under the Second National Action Plan on Business and Human Rights B.E 2566-2570 (2023–2027) to support companies to prevent forced labour in their operations (for example, information campaigns, trainings or any technical support). It also requests the Government to report on measures taken to disseminate and promote the requirements contained in the Thai Labour Standard among private companies, as well as on any other measure taken to support public and private sector initiatives to tackle the risk of forced labour in their operations.

Article 3 of the Protocol. Identification and protection of victims of forced labour. The Committee notes that the Government established a national referral mechanism (NRM), to identify and protect victims of trafficking in persons. Under the NRM, victims can be reported through so-called "frontline agencies", which comprise both public and private organizations. Frontline agencies are responsible for transferring information received about victims of forced labour to the First Responders, who are authorized organizations, for further consideration, screening and assistance. The Government indicates that it has adopted Standard Operating Procedures on Preliminary Screening and a Handbook on the Suppression of Human Trafficking and the Protection of Victims, which together provide guidelines for identifying potential victims of forced labour. Indicators of forced labour include questions related to consent to work, employment conditions and signs of forced labour or services. Additionally, it launched PROTECT-U, a mobile app which provides an opportunity for victims and witnesses to contact authorities and share their GPS locations. Since its inception in 2019, 70 cases of potential human trafficking have been reported through this application. The Government has further adopted measures to increase the capacity of Government officials, including labour inspectors, to identify victims of forced labour. In the fisheries sector, inspections include checking of seafarers' identity documents and interviews with migrant workers in fishing vessels who are considered to be at risk of forced labour.

The Committee notes from the Thai Government's Country Report on Anti-Human Trafficking Efforts (2023) that in 2023, there were 530 victims of trafficking, 469 of whom were Thai nationals. Among these, 398 were female and 132 were male. Of the total female victims, most were involved in sexual exploitation, with a total of 219 cases in 2023.

In terms of assistance to victims, the Committee notes that eight Welfare Protection Centres have been established. Within the framework of the NRM, foreign victims must submit their investigation history (case report) to the Division of Anti-Trafficking in Persons which shall be forwarded to the country of origin, in compliance with bilateral cooperation frameworks. If there is no agreement with the country of origin, the Thai Government shall seek coordination with the embassy or consulate to proceed with the repatriation. If the foreign victim of trafficking has been repatriated to his or her country of origin, assessments will be followed up via a case management meeting. In the case of national victims, the follow-up will be under the responsibility of the Welfare Protection Centre. The Government indicates that during the period from 2019 to July 2023, 471 victims returned to Thailand, and 620 were repatriated to their home countries. Between 2021 and 2023, a total of 9,594 victims received employment both in and outside the shelter with financial support from the Anti-Trafficking Fund. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to protect and reintegrate victims and to provide information on the number of victims that have benefited from such measures under the National Referral Mechanism. In this regard, it requests the Government to specify the type of assistance given to victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the process of follow-up on the reintegration of victims of trafficking who returned to their country of origin.

Article 4(1) of the Protocol. Access to remedies, such as compensation. The Committee notes that sections 32 and 33 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law provides for measures to ensure reparations for forced labour victims, specifically in regards to their rights to claim for damages, obtain legal aid and be returned home. Section 35 of the Act provides that in cases where the trafficked person's right to compensation for damages is triggered, and the trafficked person expresses an intention to claim for these damages, a Public Prosecutor shall claim for these damages on their behalf. The Government further states that it has developed criteria for compensation for victims of trafficking in persons under section 35 of the Anti-Trafficking Act. Compensation can be of two types: monetary damages and non-monetary damages (such as damages for violations of human dignity, and damages to physical or mental health). In 2023, a total of 65 victims of trafficking inside shelters and 115 outside shelters issued claims for compensation. The Government further indicates that in addition to the Anti-Human Trafficking Fund, the Rights and Liberties Protection Department provides monetary assistance to victims of trafficking (including forced labour) through the Damages for the Injured persons and Compensation and Expenses for the Accused in Criminal Cases Act, B.E 2544 (2001) and its amendments (No. 2) when the trafficker has been found guilty in a criminal court. From January to July 2023, through the Damages for Injured Persons Act, compensation was granted to 148 victims of trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to ensure that remedies are made available to victims of forced labour, including compensation. It also requests the Government to specify if there is any form of State compensation that is not linked to the victims' participation in a criminal proceeding.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Impact of the obligation to work of convicted prisoners on the application of Article 1 of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee referred to section 48 of the Corrections Act B.E. 2560 (2017), according to which prisoners have a duty to follow the orders of prison officials, who have the power to order prisoners to carry out work in the prison, including public work or other work for the benefit of the government service.

The Government indicates in its report that section 48 is based on the prisoner's willingness and request that the work carried out by prisoners is rewarded and is an important process in behaviour development, and that it does not arise from threats of coercion or an intention to enforce compulsory labour as a means of punishment against prisoners. The Government adds that the Department of Corrections developed a framework for evaluating its performance in prison and correctional facility operations for 2023, which includes the appointment of a committee to determine, inter alia, the wage rate for the works done by prisoners, and for ensuring voluntary consent to work. Furthermore, the Government reiterates that the penalties specified for the criminal offences examined by the Committee under the Convention are not related to penalties of forced labour.

The Committee wishes to clarify that, in the context of the Convention, compulsory labour can take place either in the form of a sanction of imprisonment, involving an obligation to work (compulsory prison labour) or as a specific sanction of community, public or correctional work to which the person has not given his or her consent (2023 general observation). From the wording of section 48 of the Corrections Act B.E. 2560 (2017), the Committee observes that compulsory labour can be imposed by an order of the prison officials on inmates convicted to a sentence of imprisonment. The legislation does not refer to the consent of the convicted person to work nor to the possibility to request work. Therefore, the Committee considers that penalties of imprisonment may involve compulsory prison labour.

Article 1(a). Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views. 1. Crime of lèse-majesté. For a number of years, the Committee has requested the Government to review section 112 of the Criminal Code which provides that whoever defames, insults or threatens the King, the Queen, the Heir-apparent or the Regent, shall be punished with imprisonment of 3 to 15 years. It has noted that this provision has been used in practice to detain, prosecute and convict people with long-term prison sentences. The Committee notes that the Government reaffirms that the objective of section 112 of the Criminal Code is to protect the King, the Queen, the Heir-apparent and the Regent from abusive remarks, defamations or threats, similar to laws protecting individuals in general. In the Government's view, this is done to maintain security and peace within the country, without any intention to suppress or restrict freedom of expression.

The Committee further notes that, in their press release dated 25 March 2024, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and association, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of opinion and expression, and the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers expressed alarm over the use of Thailand's lèse-majesté laws to convict and sentence a member of Thai Lawyers for Human Rights to four years in prison.

The Committee recalls that the Convention protects persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system by establishing that in the context of these activities they cannot be punished by sanctions involving an obligation to work. The range of activities protected includes the right to freedom of expression exercised orally or through the press and other communications media. While recognizing that certain limitations may be imposed on this right to safeguard the public order or to protect society, such limitations must be strictly within the framework of the law. Even if certain activities aim to bring about fundamental changes in state institutions, such activities are protected by the Convention, as long as they do not resort to or call for violent means to these ends.

Therefore, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review section 112 of the Criminal Code to ensure that this provision cannot be used to impose prison sentences (which involve compulsory labour) on persons who, without using or advocating violence, express certain political views, or views opposed to the established political system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

2. Offences under the Act on Political Parties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 105 and 110 of the Organic Act on Political Parties B.E. 2560 (2017) provide for sanctions of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) for a person who uses the name, initials or logo of a political party that is identical or cognate with the name, initials or logo of a political party which has been dissolved following a Constitutional Court order. The same sanction applies for the person who was holding a position as an executive committee member of such dissolved political party and was deprived of the right to apply as an election candidate and seeks to register a new political party or to participate in the foundation of a new political party for ten years as from the date of the dissolution of the political party.

The Committee notes that, on 12 August 2024, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association expressed deep disappointment about the dissolution of the Move Forward Party (MFP) by the Constitutional Court. The United Nations experts referred to the use of the lèse-majesté law as a political tool to dissolve the party that won the largest number of seats and remove its parliamentarians from politics. It further notes that, on 8 August 2024, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights also expressed concern at the Constitutional Court's ruling to dissolve the MFP and ban its senior figures from political life for ten years.

Based on this information and the principles recalled above, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that sections 105 and 110 of the Organic Act on Political Parties B.E. 2560 (2017) are not used to impose prison sanctions involving compulsory prison labour on persons for expressing political views contrary to the established system, including as members of a political party. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide examples of any judicial decision taken on the basis of such provisions.

Article 1(d). Sanctions involving compulsory labour for participation in strikes. Criminal Code. For a number of years, the Committee has requested the Government to review section 117 of the Criminal Code, according to which whoever instigates or causes a strike, lockout or concerted cessation of trade or business with any person for the purpose of bringing about any change in the laws of the country, coercing the Government or intimidating the people, shall be punished with imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour). The Committee notes the Government's indication that both employers and workers are allowed to take part in general strike action based on the conditions that it should not cause an obstruction to economic activities through business disruptions, or even the scarcity of goods and services that can have adverse consequences on the general population. It adds that strikes or lock-outs for political purposes are not permissible and that provisions like section 117 of the Penal Code are aimed at maintaining national stability and peace.

The Committee wishes to recall the principle that participation in strikes, including in essential services, shall not be subject to penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is not endangered and there is no recourse to violence. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed or when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures, without delay, to review section 117 of the Penal Code to ensure that no sanction of imprisonment involving compulsory labour may be imposed as a punishment for peaceful participation in strikes when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is not endangered.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Institutional framework. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the National Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons 2021–2025. The Plan of Action outlines measures to improve the detection and identification of victims and to ensure the successful prosecution of cases of trafficking (United Nations press release of 19 October 2023). The Committee further notes that the Situational Assessment: An Analysis of the Victim Care Environment to Support Survivors of Human Trafficking in Trinidad and Tobago, published by the International Organization for Migration (IOM) in 2022, highlights that: (i) the National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons, established under the Trafficking in Persons Act, has not been functional; (ii) the assumption of core roles by key agencies as stipulated by the Act has been stalled; (iii) the impact evaluation of the implementation of the Act is limited; and (iv) the existing prevention methods are inadequate.

The Committee hopes that the adoption of the National Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons 2021–2025 and the measures taken for its implementation will help to strengthen the fight against trafficking, and requests the Government to provide information on:

- the measures taken under the National Plan of Action, including in the area of prevention;
- the results of any assessment made by the National Task Force to measure and evaluate the progress of the country in the fight against trafficking, as provided for under section 5 of the Trafficking in persons Act;
- the activities of the National Task Force against Trafficking in Persons, including information on any challenges it faces in fulfilling its mandate.

2. Protection of victims. The Committee notes that the Trafficking in Persons Act provides for detailed specific measures for the protection of and assistance to victims of trafficking in persons. Pursuant to section 37 of the Act, victims of trafficking who are not nationals of Trinidad and Tobago and their accompanying dependent children, may receive for the duration of their stay in Trinidad and Tobago, assistance for appropriate housing, education and training opportunities; psychological counselling; legal assistance and legal information; and medical assistance; as well as temporary residence permits. The Committee further notes that, according to the IOM Situational Assessment, there is a lack of shelter for victims of trafficking and there are no clear procedures for the treatment of victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to ensure that the victims of trafficking, both nationals and non-nationals, are provided with the assistance established in Part VI of the Trafficking in Persons Act. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of trafficking in persons who have been identified and benefited from such assistance. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of shelters available for victims of trafficking in persons.

3. Enforcement and effective application of penalties. In reply to the Committee's request for information on pending cases of trafficking in persons, the Government indicates in its report that there are eight cases before the High Court in which the accused are awaiting trial, and that there have been no convictions. The Government also indicates that no person was charged in the three cases of forced labour involving victims of Chinese origin that were previously identified by the Counter-Trafficking Unit.

The Committee notes that, in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed its concern at the low number of investigations, convictions and sanctions for perpetrators. The Human Rights Committee also expressed concern about reports indicating that officials, including law enforcement officers, are complicit in trafficking in persons offences and in the sexual exploitation of women (CCPR/C/TTO/CO/5). The Committee further notes that, according to the IOM Situational Assessment, the number of cases of trafficking in persons has increased and that most of the victims are Venezuelan nationals. While sexual exploitation is the most prevalent form of exploitation, there have also been cases of labour exploitation in sectors such as agriculture, domestic work and construction.

The Committee notes this information with concern and recalls that Article 25 of the Convention requires governments to ensure that penalties imposed by law for the exaction of forced labour are adequate and are strictly enforced. The Committee also observes the absence of information from the Government on convictions issued in trafficking cases since the enactment of the Trafficking in Persons Act in 2011. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement officers to properly identify cases, undertake investigations and, on this basis, prosecute and impose adequate sanctions on perpetrators of trafficking in persons under the Trafficking in Persons Act. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard, as well as on the number of investigations undertaken and convictions handed down on cases of trafficking in persons, both for sexual and labour exploitation, indicating the type of penalty applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour for various breaches of labour discipline. The Committee previously requested the Government to review the following provisions of the Shipping Act (Chapter 50:10), which provide for sanctions involving compulsory prison labour (by virtue of sections 251 and 269(3) of the Prison Rules) for breaches of labour discipline in circumstances where the life, personal safety and health of persons are not endangered:

- section 157(1) pursuant to which a seaman or apprentice engaged on a ship is liable to imprisonment when he or she:
  - (a) wilfully disobeys any lawful command,
  - (b) continually disobeys any lawful command, or continually and wilfully neglects his or her duty,
  - ...
  - (e) combines with any of the crews to disobey lawful commands or to neglect duty or to impede the navigation of the ship or the progress of the voyage.
- section 158 which provides that where a seaman lawfully engaged or an apprentice belonging to a Trinidad and Tobago ship:
  - (a) deserts from his or her ship or neglect or
  - (b) refuses without reasonable cause to join his or her ship or to proceed to sea in his or her ship is liable to imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour).

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Shipping Bill, 2020, which seeks to repeal and replace the Shipping Act (Chapter 50:10), was prepared and sent to Parliament in 2020. The Bill repeals sections 157(1)(b) and (c) and section 158(a) and (b). Moreover, the Bill modifies section 157(1)(e) by replacing the penalty of imprisonment by an administrative fine. The Government indicates that the Shipping Bill is currently before a Joint Select Committee of the Trinidad and Tobago Parliament, which is conducting a clause-by-clause review of the Bill. The Committee takes due note of the measures taken by the Government to review the Shipping Act based on the Committee's comments. It hopes that the Shipping Bill will be adopted by Parliament without delay and will ensure conformity with the Convention by removing sanctions of prison for breaches of discipline that do not endanger the life or the personal safety and health of persons. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the new legislation once adopted.

Article 1(c) and (d). Disciplinary sanctions for certain public servants. For a number of years, the Committee has requested the Government to review section 8(1) of the Trade, Disputes and Protection of Property Act, which provides for penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour for a person employed in certain public services, who wilfully and maliciously breaks a contract of service (the services not being limited to services whose interruption might endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a research paper for the amendments of the Act was completed in January 2023, and that workers' and employers' organizations were consulted thereon. Based on their contributions, a policy position paper will be prepared and submitted to the Ministry of Labour for review and approval. The Government specifies that the issue concerning penalties of imprisonment for peaceful participation in strikes will be taken into consideration during the ongoing process to amend the Trade Disputes and Protection of Property Act.

The Committee takes due note of the steps taken by the Government to review the Trade Disputes and Protection of Property Act and requests it to continue taking measures to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour be imposed on public servants for breaking a contract of service, when such interruption does not endanger the life, personal safety, or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee requests a copy of the amended legislation once adopted.

Article 1(d). Sanctions involving compulsory labour for participating in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the following legislative provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (Chapter 88:01), which provide for sanctions of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) that could be applied for participating in strikes:

- section 67(3) of the Industrial Relations Act, which provides for sanctions of imprisonment for an employer or worker that takes part in industrial action if he or she carries on or is engaged in an essential service;
- section 69 of the Industrial Relations Act, which provides for sanctions of imprisonment for members of the public service, prison service, fire service, teaching service or the Central Bank who take part in any industrial action.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the process of reviewing the Industrial Relations Act is still under way, pending pronouncement from the Cabinet on a policy paper prepared for this purpose. It observes that the Government specifies that the policy paper does not address the issue of the imposition of sanctions of imprisonment for participation in strikes. The Committee notes with regret that, despite its reiterated comments, the above-mentioned provisions have not yet been reviewed.

In this respect, the Committee has continuously emphasized that no penal sanctions (including imprisonment involving compulsory labour) should be imposed against a worker for having peacefully carried out a strike and thus for merely exercising an essential right. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed or when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered.

Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to review sections 67(3) and 69 of the Industrial Relations Act to ensure that, unless the well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered, no penal sanctions can be imposed on essential services workers for participating in strikes peacefully. The Committee also refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No.87).

Türkiye

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK), the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TURK-IS), and the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DISK) communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Institutional framework and coordination. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, that the Coordination Board for Combating Human Trafficking, replacing the previous Coordination Commission for Combating Human Trafficking, conducts meetings every year in order to effectively strengthen coordination and cooperation between institutions and organizations. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Human Rights and Equality Institution of Türkiye (TİHEK) has been designated as the National Rapporteur Agency to examine and report the activities carried out in combating human trafficking and to monitor and evaluate the implementation of the activities undertaken in this regard. The Committee welcomes the first report of the TİHEK, which highlights the need for: (i) developing a third comprehensive National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons, clearly defining the responsibilities of all stakeholders; (ii) enhancing inter-institutional cooperation to identify victims of trafficking, including among migrants in situations of irregularity; and (iii) providing regular, systematic training on trafficking in persons across all levels.

The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including taking the necessary measures to ensure the adoption and effective implementation of a third National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons. It requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the Coordination Board for Combating Human Trafficking, as well as any additional assessments conducted by TİHEK concerning anti-trafficking initiatives.

2. Prosecution and application of penalties. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on various training activities on combating trafficking in persons carried out for the gendarmerie and coast guard personnel, judges, prosecutors and labour inspectors. The Government also indicates that, to address the issue of trafficking in persons, the Department of Border Gates and Combating Immigrant Smuggling (DBG and CIS) of the Directorate General of Security conducts investigations into individuals previously identified as suspects in human trafficking-related crimes to assess whether they remain involved in such activities. Moreover, in 2021–22, the DBG and the CIS, in coordination with the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, carried out unannounced inspections at various entertainment venues to prevent trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes the TİSK's observation that, in 2019, the offences of trafficking in persons and facilitating unlawful immigration were added to the list of offences under section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Law, which outlines grounds for arrest with a warrant. This amendment enables the detention of a suspect when concrete evidence of their involvement in such crimes exists, thereby increasing the deterrent effect by detention during the investigation phase.

The Committee further notes, from the Government's report, that under section 80 of the Penal Code, 1,726 cases related to trafficking in persons were filed against 2,224 suspects between 2020 and 2023. These cases resulted in 154 convictions and 756 acquittals, while the remaining concluded with other verdicts. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information regarding the penalties imposed in these cases. In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its 2022 concluding observations, expressed its concern at the under-reporting of and low conviction rates in trafficking cases (CEDAW/C/TUR/CO/8).

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to effectively identify cases of trafficking in persons, and to conduct thorough investigations to gather the evidence required for the prosecution and conviction of perpetrators. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the training and capacity-building of law enforcement authorities, as well as on measures to ensure greater coordination among these bodies. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and specific penalties applied pursuant to section 80 of the Penal Code.

3. Protection and assistance for victims. The Committee notes the Government's information that, pursuant to a 2022 Decision of the Coordination Board, anti-trafficking liaison officers were appointed by the Provincial Commands of Gendarmerie in 81 provinces. These officers are tasked with establishing a cooperation mechanism with other public institutions and organizations to facilitate the identification of individuals considered victims of human trafficking and to ensure the delivery of support services to them. Over 51,000 brochures and information documents on various aspects of trafficking in persons, including guidance for interviewing and approaching victims of trafficking, were prepared and shared with 81 Provincial Commands of Gendarmerie in order to provide information and raise the awareness of personnel. According to the data provided by the Government, from 2020 until the first half of 2023, a total of 1,152 victims of trafficking (including 932 women and 220 men) were identified. Of these, 441 victims received assistance from victim support programmes, while 235 benefited from the Voluntary and Safe Return Programme. The Government further indicates that there are currently two shelters for foreign victims of trafficking, with ongoing efforts to establish two more shelters by the end of 2024.

The Committee also notes the Government's information that the emergency helpline 157 for victims of trafficking has expanded its service network and is now operating under the name of Foreigners Communication Centre (YIMER-ALO 157) enabling it to provide multilingual information, support and assistance to foreigners. This includes information on issues related to visas and residence permits, international and temporary protection, and services for foreigners who are victims of migrant smuggling at sea, the identification of victims of human trafficking and rescue operations. According to the Government's report, this service has had a significant impact, resulting in the rescue of 596 victims in 2020, 637 victims in 2021, 1,024 victims in 2022, and 265 victims in the first half of 2023.

The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that victims of trafficking in persons are provided with protection and assistance for their rehabilitation and recovery. It requests the Government to provide information on the action taken in this regard by the anti-trafficking liaison officers and its impact on the identification of victims of trafficking. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the victims of trafficking in persons identified and rescued, and to provide information on the protection and assistance they received (including temporary residence permits and recovery periods).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Turkmenistan

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) at the 112th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2024), regarding the application of the Convention by Turkmenistan. It notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide a detailed report on the implementation of the recommendations it adopted on the occasion of the discussion before 1 September 2024.

The Committee also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 30 August 2024, which reiterate their comments made during the Conference Committee discussion and express the hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention by Turkmenistan, in line with the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee further takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 17 September 2024, which call on the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to give effect to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee requests the Government to reply to the observations of the ITUC.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 31 August 2023. It also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023. Moreover, it notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, and the Government's reply to the ITUC's observations, received on 27 October and 9 November 2023. The Committee further takes note of the report on the implementation of the 2023 road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government of Turkmenistan (implementation report), produced following the visit of the independent ILO mission on the observance of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers during the 2023 harvest.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee), which took place in June 2023 during the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development. Cotton production. The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2023, the Conference Committee deplored the persistence of the widespread use of forced labour in relation to the annual state-sponsored cotton harvest in Turkmenistan and the Government's failure to make any meaningful progress on the matter since the Conference Committee discussed the case in 2016 and 2021. The Conference Committee further urged the Government, in consultation and cooperation with the social partners, to: (i) ensure the full implementation of the road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government; (ii) reinforce its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of public and private sector workers, as well as students, in state-sponsored cotton production; (iii) eliminate the compulsory quota system for production and harvesting of cotton; (iv) issue clear instructions on the prohibition of the use of forced labour and strengthen labour inspection and law enforcement; (v) prosecute and sanction appropriately any public official who participates in the forced mobilization of workers for the cultivation or harvest of cotton; and (vi) promote social dialogue in cotton production and continue engaging in cooperation with the ILO and relevant organizations of workers and employers to ensure the full application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee takes note of the Government's information in its report concerning the measures taken in the framework of the implementation of the road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government for 2023 (road map), which was adopted in March 2023 following several ILO high-level technical assistance missions. This road map covers activities in the following six areas: (1) a review of the policy and administrative framework governing the cotton harvest; (2) improvement of labour inspection and law enforcement; (3) promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment in the cotton sector; (4) improvement of cotton production and harvesting; (5) design and implementation of awareness-raising activities; and (6) promotion of social dialogue in cotton production. In particular, the Government indicates that: (1) an analysis has been carried out of the current legislative framework with regard to the application of the Convention and the resulting draft legislative acts were submitted to Parliament; (2) meetings were held with the participation of the relevant ministries and agencies, social partners and ILO representatives to discuss compliance of the legislation and law enforcement practices with the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), and to proceed towards the ratification of these Conventions; (3) there are ongoing efforts to produce a qualitative study of recruitment practices for the cotton harvest and a quantitative study to assess cotton harvesting trends over the past five years; (4) a technical workshop was held during the ILO mission in July 2023 to discuss seasonal and casual employment in Turkmenistan's agricultural sector; (5) in 2021–22, more than 200 awareness-raising meetings, workshops and round tables were held to address fair employment issues throughout the country; and (6) the social partners are actively involved in implementing all the measures set out in the road map.

The Committee further notes from the ITUC's observations that despite the Government's engagement with the ILO and the adoption of the road map, forced labour practices in cotton production are still prevalent on a massive scale in Turkmenistan. Moreover, the ITUC points out the increased pressure on the heads of state-owned enterprises to mobilize workers to the cotton fields in 2022. In particular, tens of thousands of public sector employees, including teachers, doctors, cultural workers, and civil servants, were mobilized to pick cotton to meet the State's cotton harvest plan. Cotton pickers were forced to work under hazardous and unsanitary conditions, including in temperatures ranging from -10°C in December to +40°C in August with no shade and an inadequate supply of drinking water. While cotton pickers were exposed to chemicals, they received no warning or protective equipment, and no medical care. They had also to pay for food, water, transportation, and accommodation. The ITUC further indicates that persons were forced to pay for replacement pickers in order not to participate in cotton harvesting. In 2022, the replacement fee varied between 20 to 60 manats per day (about US$1–3), while the average teacher's salary is between 1,300–1,400 manats per month (about US$65–70).

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the ITUC's observations reiterating the measures taken to ensure the implementation of the road map and indicating its intention to discuss the prospects for long-term cooperation with the ILO in the event of the successful implementation of the road map. The Government further refers to the information prepared by the National Centre of Trade Unions of Turkmenistan (NCTU) which indicates that the NCTU did not receive any complaints about the use of forced labour from workers during the cotton harvest. The NCTU further indicates that in some regions of Turkmenistan, local authorities and farmers, in collaboration with employment services, organize the voluntary recruitment of cotton pickers, who are provided with transport and food and receive wages depending on the amount of cotton harvested.

The Committee notes that the IOE, in its observations, expresses hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention, in line with the Conference Committee's conclusions and in close consultations with the most representative employers' organization in Turkmenistan.

The Committee further notes that in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed remaining concern about the widespread use of the forced labour of civil servants during the cotton harvest (mainly women) under threat of such penalties as the loss of wages or salary cuts and the termination of employment as well as other sanctions (CCPR/C/TKM/CO/3).

The Committee also notes that, with the acceptance of the Government, an independent ILO observance mission of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers, by ILO staff and independent consultants recruited by ILO, took place during the 2023 harvest in October 2023. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the implementation report, initial findings from this observance mission indicate direct or indirect evidence of mobilization of public servants in all regions visited (Ahal, Lebap, Dashoguz and Mary provinces) except for Ashgabat City.

While taking due note of the Government's collaboration with the ILO in the framework of the road map and during the observance of the cotton harvest in 2023, the Committee reiterates its deep concern about the continued practice of forced labour in the cotton sector. The Committee strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of workers, particularly from the public sector, in cotton production. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to continue to engage with the ILO and the social partners, within a cooperation framework, to ensure the full application of the Convention in practice. It requests the Government to continue to take measures to implement the various components of the road map and to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this respect, including measures to further raise public awareness on this subject and to monitor the cotton harvest.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. The Committee notes that the National Action Plan for Prevention of Trafficking in Persons for 2019–2024 sets as specific objectives to: (i) strengthen the institutional capacity to effectively respond to trafficking in persons; (ii) improve the legal and policy framework; (iii) improve access to protection and assistance for victims; (iv) strengthen prevention mechanisms; (v) strengthen investigation, prosecution and adjudication of cases of trafficking in persons; and (vi) build strong and effective partnerships at national, regional and international levels. According to the Action Plan, Uganda remains a source, transit and destination country with cases of trafficking in persons consistently increasing since 2015 and the number of cases of internal trafficking much higher than that registered by the Government authorities. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in November 2023, the Coordinator for the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons (COPTIP) called upon the members of the District Task Forces established in the regions of Arua, Kyotera, Tororo and Kasese, to intensify their efforts in the fight against trafficking in persons in their respective areas of jurisdiction, as a result of the increase in cases of internal trafficking in persons. It also notes that a five-year communication strategy to complement the Action Plan was launched in December 2023 in order to increase awareness of trafficking in persons among the general public and first responders.

The Committee notes, from the 2023 interim evaluation report of the ILO CAPSA project, which seeks to build the capacity of the Government to combat more effectively child labour, forced labour and violations of conditions of work, that training was provided to improve stakeholders' ability to refer victims of trafficking. In this regard, the Government indicates in its report, that the greater use of the 2020 National Referral Guidelines for management of victims of trafficking in persons led to more cases of trafficking in persons being identified and reported in 2022. Furthermore, 323 prosecutors in the Office of the Director of Public Prosecution are now handling issues related to trafficking in persons. The Committee observes, from the 2023 Annual Crime Report of the Uganda police force, that the number of cases of trafficking reported decreased from 668 in 2022 to 496 in 2023, out of which 177 cases were taken to court, 27 cases led to convictions, and 133 cases are still pending in court. A total of 26 sentences of imprisonment and 2 sentences of fines were handed down, and 614 adult victims of trafficking were identified.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to prevent and address trafficking in persons, including internal trafficking, which is on the rise, as well as to better identify, protect and support victims of trafficking. Observing that the National Action Plan for Prevention of Trafficking in Persons ends in 2024, the Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding the final evaluation of the implementation of the six objectives set forth in the above-mentioned Action Plan, as well as on any new action plan elaborated as a follow-up. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of cases of trafficking identified and investigated, prosecutions and convictions, as well as on the nature of the penalties imposed on perpetrators.

2. Vulnerable situation of Ugandan migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that pre-departure orientation training and other services are being offered to migrant workers, while there is no plan to institute post-arrival training for the workers upon their arrival in the destination countries. As regards the monitoring of recruitment agencies, the Government states that, in 2022–2023, six licences for recruitment agencies were suspended for engaging in fraudulent and exploitative recruitment activities and one licence was revoked for a company in the Middle East. The Government adds that a ban was placed on licensing of recruitment agencies in February 2023 in order to consolidate its efforts to protect migrant workers' rights. In addition, training on ethical recruitment of migrant workers and of labour attachés in foreign countries was conducted, in collaboration with the ILO and International Organization for Migration while it is planned to post labour attachés to the various embassies in countries with a high number of migrant workers such as the United Arab Emirates and Qatar. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Uganda Labour Migration Information System (LMIS) has been set up, in collaboration with the ILO, and should be effectively implemented by the end of 2024.

As regards agreements concluded with receiving countries to protect migrant workers' rights, a Bilateral Labour Service Agreement was signed between Uganda and Saudi Arabia in May 2023; other services agreements are currently under negotiation with Qatar and the United Arab Emirates and negotiations should also start with Jordan and Oman. The Committee notes that, in January 2024, the COPTIP held a National Task Force meeting to find ways on how to best protect migrant workers, and highlighted that most migrant workers are often duped or promised jobs and scholarships that do not always exist and result in different forms of labour and sexual exploitation. The Government indicates in this regard that over 4,000 Ugandan victims of trafficking were repatriated from the United Arab Emirates between January and March 2023, as well as 200 victims from India between July 2022 and March 2023.

The Committee takes due note of the measures taken to protect Ugandan migrant workers' rights and encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent migration-related abuse, and exploitation and trafficking of migrant workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the negotiation and implementation of Bilateral Service Agreements concluded with destination countries; the monitoring of the activities of recruitment agencies, indicating the violations observed and the sanctions imposed; and the measures taken to provide Ugandan migrant workers with access to information on fair migration channels and support services, as well as on pre-departure orientation training and other services provided to them.

3. Law enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that weak implementation of the legal provisions persists as a result of the limited knowledge of what constitutes forced labour, with forced labour being still prominent in the informal sector and domestic work where labour inspections are minimal as the national legislation does not expressly qualify households as workplaces liable for inspection. The Government refers to the inadequate financial resources for law enforcement authorities which also affects the regularity in monitoring forced labour in workplaces and indicates that recruitment of additional inspectors into the Employment Service Department is planned. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity and resources of law enforcement officials to identify and prosecute forced labour cases in at-risk sectors, including through the provision of appropriate training. It also requests the Government to provide information on the activities of labour inspectors to monitor compliance with the legal provisions enshrining workers' rights and protecting them from forced labour practices (including the number of fines imposed and cases referred to the judicial authorities), as well as on the number of prosecutions initiated and convictions and penalties applied in cases of forced labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee recalls that several provisions of the national legislation provide for penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour under section 61 of the Prisons Regulations, 2012) in circumstances which may fall within the scope of Article 1(a) of the Convention, namely:

- provisions of the Public Order and Security Act No. 20 of 1967, empowering the executive to restrict an individual's association or communication with others, independently of the commission of any offence;
- sections 56(2)(c), 57 and 58 of the Penal Code, empowering the minister to declare any combination of two or more people an unlawful society and thus rendering any speech, publication or activity on behalf of, or in support of, such a combination, illegal; as well as sections 50 (publication of false news), and 179 (libel);
- sections 5(8) and 8(4) of the Public Order Management Act No. 9 of 2013, respectively for disobedience of statutory duty in case of organizing a public meeting without any reasonable excuse, and for disobedience of lawful orders during public meetings;
- sections 40 and 44(f) and (g) of the Non-Governmental Organizations Act No. 1 of 2016, for engaging in any act which is prejudicial to the interests of Uganda and the dignity of the people of Uganda; or engaging in fundraising or campaigning to support or oppose any political party or candidate for an appointive office or elective political office; and
- sections 11, 12 and 16 of the Anti-Terrorism Act No. 14 of 2002, as amended, read in conjunction with sections 7(2)(d) and (g) defining the offence of terrorism.

Recalling that in 2020, the Constitutional Court declared that section 8 of the Public Order Management Act was unconstitutional and therefore null and void, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that there is a need to revise the provisions of the Public Order and Security Act, Penal Code and Public Order Management Act.

As regards the Non-Governmental Organizations Act, the Committee notes that, in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee was concerned that custodial sentences can be imposed on non-governmental organizations' personnel for administrative offences and that non-governmental organizations working in the field of good governance and election monitoring had their bank accounts frozen in the period prior to and after the 2021 general election, for alleged involvement in terrorism financing activities, which prevented them from carrying out their work (CCPR/C/UGA/CO/2).

The Committee further notes that several provisions of the Computer Misuse Act No. 2 of 2011, as amended by the Computer Misuse (Amendment) Act of 2022, provide for penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) in circumstances which may fall within the scope of the Convention, namely for offensive communication (section 25); information that is likely to ridicule another person or create divisions among persons (section 26A(1)); malicious information (section 26C); and misuse of social media (section 26D). In this regard, the Committee takes due note that, on 10 January 2023, the Constitutional Court (Constitutional Petition No. 5 of 2016) declared section 25 of the Computer Misuse Act as "vague, overly broad and ambiguous" and therefore null and void for being contrary to the right to freedom of peaceful assembly guaranteed under article 29(1) of the Constitution.

It further notes that, in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern at overly broad and vaguely defined provisions in Uganda's legal framework, including the Computer Misuse Act, which are reportedly used to suppress voices critical of the executive, including journalists, writers and human rights defenders, and restrict media coverage of political opposition activities. The Human Rights Committee was also concerned that such laws, which contain severe penalties including custodial sentences, combined with insufficient regulation of surveillance activities, may lead to increasing self-censorship; and was also concerned at reports of arbitrary arrests and detention and physical attacks on journalists, particularly in the context of reporting on elections and protests (CCPR/C/UGA/CO/2).

The Committee notes with concern this information and recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The range of activities which must be protected, under this provision, from punishment involving forced or compulsory labour thus comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and in practice, no penalties involving compulsory prison labour can be imposed on persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. It expresses the firm hope that measures will be taken without delay regarding the revision of the above-mentioned provisions of the Public Order and Security Act No. 20 of 1967, the Penal Code, the Public Order Management Act No. 9 of 2013 and the Computer Misuse Act No. 2 of 2011, as amended, to ensure the observance of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that the above-mentioned provisions of the Non-Governmental Organizations Act No. 1 of 2016 and the Anti-Terrorism Act No. 14 of 2022, as amended, are not used to sanction persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, and requests information on their application in practice, including on the number of legal actions initiated, the penalties imposed and the acts that gave rise to these convictions.

Article 1(d). Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. The Committee recalls that several provisions of the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act, 2006, provide that penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) can be imposed in the case of the organization of a strike or other industrial action declared unlawful or of collective withdrawal in essential services considered illegal (sections 28(6); 29(2) and (3) and 33(1) and (2) of the Act). In the absence of any updated information provided by the Government in this respect, the Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, persons who organize or peacefully participate in a strike cannot be liable to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee refers, in this regard, to its 2023 general observation on the application of the Convention as well as its 2022 observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Rights to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act, 2006, is amended so that workers who participate peacefully in a strike are not liable to sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Legal framework concerning migrant workers. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the reform of its labour legislation through the adoption of: (1) Federal Decree-Law No. 33 of 2021 on the regulation of employment relationships in the private sector (excluding domestic work), supplemented by Cabinet Decision No. 1 of 2022 on the Implementing Regulation of Federal Decree-Law No. 33; and (2) Federal Decree-Law No. 47 of 2021 concerning the Unified General Rules of Labour which establishes minimum rights for all private sector workers, covering equal opportunities, wages, working hours, annual leave, maternity, sick and parental leave, and public holidays.

The Committee also notes the adoption of Federal Decree-Law No. 9 of 2022 on domestic workers and Cabinet Resolution No. 106 of 2022 on the Executive Regulations of the Federal Decree-Law, which encompass various aspects of the employment conditions for domestic workers, such as working hours, leave entitlements, and safety and health protocols, as well as the duties and responsibilities of both employers and workers. Supplementing these laws are various implementing regulations, including Ministerial Resolution No. 674 of 2022 on labour relations for domestic workers and Ministerial Resolution No. 676 of 2022 on domestic labour recruitment agencies.

(i) Recruitment process. The Committee notes that under section 8 of Federal Law No. 33 of 2021, employers are required to use the contract models specified in the implementing regulations. Ministerial Resolution No. 46 of 2022 regarding work permits, job offers, and employment contract forms, mandates employers to use approved contract forms matching job offers when applying for work permits. The Committee notes the Government's information regarding the number of work permits in the private sector – issued pursuant to the signed contracts registered in the Ministry of Human Resources and Emiratisation (MOHRE) database prior to visa issuance – which adhere to procedures ensuring workers are informed about job details and wages in a language they understand (for example, 2,150,645 permits registered in 2022 and 1,620,801 permits in the first half of 2023). The Committee further notes that section 6 of Federal Law-Decree No. 33 of 2021 establishes the prohibition on employers from charging workers recruitment fees. The Government provides information on complaints filed by workers seeking reimbursement of such fees, including 6,418 complaints in 2020 and 3,292 complaints in 2021 to the MOHRE regarding fees charged unlawfully in the private sector.

In the domestic work sector, the Committee notes the Government's information that 243,961 work permits were issued by the MOHRE in 2022, with an additional 152,544 permits issued in the first half of 2023. Under Federal Decree-Law No. 9 of 2022, domestic workers may only be employed if they hold a valid work permit issued by the MOHRE (section 4). The law also outlines key principles for recruitment agencies, including requirements to provide workers with detailed information about job conditions and wages, prohibit the collection of fees from workers, offer suitable temporary accommodation, and ensure that workers are informed of their rights (section 5). Section 6 provides that recruitment agencies and employers must adhere to a standardized contract, delineating their rights and obligations. These obligations are reinforced by Cabinet Resolution No. 106 of 2022, which requires recruitment offices to demonstrate that they cover all commission payments, ensuring no costs are passed on to workers. The Committee further notes that Federal Decree-Law No. 9 prohibits employers from imposing any costs or charges on domestic workers, directly or indirectly (section 11(13)). The Government reports that in 2022, the MOHRE received 6,408 complaints from domestic workers seeking reimbursement of recruitment fees. Of these, 2,577 were resolved by the Ministry's team, while 3,831 were referred to the judiciary for further action.

(ii) Transfer of employer and termination of employment. The Committee notes that section 8 of Federal Decree-Law No. 33 of 2021 provides that employment contracts may be concluded for up to three years, extendable or renewable by mutual agreement. During the probationary period, which may last up to six months, workers must notify their employer in writing at least one month in advance to transfer to a new employer, with the new employer required to compensate the original employer for recruitment costs (section 9(2)). Workers may also terminate their employment during probation and leave the country with a minimum written notice period of 14 days (section 9(4)). After probation, the law permits either party to terminate the contract, for legitimate reasons, with written notice ranging from 30 to 90 days, with compensation applicable only if the notice period is not observed. Section 45 enables workers to terminate the contract without notice in cases of ill-treatment or rights violations. In instances of assault, violence or harassment by the employer, workers must notify the competent authorities and the MOHRE within five working days of being able to report. The Committee notes, from the Government's statistics on employment transfers in the private sector, that a sustained high number of transfers took place following the enactment of Federal Law-Decree No. 33 in 2022, with 415,544 transfers in 2022 and 337,196 transfers until August 2023.

Regarding domestic workers, section 7 of Federal Decree-Law No. 9 specifies that their employment contracts are initially valid for a period of two years, with the option for renewal for an additional two years. Section 20 allows domestic workers to terminate their contracts unilaterally if employers fail to meet their obligations under section 11 of the law, provided the worker notifies the MOHRE within two weeks of the breach. Furthermore, in cases of serious misconduct by the employer, such as physical assault, sexual assault or humiliation, the worker is permitted to leave immediately without prior notice. However, they must promptly report the incident to the competent authorities and inform the MOHRE within three days of departure, as stipulated in Section 10(2) of Cabinet Resolution No. 106 of 2022. Additionally, section 21 permits the transfer of a domestic worker to a new employer, provided all contractual obligations are fulfilled and the rights of the original employer are respected, in accordance with the conditions set by Ministerial Decision. The Committee takes note of the Government's statistics on the transfer of women domestic workers between employers, noting 65,429 transfers in 2022 and 35,070 until August 2023.

(iii) Passport confiscation. The Committee notes that section 13(2) of Federal Law-Decree No. 33 of 2021 prohibits employers from withholding workers' official documents. In this regard, the Government indicates that, in 2022, 19,454 complaints were lodged for return of passports or other kinds of identification documents. In 19,414 cases, resolution measures were taken by the MOHRE's dedicated team. In 40 cases where employers refused to return passports, the matter was escalated to the Office of Public Prosecution for further action.

As regards domestic workers, Federal Decree-Law No. 9 of 2022 establishes their right to retain all official documents, including their passport (section 11(11)). Employers who withhold these documents may face a fine. The Government indicates that judicial officers are authorized by the MOHRE to inspect recruitment agencies, worksites and workers' housing upon receiving complaints, ensuring compliance with the law and preventing the unauthorized retention of a domestic worker's passport. The Government reports that in 2022, the MOHRE received 2,132 complaints from domestic workers regarding the withholding of passports. Of these cases, 2,100 were resolved through negotiations with employers, resulting in the return of the passports. Additionally, 32 employers who refused to cooperate were referred to the Office of Public Prosecution, which ordered the immediate return of the passports to the domestic workers.

The Committee welcomes the guarantees established under the new legislative framework on the employment of migrant workers and migrant domestic workers and urges the Government to ensure its effective implementation so that all migrant workers are protected from abusive practices that may amount to forced labour or exploitation by: (i) ensuring fair recruitment processes that include the prohibition of charging recruitment fees to workers; (ii) ensuring the effective implementation of migrant workers' rights to transfer or terminate jobs; and (iii) preventing the confiscation of their passports. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue providing information on:

- compliance with the prohibition on charging recruitment fees, including the outcomes of related complaints referred to the judiciary and the penalties imposed on both agencies and employers;
- statistical data on the number of employer transfers and contract termination among migrant workers, including domestic workers, since the enforcement of the new legislation and including, to the extent possible, details on the gender of the worker, the sector of employment, and the reasons for the transfer; and
- detected violations of the prohibition on confiscating workers' identification documents and of cases of passport confiscation referred to the Office of Public Prosecution, along with their outcomes and the penalties applied, specifying the sector of employment.

2. Labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2022, the labour offices of the MOHRE conducted over 525,000 inspections to monitor compliance with Federal Decree-Law No. 33 of 2021, focusing on wage payments, working hours and decent accommodation, with a specific focus on detecting signs of potential forced labour. In this regard, the Government indicates that advancements in inspection procedures have been made in recent years, designed to be more proactive and responsive in identifying and assessing indicators of forced labour. The Government indicates that, in 2022, 30 establishments were found guilty of fraudulent practices, such as coercing workers into signing false documents or submitting deceptive data to the wage protection system. These establishments were fined and required to compensate workers. Additionally, 11 establishments were also fined for failing to meet accommodation standards and were ordered to improve their facilities.

Regarding inspections in the domestic work sector, the Government reports that the MOHRE, in cooperation with the inspection sector, regularly inspects recruitment agencies for domestic workers, particularly those involved in temporary employment. Inspections focus on legal compliance, including ensuring that employment offers are sent in the workers' native language, prohibiting the collection of recruitment fees from workers, and verifying that foreign agencies are licensed by relevant authorities. Inspectors also check workers' accommodation for adherence to occupational health and safety standards and decent living conditions. Labour inspectors are not allowed to enter an employer's private residence without consent, except with authorization from the Public Prosecutor under specific conditions: a complaint from the employer or domestic worker, or reasonable evidence of a legal violation (section 24 of Federal Decree-Law No. 9 of 2022). In 2022, 802 inspections were conducted at 101 domestic worker recruitment agencies. From January to August 2023, 39 violations of employment regulations were identified, leading to legal actions. Inspections also uncovered 41 unlicensed establishments, resulting in fines and referrals to the Office of Public Prosecution. In September 2023, two agencies had their licences revoked for serious violations of federal law by Decree No. 9 of 2022 regarding domestic workers.

The Committee requests the Government to continue strengthening the labour inspectorate to ensure the effective monitoring of the application in practice of the new laws and regulations governing employment relationships, including in the domestic work sector. It requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of cases where the Labour Inspection Department has identified violations potentially amounting to forced labour. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of inspections carried out in the residences of employers of domestic workers, both with and without the employers' consent, following permission from the Public Prosecutor.

3. Access to justice, prosecutions and application of sanctions. The Committee notes that, under Ministerial Resolution No. 47 of 2022 on the settlement of labour disputes and complaints procedures, private sector workers must file complaints within 30 days if their employment contract or legal obligations are not met. An amicable dispute resolution is facilitated by a legal officer, and unresolved cases are referred to the Labour Court by the MOHRE. Once the MOHRE makes this referral, the worker has 14 days to register the complaint with the court. During this process, workers may only work for another employer with a temporary permit from the MOHRE, and those with an absconding claim against them are ineligible for this permit (section 3(d)). As for migrant domestic workers, Federal Decree-Law No. 21 of 2023 stipulates that disputes between migrant domestic workers, employers or recruitment agencies that cannot be resolved amicably can be referred to the MOHRE for review and action. If the issue remains unresolved for two weeks, the case may be forwarded to the competent court.

The Committee also takes note of the measures taken by the Government to ensure access to justice for migrant workers, including the establishment of mechanisms for fair arbitration of labour disputes and effective remedies. Before entering the labour market, migrant workers are informed about their legal rights and dispute resolution options at specialized centres. Workers can file complaints with the MOHRE through various channels, including a 24-hour call centre available in 20 languages, the Ministry's website and smart apps for secure submissions, and "Tasheel" and "Tadbeer" centres. Additionally, the MOHRE offers a confidential complaint service that allows workers to report violations anonymously. The Government also provides information on various support measures to assist workers in accessing justice, including legal aid, consultation and translation services. Furthermore, to expedite justice, the judiciary has implemented initiatives like the "One-Day Court" for swift resolution of complaints.

The Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government on labour-related complaints filed by private sector workers from 2020 to mid-August 2023. The Government also reports that 9,715 complaints were submitted by domestic workers between January 2022 and January 2023. However, specific details on the issues raised in these complaints and their outcomes have not been disclosed.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on migrant workers, including domestic workers who have filed complaints after disputes could not be settled amicably, detailing the nature of the complaints and their outcomes. It also requests the Government to provide information on investigations into suspected cases of forced labour, judicial proceedings, the number of judgments issued, and penalties applied on employers imposing forced labour. Additionally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of temporary permits issued by the MOHRE to workers whose complaints have been referred to a court, and the number of temporary permits denied due to absconding claims filed by employers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. 1. Law No. 7 on combating terrorism offences of 2014 (Counter-Terrorism Law). The Committee notes that the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2014 contains various provisions that establish a penalty of imprisonment for various "terrorism-related offences". The Committee notes that penalties of imprisonment involve compulsory labour, pursuant to section 71 of Federal Law-Decree No. 31 of 2021 promulgating the crimes and penalties law (Penal Code) and section 292 of Federal Decree-Law No. 38 of 2022 promulgating the Criminal Procedures Law (Code of Criminal Procedure).

The Committee takes note of a communication dated 13 November 2020 (OL ARE 6/2020), in which United Nations special procedure mandate holders expressed concern over the fact that the wording of the criminal provisions included in the Counter-Terrorism Law was sometimes imprecise and ambiguous, to the point that it might undermine the principle of legal certainty, including as regards the definition of terrorism itself. The special procedure mandate holders expressed concern that the use of ambiguous terms such as "opposing the country", "influencing the public authorities of the country or another country or international organization", raise serious concerns with regard to their arbitrary application due to their lack of legal specificity. They also expressed concern about how section 63 of the Counter-Terrorism Law appears to give the Minister of Presidential Affairs significant discretion to label any organization a terrorist entity, without any clear procedure for exercising this power or oversight over it.

The Committee takes note of the opinions issued by the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention on 5 May 2023, concerning the case of 12 Emirati individuals involved in the UAE94 mass trial. This group, consisting of academics, judges, lawyers, students and human rights defenders, were convicted on various counter-terrorism and cybercrime charges in 2013. After completing their sentences, they were subsequently detained in munasaha centres under the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2014, purportedly due to perceived terrorism threats. Among other findings, the Working Group notes that their placement in detention was retroactively based on the implementation of the Counter-Terrorism Law, the provisions of which are vaguely and broadly worded and may have a deterrent effect on the exercise of the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, freedom of opinion and expression, and freedom of peaceful assembly and association. The Working Group also concludes that it appears that the 12 detainees were selected for ongoing incarceration under the Counter-Terrorism Law on the basis of their public activities involving the exercise of their rights to freedom of expression and of assembly, for which they were originally arbitrarily detained.

The Committee notes with concern the reported instances of misuse of the provisions of the Counter-Terrorism Law and observes that individuals convicted under these provisions may face penal sanctions of imprisonment which, as indicated above involve compulsory prison labour. The Committee recalls that, under Article 1(a) of the Convention, no penalty involving compulsory labour may be imposed on persons for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee points out in this respect that the protection provided by the Convention does not extend to persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence. The Committee also stresses that, while counter-terrorism legislation responds to the legitimate need to protect the security and safety of the population, when drafted in general and broad terms it can become a means of punishing the peaceful exercise of civil rights and liberties, such as the freedom of expression and the right to assembly. The Convention protects these rights and liberties against repression by means of sanctions involving compulsory work.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour can be imposed, in application of the Counter-Terrorism Law of 2014, on persons who, without using or advocating violence, express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. It requests the Government to provide information that would allow the Committee to assess the manner in which the Law is used and interpreted by the competent authorities, including the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed for committing terrorism-related offences and a description of the facts that led to these convictions.

2. Federal Act No. 15 of 1980 governing publications and publishing. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that a draft Act regulating media activities was under consideration, which would review Federal Act No. 15 of 1980. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been referring to the following provisions of Federal Act No. 15 of 1980, under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed:

- section 70: prohibition on criticizing the Head of State or the rulers of the Emirates;
- section 71: prohibition on publishing documents harmful to Islam, or to the Government, or to the country's interests or the basic systems on which society is founded;
- section 76: prohibition on publishing material containing information shameful to the Head of State of an Arab or Muslim country or a country with friendly ties, as well as material which may threaten the ties of the country with Arab, Muslim or friendly countries;
- section 77: prohibition on publishing material which causes an injustice to Arabs or constitutes a misrepresentation of Arab civilization or cultural heritage;
- section 81: prohibition on publishing material which harms the national currency or causes confusion over the economic situation of a country.

The Committee notes with regret the lack of information from the Government about any new developments concerning the review of Federal Act No. 15 of 1980.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that within the framework of the adoption of the draft Act on media activities or any other legislative review, the above-mentioned provisions will be reviewed in order to ensure that the legislation governing publications and media does not contain provisions that would permit the conviction of, and imposition of penalties of imprisonment on, persons who hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

3. Penal Code. Over a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the incompatibility with the Convention of certain provisions of the Penal Code of 1987 which prohibited the establishment of an organization or the convening of a meeting or conference for the purpose of attacking or mistreating the foundations or teachings of the Islamic religion, or calling for the observance of another religion, with such offences being punishable with imprisonment for a maximum period of ten years (sections 317 and 320). The Committee also referred to sections 318 and 319 of the Penal Code pursuant to which a prison sentence could be imposed on any person who is a member of an association specified in section 317, who challenges the foundations or teachings of the Islamic religion, proselytizes another religion or advocates a related ideology.

The Committee notes with regret that the new Penal Code adopted in 2021, under sections 368 and 371, criminalizes the same offences and retains the penalty of imprisonment which involves an obligation to work.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 368 to 371 of the Penal Code into conformity with the Convention, such as by limiting their scope to acts of violence or incitement to violence. Pending the adoption of such amendments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of these provisions, including the number of prosecutions and convictions, as well as the facts giving rise to these convictions and the nature of the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1931)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2016)

The Committee welcomes the ratification of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 and takes due note of the Government's first report, which contains detailed information on the different measures adopted, in particular with regard to prevention, victims' assistance and protection, compensation and international cooperation.

The Committee also notes the observations sent by the Trade Union Congress (TUC) received on 8 September 2023 and 23 October 2023, as well as the Government's reply received on 17 November 2023.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) of the Convention and Article 1(1) and (2) of the Protocol. National policy and systematic action. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the comprehensive legal framework to combat all forms of forced labour, which is complemented by strategies that have a special focus on strengthening victim identification, protection and support; identifying perpetrators; and enhancing international cooperation (the Northen Ireland Modern Slavery Strategy for 2024–27 and the Scottish Trafficking and Exploitation Strategy of 2017). The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in 2023 a new Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner was appointed pursuant to section 40 of the Modern Slavery Act 2015. It also notes the annual report of the Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner for 2021–2022, which contains a detailed and comprehensive account of the actions taken by the Government in different areas, including victim care and support, law enforcement and prosecution, prevention and research. The Anti-Slavery Commissioner highlights that the number of potential victims of modern slavery has continued to rise, which reflects to some extent heightened levels of awareness among practitioners.

The Committee also notes the first Human Trafficking Report of the Home Affairs Committee of the House of Commons published in 2023 according to which the Modern Slavery Strategy, 2014, needs to be updated. The Home Affairs Committee also observes that the Government moved responsibility for modern slavery and human trafficking from the Minister for Safeguarding to the Minister for Migration. It also expresses its concern at the fact that the Government is prioritizing a focus on irregular migration issues at the expense of tackling trafficking in persons as such.

The Committee takes due note of the continued efforts of the Government to review its national policy and institutional framework to combat forced labour and encourages it to continue taking measures with a view to addressing the recommendations of the Home Affairs Committee, including the review of the 2014 Modern Slavery Strategy. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure a coordinated approach among the migration, labour and criminal justice authorities. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken by the new Independent Anti-slavery Commissioner, including any recommendation made by the Commissioner to competent bodies in forced labour.

Article 25 of the Convention and Article 1(3) of the Protocol. Law enforcement. The Committee recalls that forced labour (including in the form of slavery and trafficking in persons) constitutes a criminal offence under the Modern Slavery Act 2015, the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Scotland) Act 2015, and the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015. In addition, the Gangmasters (Licensing) Act 2014 prohibits operating as a gangmaster (a person who supplies workers to another person) without a licence; as well as entering into arrangements with a unlicenced gangmaster for the provision of workers (violation of this prohibition is sanctioned with imprisonment). The Committee notes that in England and Wales, completed prosecutions related to forced labour increased from 332 in 2020/21 to 506 in 2021/2022; in Northern Ireland, 45 investigations were carried out by the police between 2020 and 2023; and in Scotland, between 2015 and March 2021, the police opened investigations in 61 cases related to trafficking in persons and exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Gangmasters and Labour Abuse Authority (GLAA) is responsible for supervising the activities of persons acting as gangmasters in high-risk sectors: harvesting or gathering agricultural produce, gathering shellfish or processing or packaging agricultural produce harvested. The Government adds that the Immigration Act 2016 expanded the power of the GLAA to prevent, detect and investigate serious labour exploitation across the entire economy. The GLAA can also request assistance from the National Crime Agency to investigate offences (section 13).

The Committee also notes that section 1 of the Immigration Act establishes the role of the Director of Labour Market Enforcement (DLME) who is responsible for preparing an annual labour enforcement strategy setting out the scale and nature of non-compliance in the labour market and the priorities of the three main enforcement bodies: the Employment Agency Standards Inspectorate (EAS), the GLAA, and His Majesty's Revenue and Customs-National Minimum Wage Team (HMRC's NMW). The Government indicates that, pursuant to section 15 of the Immigration Act, Labour Market Enforcement Undertakings (LMEU) can be issued by the EAS, the GLAA and the HMRC's NMW for persons or businesses that commit labour market violations. If the non-compliant entity does not comply with the LMEU, the enforcing authority can issue a Labour Market Enforcement Order (LMEO) to order compliance. Breaching an LMEO constitutes a criminal offence punishable with imprisonment (section 27 of the Immigration Act 2016).

The Committee notes that the Home Affairs Committee highlights in its 2023 Human Trafficking Report that the Government's policy focus on immigration rather than human trafficking is reflected in law enforcement priorities and that proactive inspections by the GLAA are rare, with much of the reporting of potential labour exploitation being required from labour workers. It further notes that in its observations, the TUC indicates that: (i) the fact that labour market enforcement bodies carry out joint operations with immigration control undermines trust in enforcement mechanisms among migrant workers, who often do not report violations due to threat of dismissal and return; and (ii) the GLAA is considerably underfunded and is reliant on workers reporting their exploitation.

The Committee acknowledges the steps taken to establish a consolidated institutional framework for the detection and investigation of situations of forced labour across the country and encourages the Government to continue taking measures to ensure that the different law enforcement bodies can undertake inspections in a coordinated manner and proactively identify and investigate potential cases of forced labour even in the absence of workers reporting situations of exploitation. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of: (i) cases of labour exploitation detected by the Gangmasters and Labour Abuse Authority (GLAA); (ii) Labour Market Enforced Orders (LMEO) issues by the Director of Labour Market Enforcement (DLME) for violations related to labour exploitation; (iii) cases referred to the judicial authorities for further investigation and prosecution; and (iv) convictions handed down and sanctions applied on perpetrators.

Article 2 of the Protocol. Prevention. Clause (d) Protecting migrant workers from abusive and fraudulent practices. The Government indicates that, in 2019, a Seasonal Worker Scheme was introduced for overseas workers to come to the United Kingdom to work in the horticulture and poultry industry. Under this Scheme, migrant workers can obtain a visa for a period of six months to work in the horticulture sector, and from October to December in the poultry industry. The quota for seasonal workers was set at 57,000 for 2024. Pursuant to the guidelines issued by the Home Office for temporary worker sponsors, only entities which have been licensed by the GLAA (so-called scheme operators) are able to sponsor individuals seeking seasonal worker visas. Applicants need to pay the application fee and their flying costs, and prove that they have enough money to support themselves in the United Kingdom, unless the sponsor agrees to assume these costs (Home Office guidance for obtaining seasonal worker visa). Employers must pay the worker at least the minimum wage and should ensure that they benefit from rest periods and access to health care. The Home Office can undertake compliance checks together with the GLAA or the HRMC, including through visits to farms and interviews with workers.

According to the review of the seasonal worker scheme conducted by the Home Office Migration Advisory Committee in 2024, the Government has introduced into the scheme the requirement of paying seasonal workers a minimum of 32 hours pay for each week of their stay in the country even if they are prevented from work because of bad weather. However, the review indicates that workers can still be dismissed due to poor performance and transfers are in practice not possible because of lack of vacancies, or because the date of the expiration of the visa does not allow the worker to undergo sufficient training.

The Committee also notes that the Independent Chief Inspector of Borders and Migration highlighted in his 2022 Report on the inspection of the immigration system in the agricultural sector that the Home Office has not demonstrated that it has the mechanisms in place to assure itself that scheme operators are meeting compliance requirements and that when serious concerns have been raised by workers, it did not act promptly.

According to the review of the Migration Advisory Committee, during 2023, 125 farms out of around 500 (around 25 per cent) were visited by UK Visa and Immigration (UKVI) enforcement teams of the Home Office, and 1,116 migrants were interviewed on the route (representing around 3.4 per cent of seasonal workers). On some of these inspections UKVI staff were accompanied by the GLAA. Visits are scheduled immediately if serious violations of scheme regulations have been reported. Otherwise, visits are scheduled based on frequency, location or current sponsored worker numbers. Furthermore, the Migration Advisory Committee has pointed out that seasonal workers are particularly susceptible to exploitation due to the nature of the work in often isolated rural areas, frequently with little or no English, and the fear that they can lose their visas and earnings if they make a complaint. It also indicated that there are reported instances of migrants paying significant fees abroad to unofficial agents or taking loans.

In its observations, the TUC notes that seasonal agricultural workers are working in conditions that are highly exploitative and are asked to pay recruitment fees, which can lead them to a situation of debt bondage. The TUC adds that even though seasonal workers can transfer employers, many have reported being refused this or charged a fee to do so.

The Committee notes this information and recalls that seasonal migrant workers may be particularly vulnerable to exploitative practices that could lead them to fall into forced labour, especially when they do not know their rights or do not exercise them because of fear of retaliation. The Committee acknowledges the measures taken by the Government to comprehensively review its seasonal workers scheme and trusts that the Government will take all the necessary measures to:

- prevent agricultural seasonal workers from becoming trapped in a situation of debt-bondage by the imposition of recruitment fees or other charges that are not permitted by the law, including by ensuring that scheme operators do not engage with recruitment agents abroad which illegally impose recruitment fees on workers;
- provide migrant seasonal workers with information about their rights before their recruitment and job placement, as well as about the legal mechanisms they can resort to in case of violations of such rights;
- inspections are carried out regularly by the GLAA and other competent authorities, especially in isolated areas.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any review of the existing seasonal workers scheme based on the conclusions of the Migration Advisory Committee as well as information on the number of migrant workers under the seasonal workers scheme.

Clause (e). Supporting due diligence to prevent and respond to risks of forced labour. The Committee recalls that section 54 of the Modern Slavery Act requires a commercial organization which has reached a turnover determined by regulations to prepare annually a slavery and human trafficking statement indicating the steps taken to ensure that slavery and human trafficking is not taking place in any of its supply chains and in any part of its business. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, to improve understanding and compliance with section 54 of the Act, an e-learning course for businesses was launched to advise on practical efforts to identify, mitigate and prevent forced labour. The Government also refers to the publication of a Guide on Tackling Modern Slavery in the Government Supply Chain to help Government entities to manage risks of modern slavery in both new procurement activity and existing contracts. Since March 2021, over 10,600 statements have been submitted to the online registry covering over 35,800 organizations. Furthermore, the Government reports that, as of January 2023, 3,462 assessments have been completed through the Modern Slavery Assessment Tool, which helps businesses to identify where and how a supplier or business can improve to combat risks of modern slavery in their supply chains. The Scottish Government also published Guidance in 2018 to help businesses identify and prevent human trafficking and exploitation across their operations and supported the creation of Scotland Against Modern Slavery (SAMS), an initiative to inform and share information on best practices about modern slavery throughout the business community in Scottland. The Government of Northern Ireland has engaged with the agri-food sector to strengthen transparency in supply chain requirements in that sector.

The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to support private and public sector actors to comply with their due diligence obligations under section 54 of the Modern Slavery Act and encourages it to continue to take measures to ensure compliance and share good practices, as well as to provide information in this regard.

Article 3 of the Protocol. (i) Identification and protection of victims. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the establishment of the National Referral Mechanism (NRM), as the United Kingdom's primary framework for identifying victims of modern slavery and the main vehicle for providing assistance and protection to victims. According to the NRM Guidance adopted by the Home Office, victims of forced labour can only be referred upon their consent to the NRM through First Responder Organizations. Once the referral has been made, a competent authority within the Home Office shall determine whether there are "reasonable grounds" to consider an individual referred to the NRM a victim of modern slavery. The Modern Slavery Statutory Guidance for England and Wales and Non-Statutory Guidance for Northern Ireland and Scotland provide for a list of general indicators to help the competent authority to make a primary assessment. The "reasonable grounds decision" shall be made within a period of five working days wherever possible and, at a second stage, a "conclusive grounds" decision shall be made to formally recognize a person as a victim.

The Government indicates that there were approximately 17,000 reasonable grounds decisions in 2022, of which 12 per cent were negative, and 3,528 were made in the first three months of 2023, of which 42 per cent were negative. Over 6,000 conclusive grounds decisions were made in 2022, of which 11 per cent were negative, and 2,275 were made in the first three months of 2023, of which 25 per cent were negative.

The Committee notes that the House of Commons' Home Affairs Committee's Human Trafficking First Report of Session 2023–24 observes that the NRM decision-making process is extremely slow and that the average waiting time for a conclusive grounds decision for the quarter July to September 2023 was 530 days. In its response to the report of the Home Affairs Committee, the Government indicates that there has been an unprecedented increase in the volume of referrals to the NRM, namely a 625 per cent rise between 2014 and 2022, which has presented significant challenges in resourcing and workflow. In the Government's view, the time taken also reflects the requirement to obtain appropriate levels of evidence, which can be challenging. The Government adds that it has allocated funds to hire new staff for operations.

In its observations, the TUC indicates that flaws in the operation and delivery of the NRM persist and that despite previous reforms, there is no formal appeals process and authorities fail to make timely decisions. Moreover, the TUC points out that there is a sharp increase in the number of potential victims not consenting to being referred to the NRM, often because of legitimate fears of reprisal, arrest or deportation.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to address the existing challenges in the operation of the National Referral Mechanism (NRM), in particular with regard to: (i) ensuring that potential victims of forced labour are informed about the advantages of being referred to the NRM; (ii) reducing the decision-making time; and (iii) continuing reinforcing the capacities of the NRM to assess evidence of potential cases of forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of referrals to the NRM in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, the number of positive conclusive grounds decisions, and the number of refusals. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether decisions refusing the recognition of a person as a victim of forced labour can be subject to review.

(ii) Protection and assistance. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in England and Wales, individuals who have obtained a positive reasonable grounds decision are eligible for support under the government funded Modern Slavery Victim Care Contract (MSVCC) with a view to assisting them with rebuilding their lives, engaging with the criminal justice system, and transitioning back into the community. It can also assist the victim in obtaining financial support, safehouse accommodation and health services. These protection measures are provided for a period of 45 days or until a conclusive grounds decision is made. Beyond this timeline, a recovery-based needs assessment is undertaken to provide a specific transition and support plan to move beyond the MSVCC. In Scotland, rules for the protection for victims of forced labour are set out under Part 2 of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Scotland) Act, 2015 and the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Scotland) Act 2015 (Support for victims) Regulations 2018. Section 9 of the Act provides that necessary support and assistance are delivered to individuals believed to be victims of human trafficking during a period of 90 days. As regards Northern Ireland, section 18 of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015 provides that persons are referred to the NRM until the determination of the status of victim by the competent authority is pending. Assistance and support will be extended for 45 days upon a determination that there are reasonable grounds to believe that a person is a qualifying victim.

The Committee further notes that section 65 of the Nationality and Borders Act 2022 provides for a temporary residence permit for victims of slavery or trafficking in persons who have obtained a positive conclusive grounds decision (for recovery purposes, seeking compensation, cooperation with the authorities). The permit cannot be granted if the person's need for assistance is capable of being met in a country of origin and it can be revoked when the person is a threat to the public order, or the person has claimed to be a victim in bad faith (sections 54(4) and 65(6)). The Committee also observes that the Government refers to the Illegal Migration Act 2023, according to which individual victims of modern slavery may be disqualified for a temporary permit if they have entered the country illegally (section 1(1) and section 5(1)(c)), unless the victim is cooperating with public authorities regarding an investigation or criminal proceedings (section 22).

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the TUC emphasizes that the Illegal Immigration Act will prevent undocumented victims of forced labour from requesting existing support mechanisms, increasing the risk of their exploitation. In its 2024 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed its concern at the Illegal Immigration Act, which has resulted in the removal of certain protections for potential victims of forced labour. In particular, the United Nations Human Rights Committee is concerned that the new legislation increases the burden of proof when bringing cases before the NRM (CCPR/C/GBR/CO/8).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of forced labour who have benefited from protection and assistance in England and Wales (through the Modern Slavery Victim Care Contract), Scotland and Northern Ireland. It also requests the Government to indicate how many victims of forced labour have been granted temporary permits under Section 65 of the National Borders Act. In this regard, it requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to protect victims who decide to collaborate with the judicial authorities against retaliation. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the type of assistance offered to victims who return to their home country.

Article 4(1). Access to remedies, such as compensation. The Government indicates that victims of forced labour can access compensation and other remedies through both civil and criminal routes. In addition, victims of trafficking in person may receive compensation under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme 2012 (amended) in cases identified by the NRM. According to section 30, the types of payment which may be made to victims under the Scheme include: injury payments, loss of earnings payments and dependency payments. The Committee further notes that, in cases where there is non-compliance with the national minimum wage, the Crown Prosecution Services may commence criminal proceedings under the Modern Slavery Act 2015 to both recover amounts and impose criminal charges. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of trafficking in persons who have been granted compensation under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme 2012 (amended). In this regard, it requests the Government to clarify whether the victim's ability to receive compensation is dependent upon his or her cooperation with authorities.

Article (2)(2)(c) of the Convention. Penalties of unpaid work requirements. For a number of years, the Committee has requested the Government to ensure that prisoners under an obligation to work do not work for the benefit of private entities, unless they have given their formal and informed consent. In its latest comment, the Committee welcomed the Government's statement to the House of Commons to the effect that from June 2021 private entities would no longer be in charge of placing sentenced offenders with providers to perform community work. The Committee notes with interest that from 26 June 2021, in England and Wales, the Probation Service (a statutory criminal justice public service that supervises offenders serving community sentences) no longer outsources any unpaid work provision to a subcontractor. As regards Scotland and Northern Ireland, the Committee notes from the Government's information that no private entity is benefiting from unpaid work by prisoners.

United Republic of Tanzania

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Prosecution and application of effective penalties. Referring to its previous comments on the lack of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties established for the crime of trafficking in persons, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act CAP 432 has been amended by the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendment) Act No. 5 of 2021 and the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendment) Act No. 2 of 2022. It notes with interest that these amendments aim at increasing the penalties of fines and imprisonment for trafficking offences and at removing the option of a fine in lieu of imprisonment, instead imposing the fine in addition to imprisonment.

The Government also indicates that it continues to build the capacity of the law enforcement bodies for effective identification, investigation and prosecution of trafficking in persons-related cases, and that a total of 1,650 officers have benefited from such activities. Ultimately and as a result of other counter-trafficking measures taken by the Government, a total of 291 cases of trafficking in persons have been investigated, of which 31 involving 82 traffickers were taken to court, and 22 traffickers were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement bodies to detect and investigate cases of trafficking for both labour and sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations carried out, prosecutions initiated and convictions handed down, in particular pursuant to the revised penalties under the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2008.

2. National action plan. Implementation and assessment. In response to its previous comments concerning the measures taken to combat trafficking in persons, the Government states in its report that the National Action Plan (NAP) 2018–21 as well as the NAP 2021–24 have been successfully implemented, and indicates that the following was carried out in this regard: (i) institutionalization of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Secretariat within the Ministry of Home Affairs and expansion of its operation in Tanzania Mainland and Zanzibar; (ii) establishment of cross border collaboration forums on trafficking in persons-related matters between Tanzania and Malawi and Tanzania and Mozambique; (iii) public awareness activities on counter trafficking in persons; (iv) joint operations with law enforcement agencies to disrupt trafficking routes and networks; and (v) implementation of the Anti-trafficking in Persons Act in Zanzibar.

The Government also indicates that pursuant to Regulations Nos 27 and 28 on the establishment of centres for protection and assistance for victims of trafficking, 11 safe houses have been registered and a total of 503 victims of trafficking were provided assistance (accommodation, food, medical and rehabilitation services including psychosocial counselling and life training skills, free legal support, and referral and reintegration services).

The Committee notes that, in addition to the usual strategic objectives of prevention, protection, prosecution and partnerships, the NAP 2021–24 provides for the monitoring and evaluation of the effectiveness of the strategic actions on the basis of the action plan implementation matrix. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation and monitoring of the NAP 2021–24 and to indicate the challenges faced and results achieved in the areas of prevention and protection of victims, as identified in the monitoring and evaluation plan. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether a new action plan has been developed based on these findings.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) and (2). Imposition of compulsory labour for economic development and public purposes. For many years, the Committee has been expressing its concern at the institutionalized and systematic compulsion to work established in the national Constitution in contradiction with the Convention. The Committee has referred to:

- article 25(1) of the Constitution, which provides that every person has the duty to participate in lawful and productive work and to strive to attain the individual and group production targets required or set by law;
- article 25(3)(d) of the Constitution, which provides that no work shall be considered as forced labour if such work forms part of: (i) compulsory national service in accordance with the law; or (ii) the national endeavour at the mobilization of human resources for the enhancement of society and the national economy and to ensure development and national productivity.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the 2013 draft Constitution did not reach the referendum stage and that the country is still in the process of determining the internal procedures and arrangements for resuming or commencing anew the constitutional review process. The Committee recalls in this regard that it drew the Government's attention to the fact that the draft Constitution of 2013 appeared to contain wording similar to article 25 of the current Constitution, and did not address the issues raised by the Committee. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the constitutional revision procedure will be undertaken without delay so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention by limiting the scope of exceptions to the definition of forced labour to those provided for in Article 2(2)(a)–(e) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political views. 1. Media Service Act. The Committee previously noted that persons sentenced to imprisonment are under the obligation to perform work (section 61 of the Prison Act and section 50 of the Offenders Education Act of 1980 of Zanzibar); and that several provisions of the Media Services Act No. 12 of 2016, the violation of which is punishable with penalties of imprisonment, are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to application as a means of punishment for the expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. These provisions include:

- section 50, which provides that any person who makes use by any means of a media service for the purpose of publishing information which intentionally or recklessly falsified in a manner which, or any statement the content of which, threatens the interests of defence, public order, the economic interests of the country, public morality or public health, commits an offence and is punishable by three to five years' imprisonment.
- section 51, which provides that any persons who imports, publishes, sells, offers for sale, distributes or produces any publication or any extract of it, the importation of which is prohibited, commits an offence and is punishable by three to five years' imprisonment.
- sections 52 and 53, which provide that any act, speech or publication with a seditious intention, including the sales, distribution, reproduction and importation of such publication, is punishable by three to five years' imprisonment. The possession of such publication is punishable by two to five years' imprisonment.
- section 54, which provides that any person who publishes any false statement, rumour or report which is likely to cause fear and alarm to the public or to disturb the public peace commits an offence and is punishable by four to six years' imprisonment.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report concerning the amendments made to the Media Services Act through the Written Law (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act No. 1 of 2023. The Committee notes that the amendments made to sections 50, 51, 53 and 54 of the Act were aimed at decreasing the period of imprisonment bringing it to a minimum of one year and to a maximum of five years. It observes however that the scope of the above provisions remains the same and that prison sentences are still applicable in case of their infringement.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that the range of activities which must be protected from punishment involving compulsory labour, as per Article 1(a) of the Convention, comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views and which may also be affected by measures of political coercion. However, the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence; but sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 302 and 303). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 50 to 54 of the Media Services Act No. 12 of 2016 in such a way as to ensure that persons expressing political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system cannot be subject to penalties of imprisonment (which involve compulsory labour), whether by restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on any prosecutions conducted or court decisions handed down under these provisions, specifying the penalties imposed and the facts that led to such convictions.

2. Non-Governmental Organizations Act. The Committee recalls that section 35 of the Non-Governmental Organizations Act of 2002 provides for penalties of a fine or imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for a term not exceeding one year, or both, for the offences of, inter alia, operating a non-governmental organization without obtaining registration as required under section 13(3) of the Act. The Committee notes the Government's information that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that the above-mentioned provision of the Non-Governmental Organizations Act is not applied in a manner which could result in the imposition of penalties of imprisonment, involving compulsory labour, to persons who hold or express political views or views opposed to the established system.

The Committee notes that in their press release of 17 October 2024, several Special Rapporteurs of the special procedures of the United Nations Human Rights Council indicated that the Tanzanian Government had reportedly utilized the Non-Governmental Organizations Act to arbitrarily deregister and restrict activities of civil society organizations.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that section 35 of the Non-Governmental Organizations Act of 2002 is not used to impose penalties involving compulsory labour on persons who hold or express views opposed to the established system, and to provide information on the number of persons prosecuted and convicted under this provision and the penalties applied.

Article 1(c). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to section 11 of the First Schedule to the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act as amended up to 2016, any employee of a specified authority who causes pecuniary loss to his or her employer or damage to his or her employer's property, by any wilful act or omission, negligence or misconduct, or failure to take reasonable care or to discharge his or her duties in a reasonable manner, may be punished with imprisonment, which involves an obligation to work.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act of 2016 has been repealed by the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act Cap. 200 of 2022. It notes with regret, however, that the Act of 2022 retains similar provisions under section 10(1) of the First Schedule as "economic offences", which is punishable with imprisonment as per section 60(2) of the Act. The Committee therefore once again recalls that penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline are incompatible with the Convention. The protection granted by the Convention does not apply, however, to cases of breaches of labour discipline that impair or are liable to endanger the operation of essential services, or where life or health are in danger.

Observing that it has been raising this issue for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act so as to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour shall be imposed for the offences set forth under section 10(1) of the First Schedule to the Act.

The Committee notes that the Government has indicated that it will seek the technical assistance of the Office on a number of issues. The Committee hopes that ILO technical assistance will be provided to contribute to ensure compliance with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 26 November 2024, alleging the use of compulsory prison labour to further economic development and as a means of racial discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide a reply to these observations.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour for participation in strikes. Regarding the provisions of the North Carolina General Statutes previously noted by the Committee (article 12, section 95-98.1 and section 95-99; section 15A-1340.11 and section 15A-1349.23 of the Criminal Procedure Act), which hold individuals participating in illegal strikes liable to "community punishment" and, upon a second conviction, to imprisonment potentially involving compulsory labour (community service or other work assignments), the Government reiterates in its report that no individual has ever been convicted of participating in an unlawful public-sector strike, according to State court records. Furthermore, the Government emphasizes that even in the unlikely event of such a conviction, North Carolina law would not require a judge to impose work in violation of the Convention, and judges would retain discretion to impose only a fine.

The Committee notes the Government's statements, but recalls that the legal basis that would permit the imposition of labour on a person sentenced to imprisonment for participation in strikes still exists, contrary to Article 1(d) of the Convention, which prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes.

The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the North Carolina General Statutes into conformity with the Convention, thus ensuring that the legislation is aligned with indicated practice, by reviewing sections 95–98.1 and 95–99 so as to ensure that penalties involving compulsory labour (through the Community Service Work Programme or during imprisonment) cannot be imposed for participation in a strike.

Article 1(e). Racial discrimination in the exaction of compulsory prison labour. For years, the Committee has taken note of the significant overrepresentation of African Americans and Latinos/Hispanics within prison populations, and of the fact that prison sentences normally involve an obligation to perform labour. The Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to identify and reduce racial and ethnic disparities in the criminal justice system to ensure that punishments involving compulsory labour are not meted out more severely to certain racial and ethnic groups.

The Committee notes the Government's reiteration of its view that the broader questions of possible discrimination in the criminal justice system are outside the scope of the Convention. The Government, however, refers to recent data published by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, showing that from 2011 to 2021, the total correctional population of black adults declined by 28 per cent, representing a higher percentage than the decline in incarceration of both white adults (20 per cent) and Hispanic adults (21 per cent). The Government also refers to the Executive Order issued in 2022 on Advancing Effective, Accountable Policing and Criminal Justice Practices to Enhance Public Trust and Public Safety, which requires an interagency strategic plan "with particular attention to reducing racial, ethnic and other disparities in the Nation's criminal justice system …". The Government also indicates that the Department of Justice (DOJ) invests in comprehensive research focused on racial and ethnic disparities in the criminal justice system. In 2022, the DOJ's Office of Justice Programs announced that it would award US$57 million to support justice system reforms and racial equity.

The Committee also observes that, according to the latest statistics on imprisonment rates from the DOJ, the 2022 imprisonment rate for black persons (1,196 per 100,000 adult US residents) was more than 13 times the rate for Asian, Native Hawaiian, or Other Pacific Islander persons (88 per 100,000); 5 times the rate for white persons (229 per 100,000); almost 2 times the rate for Hispanic persons (603 per 100,000); and 1.1 times the rate for American Indian or Alaska Native persons (1,042 per 100,000).

The Committee also notes the information contained in the 2024 report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, following her visit to the United States. Among other concerns regarding racial disparities within the law enforcement and criminal justice system, the Special Rapporteur reveals that those from marginalized groups who are convicted of crimes are often more likely to be sentenced to excessive custodial sentences, including life without the possibility of parole. The Special Rapporteur also received reports of poorly paid or unpaid forced labour by prisoners, who are disproportionately from racially marginalized groups, as well as reports of incarceration still being used to extract free or very low-cost labour from people of African descent. She further expressed concern about the racial disparities in the use of solitary confinement, including to punish persons who refuse hazardous prison labour (A/HRC/56/68/Add.1).

While it takes due note of the measures adopted by the Government with a view to addressing racial inequalities in the criminal justice system, the Committee observes that penal punishment is still meted out more severely to certain groups defined in racial, social or national terms, not only as regards the higher percentage of persons from marginalized groups being convicted, but also as regards the severity of the sentences applied to them. As their punishment involves compulsory labour, the situation remains under the purview of Article 1(e) of the Convention.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to pursue its measures to identify and address the root causes of the racial and ethnic disparities in the criminal justice system to ensure that compulsory labour is not meted out more severely to convicted persons pertaining to certain racial and ethnic groups. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved in this regard.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Institutional framework. With reference to its previous comments on the measures taken under Act No. 19.643, issuing provisions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons and amending the Penal Code, the Government indicates in its report that the National Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons (CNTE) approved the Second Plan to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons 2022–24. The Second Plan includes among its principal objectives: (i) making progress with the regulation of Act No. 19.643; (ii) broadening institutional capacities for the detection, denunciation and provision of assistance in potential situations of trafficking; (iii) strengthening the coordination between the interinstitutional response system and the justice system; (iv) improving the capacity of the interinstitutional response system; (v) gaining more in-depth knowledge of the phenomenon of the trafficking and exploitation of persons; and (vi) promoting the professionalization of public officials and other actors concerned. The Committee also takes due note of the detailed biennial report 2021–22 of the CNTE, which includes information on the implementation of various activities to strengthen the skills of public officials and the approval of a Guide on interinstitutional action in situations of the trafficking and exploitation of persons, which is a tool for coordination among the authorities responsible for the detection and identification of potential situations of trafficking and exploitation. The process is also under way of the evaluation of the impact and results of models for the support and protection of victims and the preparation of a national diagnosis of trafficking in persons.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, within the context of the implementation of the objectives of the Second National Plan of Action to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons 2021–24. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in: issuing regulations under Act No. 19.643; strengthening the coordination between the interinstitutional response system and the justice system; the evaluation of the implementation of systems for the support and protection of victims; and the difficulties identified. Moreover, noting that the National Plan includes among its objectives promoting greater in-depth knowledge of the phenomenon of trafficking, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any studies undertaken on the characteristics of trafficking in persons (victims, sectors, regions and so forth) and its possible causes.

2. Protection of victims. In reply to the Committee's request concerning the measures adopted for the protection and compensation of victims, the Government indicates that, through the National Service for Women, in cases of trafficking for sexual and/or labour exploitation, psychosocial support, advice and legal representation is provided to women victims of trafficking in the 19 departments of the country. The Committee also notes that, according to the Interinstitutional Action Guide for Situations of Trafficking, when the General Labour Inspectorate receives a complaint involving a situation of trafficking, coordination with other institutions is applied immediately for the provision of assistance to potential victims. According to the information of the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES), the team to address situations of trafficking in Montevideo dealt with 58 cases of trafficking in 2021, 75 in 2022 and 48 in 2023. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing support and protection to victims of trafficking in persons, with an indication of the type of assistance provided and the number of victims who have benefited.

3. Prosecution and application of penal sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that various training and awareness-raising activities have been carried out for public officials in bodies that are in the CNTE, and for other state bodies that may be operating in frontier posts or are in contact with people who are vulnerable to trafficking. The Government adds that the number of prosecutors engaged in the investigation of the crime of trafficking in persons has been increased. A working mechanism has been established between the Ministry of the Interior and the Victims and Witnesses Unit of the Office of the Public Prosecutor to improve protection strategies for complainants. The Government further indicates that in cases in which the General Labour Inspectorate receives complaints that contain any indications of a potential situation of trafficking, the Inspectorate coordinates with other institutions for the provision of assistance to any victims and they are referred to the Office of the Public Prosecutor to initiative any corresponding judicial action.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations in 2023, drew attention to the limited financial resources allocated for the implementation of Act No. 19.643, and the limited measures to prosecute and punish perpetrators of trafficking in persons (CEDAW/C/URY/CO/10). Further, in its concluding observations in 2023, the United Nations Committee on the Protection of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families referred to the increase in cases of trafficking of migrant women, especially in domestic service (CMW/C/URY/CO/2).

The Committee notes this information, while also noting the lack of information on the number of investigations, current prosecutions and penalties imposed in relation to the crime of trafficking in persons for sexual and/or labour exploitation. The Committee therefore requests the Government to renew its efforts to strengthen the capacity to identify and investigate situations of trafficking in persons, including in domestic service, and to prosecute those responsible. In this regard, it once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions initiated and completed in relation to cases of trafficking in persons (section 78 of the Migration Act), specifying the number of cases in which penal sanctions have been imposed on the perpetrators. Lastly, it requests the Government to indicate the number of cases in which the labour inspection services have detected potential situations of trafficking in persons and have coordinated their investigations with the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

Article 2(2)(c). Work by convicted prisoners for private entities. The Committee previously requested the Government to clarify the relationship between section 41 of Legislative Decree No. 14.470 of 1975, under the terms of which work by prisoners is compulsory, and Decree No. 225/006 (section 65), which provides that, before commencing any type of work, prisoners have to give their consent in writing. In reply, the Government reports the adoption of Decree No. 407 of 2021, issuing the Regulations respecting the serving of sentences through work or studies, which repealed Decree No. 225/006.

The Committee notes that section 40 of the new Regulations reiterates that prison labour shall be compulsory for all convicts and failure to perform the work shall be subject to disciplinary measures. Section 44 also provides that prisoners may benefit from a special labour relationship with private institutions for the performance of work within and outside the prison, under the terms of the agreements concluded between private enterprises and prisons. The work performed by prisoners under this labour relationship shall be paid.

The Committee further notes that the Regulations have not retained the provision requiring prisoners to give their consent in writing before commencing any type of work (section 65 of repealed Decree No. 225/006). Instead, section 11 provides that each prison shall draw up a list of prisoners who are registered to perform such work, on which prisoners interested in performing work may have their names included. In this regard, the Government indicates that it is usually specified in the agreements that the prisons, based on prior selection, offer enterprises a list of prisoners who volunteer to work for them. It adds that the various enterprises and institutions select prisoners from this "labour exchange" to perform the work set out in the agreements.

The Committee also notes that, according to a report on the situation of the contract for public–private participation of the Punta de Rieles prison "PPL Unit No. 1" for the period July–December 2022 (available on the official website of the Ministry of Economy and Finance), under the terms of that contract, 107 prisoners are engaged in work in toilets, kitchen work, food distribution, internal logistics and stores, gardening, outside maintenance and building work in authorized areas.

The Committee observes that both section 41 of Legislative Decree No. 14.470 and section 40 of the Regulations issued by Decree No. 407 of 2021 provide that work is compulsory for prisoners. From a reading of section 11 of the Regulations, which provides for a list of persons registered for work, it is not clear that the prisoner formally gives prior consent to the performance of work for private enterprises under the agreements concluded between prisons and these enterprises.

In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall that prison labour for private entities is not incompatible with the Convention only where the necessary safeguards exist to ensure that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily by giving their free, formal and informed consent and without being subject to pressure or the menace of any penalty, including the loss of a right or a privilege (advantage), and when such work is performed under conditions approximating a free labour relationship (see the (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 279 and 291).

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in both law and practice, prisoners give their free, formal and informed consent to the performance of work for private entities, within the framework of contracts concluded between the private enterprise and the prisons or agreements concluded in the context of public–private partnerships for the development of infrastructure or the provision of related services in the prison context. The Committee requests the Government to provide examples of such contracts and agreements.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF), received on 8 October 2020, and of the Government's reply to these observations, received on 8 February 2021. The Committee also takes note of the observations of the IUF of 31 August 2023.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Mobilization and use of labour for purposes of economic development in agriculture (cotton production). The Committee previously took due note of the measures taken by the Government and their impact on reducing the number of cases of forced labour in cotton harvesting. It noted however that while a vast majority of pickers were not in forced labour, there were still a considerable number of cases of forced labour (6.8 per cent or 170,000 people) mainly because the legacy of the centrally planned agriculture and economy (centrally set quotas) was still conducive to the exaction of forced labour and because the uneven implementation of national policies, especially at the local level, remained a challenge.

The Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report, that over recent years, wide-ranging reforms have been enacted in Uzbekistan and measures have continued to be implemented to eradicate forced labour, including improvements to the national legislation and its implementation in practice, creating greater public awareness of the negative impacts of forced labour through various seminars and training sessions, and increased active collaboration with international organizations. In March 2020, the President of Uzbekistan signed Decree No. PP-4633 to abolish the state order for cotton and committed to abandoning state regulation of the cotton production quota, pricing and the compulsory purchase of cotton to take effect as of the 2020 harvest.

The Government indicates, in its report, that joint efforts with the ILO since 2013, including through third-party monitoring of the prohibition on child labour and forced labour in the cotton industry, have led to the development of substantive measures in all key areas, with the result that Uzbekistan has succeeded in ridding itself of systemic child and forced labour. The Government further states that, in light of the measures taken, on 10 March 2022 the Cotton Campaign coalition announced the end of the cotton boycott of Uzbekistan.

The Government further indicates that monitoring of the cotton harvest has continued with the intention of preventing forced labour in the cotton growing industry, as well as other sectors of the economy. In 2021, the last ILO third-party monitoring of child and forced labour during the cotton harvest took place, which found that Uzbek cotton was free from systematic forced labour and that all provinces and districts had very few or no forced labour cases, with about 1 per cent of cotton pickers being subjected to direct or perceived forms of coercion.

According to the Government, systematic monitoring was conducted in 2022 in all regions of the country to preserve labour relations and counter forced labour and child labour, through four distinct mechanisms: (1) independent monitoring of the cotton harvest by civil society representatives; (2) oversight of relevant departments and assessment of conditions in various clusters and farming enterprises by the Senate of the Oliy Majlis; (3) national monitoring by the Federation of Trade Unions (FTU) of various entities, including farming enterprises and local authorities; and (4) complaints about forced labour and labour rights violations submitted to the National Labour Inspectorate, mostly via hotlines and social media. The Committee notes that while no evidence of systematic forced labour was found by these monitoring mechanisms, the investigations of the National Labour Inspectorate led to the imposition of fines amounting to 361.5 million soum on 26 officials for facilitating forced labour (in accordance with section 51 of the Administrative Liability Code) and the prosecution of 15 others for labour law violations, including for failing to ensure decent working conditions.

The Committee further notes that, in collaboration with the ILO, the Government is continuing to promote decent work principles in Uzbekistan, improve workplace environments and strengthen the mechanisms that protect citizens' labour rights, particularly through the 2021–2025 Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) and the new project, Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (FPRW) in the Cotton Supply Chain (INDITEX) (2023–2026). The latter aims to enhance knowledge of cotton growing communities, district branches of constituents, farmers' unions and civil society organizations concerned on the five Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, and support the independent monitoring process of the cotton harvest within the ILO's mandate for the elimination of forced labour and child labour in the country.

The Committee takes due note of the measures taken by the Government. It notes, however, that in its observations of 2020 and 2023, the IUF points to remaining challenges for the complete eradication of forced labour, including the forced mobilization of pickers to work on private cluster farms. The IUF indicates that, since the agricultural sector's privatization began in 2018, the Government has introduced "agricultural clusters" which are vertically integrated private companies responsible for processing crops. While the Government, in its reply to the IUF's observations of February 2021, shares information on the functioning of the cluster method and measures taken to improve working conditions in farm enterprises and clusters, including the prohibition for local authorities and officials against interfering in the operation of clusters, the IUF claims that these clusters remain closely aligned with state policies and are often controlled or influenced by Government officials. While farmers can technically grow their own cotton outside of the cluster system, they lack access to the low-interest government credit that is essential for cotton production, as this financial support is only available to agricultural clusters. Moreover, due to time constraints and their vulnerable position at the start of the year, farmers often sign blank contracts with clusters before preparing their land at the beginning of the year, with the price for their cotton only revealed at the end of the year, after the cotton has been delivered, and leaving farmers at risk of receiving less money than they spent on production, deepening their financial vulnerability. Farmers also have limited bargaining power, as they are bound by geography to specific clusters and face restrictions on forming associations.

The Committee also takes note of the observations of the IUF according to which, during the 2022 cotton harvest, monitors found cases of forced labour and extortion, especially in areas with low populations and during the later stages of the harvest when recruiting voluntary workers became more challenging. According to the IUF, the State continues to own all agricultural land in Uzbekistan and the Government maintains oversight of the organization of the harvest with de facto quotas, now called "district forecasts", still in place and local administrations (hokimiyats) continue to pressure neighbourhood councils (mahallas) and farmers to meet these quotas. The IUF reports that coercion to pick cotton intensified in October 2022 as the cotton supply dwindled, reducing pickers' earnings. Hokims ordered public employees to work in the fields in districts struggling to meet production targets or lacking enough workers. Many pickers indicated they would face negative consequences, such as issues with their mahalla or workplace, if they refused. Employees from hokimiyats, schools, hospitals and other public institutions also reported being forced to pick cotton.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts, including through its cooperation with the ILO and the social partners, to ensure the complete eradication of forced labour during the cotton harvest. In this regard, it encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the DWCP and INDITEX project and to address the root causes leading to the coercion of pickers to pick cotton, including the issues created by the cluster system and the pressure exercised by local authorities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to this end and the specific results achieved, including the number of inspections conducted and penalties applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2007)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Work exacted in drug rehabilitation centres. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under the 2012 Law on Handling Administrative Violations (sections 95, 96, 103 and 104), drug addicts who have reached the age of 18 can be sent upon decision of a district-level People's Court to compulsory drug rehabilitation centres for a period of 12 to 24 months to receive medical treatment, perform labour and pursue general education. It noted that Decree No. 221/2013/ND-CP (as amended by Decree No. 136/2016/ND-CP) regulates the labour conditions for persons treated in compulsory drug rehabilitation centres and prohibits exploitation of their labour force.

In reply to the Committee's request, the Government indicates that, from January 2020 to Decembre 2022, public drug rehabilitation centres provided rehabilitation for 63,253 drug addicts. At the end of February 2023, a total of 23,185 persons were undergoing compulsory rehabilitation in public drug rehabilitation centres, and 3,603 engaged in voluntary rehabilitation. A total of 2,579 persons stayed in the establishment waiting for the confirmation of their drug addiction status. The types of work performed by persons subject to compulsory drug rehabilitation include cooking, ornamental work, raising poultry and production of unburnt bricks. The Government also refers to the adoption of Decree No. 116/2021/ND-CP (which replaces Decree No. 221/2013/ND-CP and Decree No. 136/2016/ND-CP). Pursuant to section 25 of that Decree, rehabilitation labour in drug rehabilitation centres aims to help drug addicts improve their physical and mental health, enhance their sense of organization and discipline at work, and increase their independence and awareness of the value of labour. Drug rehabilitation centres that organize rehabilitation labour or their employer partners must ensure compliance with the labour law (section 61).

The Committee further notes the adoption of the Law on Prevention and Control of Narcotic Substance in 2021. According to section 28 of this Law, rehabilitation measures for drug addicts consist of voluntary rehabilitation (which can take place in families, communities or rehabilitation centres) and compulsory rehabilitation in public drug rehabilitation centres. Therapeutic work is included as one of the rehabilitation measures that must be carried out by persons undergoing compulsory drug rehabilitation. The Government clarifies that drug addicts engaged in voluntary rehabilitation do not have to perform rehabilitation labour. The Committee also observes that, pursuant to section 32 of the law, persons above 18 years of age who are subject to the administrative remedy of compulsory rehabilitation in rehabilitation centres include those who: (i) fail to register for, fail to undergo or stop voluntary rehabilitation without permission; (ii) are undergoing voluntary rehabilitation and are found to have used a narcotic substance illegally; (iii) are dependent on opioids and fail to register for, fail to undergo or stop opioid substitution therapy without permission or are forced to terminate opioid substitution therapy after committing a violation against regulations on dependence treatment; and (iv) relapse while subject to post-rehabilitation management.

In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall that work imposed in drug rehabilitation centres under compulsory rehabilitation can only be excluded from the scope of the Convention if it meets the requirements set forth in Article 2(2)(c), namely: (i) it should be imposed on a person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law; (ii) it must be subject to the supervision and control of a public authority and; (iii) the person shall not be hired to or placed at the disposal of private entities. No compulsory labour may be imposed unless the person concerned has been found guilty of an offence and as a result of a due process of law. This implies respect for the guarantees necessary for defence and a clear definition of the offence (see the 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 52).

The Committee observes that in the present case, it is not clear whether the situations enumerated under section 32 of the Law on Prevention and Control of Narcotic Substance constitute offences and whether the imposition of compulsory drug rehabilitation (that involves compulsory therapeutic work) constitutes a penalty for that offence. Moreover, from the reading of sections 40 to 43 of Decree No. 116/2021/ND-CP, the Committee understands that the request for the application of the remedy of consignment into a compulsory drug rehabilitation centre is made by the head of Division of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs who shall prepare and transfer the dossier of the person concerned to the district-level People's Court for decision. However, it is not clear whether the decision taken by the Court is the result of a court trial in which the drug addict is a party and can exercise his or her right to defence.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify whether the imposition of therapeutic work as part of compulsory drug rehabilitation, under section 32 of the Law on Prevention and Control of Narcotic Substance, is the result of a conviction for the commission of an offence, and whether such a conviction is rendered by a court of law following a trial. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate in which cases a drug addict can undergo voluntary rehabilitation and in which cases that person is obliged to undergo compulsory drug rehabilitation. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide examples of judicial decisions imposing compulsory drug rehabilitation in the cases prescribed under section 32 of the 2021 Law on Prevention and Control of Narcotic Substance.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. Trafficking in persons. 1. Institutional framework. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Prime Minister issued Decision No. 193/QD-TTg approving another Action Programme to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons 2021–2025. In this context, the Government has adopted various implementation plans and inter-sectoral regulations, including in relation to prevention, investigation and support of victims. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Public Security is leading the review of the Law on Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken under the Action Programme to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons 2021–2025, both at the national and provincial level, as well as information on any evaluation of the implementation of this programme, including in relation to progress achieved and challenges identified. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on trafficking in persons, if possible, disaggregated by gender and economic sector.

2. Protection of victims. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Labour has issued a Plan to support victims of trafficking for the period 2021–2025. In all provinces, a network of collaborators has been established at district and community levels for receiving and supporting victims in integrating into the community. Victims of trafficking are provided with support for temporary accommodation, psychosocial counselling and medical assistance, and can receive subsidies for meals and transportation. In addition, victims can benefit from vocational training, job placement and general education measures. The Committee further notes that, from January 2019 to the first half of 2023, 592 persons were recognized as victims of trafficking and received support. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the early detection and effective protection of victims of trafficking in persons, who have benefited from protection and reintegration measures, including Vietnamese victims of trafficking in persons abroad, as well as on measures adopted to facilitate their voluntary repatriation.

3. Prosecution and application of penal sanctions. The Committee notes the adoption of Resolution No. 02/2019/NQ-HDTP by the Council of Judges of the Supreme People's Court, containing guidelines for the application of section 150 of the Criminal Code which criminalizes trafficking in persons for sexual slavery and coercive labour. The Government indicates that, from January 2019 to December 2022, People's Courts accepted 396 first-instance cases related to trafficking in persons and other related crimes. Out of 205 cases brought under section 150 of the Criminal Code, 197 were handled and tried. Courts sentenced 23 defendants to imprisonment for over 15 years, 157 for 7 to 15 years, 117 for 3 to 7 years, and 20 for 3 years or less. The Committee further notes that the Council of Judges of the Supreme People's Court has organized training to guide the application of section 150 of the Criminal Code. A workshop was organized in collaboration with INTERPOL on collection of evidence in investigations concerning trafficking in persons. Training courses have also been conducted in collaboration with ASEAN and UNDP to strengthen capacities of prosecutors in the investigation of trafficking cases. The Committee requests the Government to continue strengthening the capacity of law enforcement bodies to identify and investigate properly cases of trafficking in persons for both labour and sexual exploitation so that alleged perpetrators can be brought to justice and convictions imposed under section 150 of the Criminal Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions concerning cases of trafficking in persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zambia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. National action plan. Implementation and assessment. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government adopted a National Policy on Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants and its implementation plan in 2022. As pointed out in the National Policy, Zambia is facing both internal and transnational trafficking, as a source, transit and destination country for victims. The country has reported an increase in cases of trafficking, including of women and young men.

The Committee notes that the National Policy is based on four pillars, namely prevention, protection of victims, prosecution of offenders, and partnerships. It sets four objectives: (i) to reduce the incidences of trafficking in persons by 2030; (ii) to enhance the capacity of the criminal justice system to investigate, identify and prosecute trafficking in persons cases by 2026; (iii) to strengthen national capacity to provide protection services and care for victims, witnesses and potential victims of trafficking by 2030; and (iv) to strengthen national, regional and international coordination and cooperation to curb trafficking in persons by 2025. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to implement the National Policy on Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants and achieve its objectives. It also requests the Government to indicate if any assessment of the implementation of the National Policy has been undertaken, specifying the results achieved, the difficulties encountered and the measures contemplated as a consequence.

2. Identification and protection of victims. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the steps taken by the Ministry of Community Development and Social Services (MCDSS) to provide protection and assistance to victims of trafficking, including through six places of safety. The Government indicates in its report that the MCDSS handled a total number of 2,782 cases of trafficking between January 2020 and June 2023, involving both child and adult victims, including 80 cases in the first quarter of 2023. Victims were provided with basic needs such as clothing, food, psychosocial counselling and shelter at places of safety. The Government points out that the Anti-Human Trafficking Fund, designed for the rehabilitation and reintegration of victims, is not yet operational. The Committee also notes that, according to information contained in the 2022 National Policy on Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants, identification of trafficked persons in the country continues to be a challenge, the Government has developed a National Referral Mechanism, which is supported by the Minimum Standard Guidelines on the Protection of Victims of Trafficking, but that the Guidelines are not comprehensive in the manner and nature of support.

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts and take measures to ensure the effective identification of victims of trafficking for both sexual and labour exploitation, and to provide them with appropriate and adequate protection and assistance, including through the National Referral Mechanism and its Guidelines and the effective functioning of the Anti-Human Trafficking Fund. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of victims who have been identified, indicating how many of them received assistance and the type of assistance granted.

3. Prosecution and application of penalties. In relation to the action of the National Prosecution Authority (NPA) to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials, the Government indicates that the NPA is pursuing its activities to build the capacity of prosecutors and investigators in relation to transnational crime, including trafficking in persons, in partnership with a number of regional and international bodies. These activities include: training of prosecutors, state advocates and investigators; the exchange of information and sharing of best practices between countries in the region; and the development and updating of manuals on trafficking in persons for prosecutors and officials. The Government also indicates that, with a view to facilitating evidence-gathering and contributing to the effectiveness of prosecutions, the NPA has operationalized the Witness Management Fund, set up to provide logistical support to witnesses and victims called to testify in all cases prosecuted by the NPA, including trafficking in persons.

The Government also states that the NPA has a presence in all ten provinces of the country and works to strengthen coordination and cooperation with key stakeholders, such as police investigators and the judiciary, in the fight against trafficking in persons. The NPA is now part of the National Committee on Human Trafficking, through the appointment of trafficking in persons National Focal Point Persons to represent the NPA, and takes part in the subcommittee on prosecution. In addition, assistant Focal Point Persons have been appointed in all ten provinces, to develop harmonized approaches in the prosecution of trafficking in persons and to facilitate the flow of information among provinces. The Committee notes that the incorporation of several members in the National Committee, including the NPA and the judiciary, was made possible through the Anti-Human Trafficking (Amendment) Act, 2022. The Committee further notes that this Amendment Act establishes the Anti-Human Trafficking Department, within the Ministry of Home Affairs, responsible for the administration of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008.

The Committee notes that, in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern about reports of trafficking in women, including for forced domestic work and sexual exploitation, and about the low number of investigations, convictions and sanctioning of perpetrators (CCPR/C/ZMB/CO/4).

The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials in order for them to identify, promptly investigate and prosecute cases of trafficking, with emphasis given to the sectors where women are victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard as well as on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed under the Anti-Human Trafficking Act. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Anti-Human Trafficking Department to ensure better knowledge and implementation of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act.

Article 2(2)(a). National service obligations. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend or repeal the National Service Act, 1971, which permits compulsory national service of a non-military character. Under section 3 of the Act, the functions of the Zambian National Service include training citizens to serve the Republic and the employment of service members in tasks of national importance. Section 7 provides that citizens between the ages of 18 and 35 shall be liable to have their names in the National Service register and may be called upon to serve.

The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that the National Service Act, 1971, is in the process of being reviewed. The Committee is bound to note with regret the absence of measures to bring the provisions of the above-mentioned legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee recalls that according to Article 2(2)(a), work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws is excluded from the scope of the Convention only when it is of a purely military character. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the Act so as to limit the work exacted as part of the Zambian National Service, work which is of a purely military nature, in compliance with Article 2(2)(a). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of citizens who have been called to perform compulsory national service, as well as on the nature of the work to which they are assigned.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1998)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2019)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Zimbabwe of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Protocol, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. National policy. The Committee notes that, according to the ITUC, human trafficking is still taking place in the country, including through the abduction of adults and children. The ITUC also indicates that little progress has been made in the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act since its adoption in 2014.The ITUC further observes that there is still a lack of awareness on the issue of trafficking in persons, as well as limited policies and programmes in place to assist and protect victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes in this regard the Government's information, in its report, that a new National Action Plan (NAP) to combat human trafficking was launched in July 2023, for the period 2023 to 2028. The Committee also notes the Government's information that an Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC) was established to ensure the coherent and effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2014. The IMC is subdivided into the four thematic pillars of prevention, prosecution, protection and partnerships.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons and requests it to provide information on the action of the IMC and on the specific measures taken to ensure the proper implementation of the NAP 2023–2028 and of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2014. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard as well as on the assessment of the implementation of the NAP, indicating the results achieved and the challenges encountered.

2. Identification and protection of victims. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the protection pillar of the IMC subcommittee has provided repatriation and reintegration services to 107 victims who were trafficked to countries in the Middle East (104 women and 3 men). The victims were given psychosocial support and reintegration packages, and follow-up visits were undertaken to supervise the progress of their reintegration. The Government further indicates that it has established two Migrant Resource Centres in Harare and Bulawayo, the major functions of which are to raise awareness of human trafficking and combat unethical and unfair recruitment by traffickers.

The Committee further notes that Part III of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2014, mandates the Minister responsible for social services to ensure that at least one centre for victims of trafficking is established in each province. Among other things, these centres must secure the safety of victims from any harm by their traffickers, and offer services such as counselling, rehabilitation, reintegration and care.

The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure adequate identification and protection of victims of trafficking for both labour and sexual exploitation, and to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including on assistance and repatriation of victims. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the progress made in establishing the centres for victims of trafficking in each province of the country, as envisaged under the Trafficking in Persons Act, as well as on the number of victims of trafficking who have benefited from protection, rehabilitation and reintegration services provided by these centres.

3. Prosecution and application of penalties. The Committee notes the Government's information that various awareness-raising campaigns supported by the Ministry of Information have increased public awareness on human trafficking and resulted in the public giving tips to law enforcement bodies. This has in turn led to an increase in the prosecution of offenders. The Government indicates that 15 offenders were prosecuted and 4 convicted and sentenced to prison sentences ranging from 36 months to 70 years.

The Committee requests the Government to continue strengthening the capacity of law enforcement bodies to effectively identify, investigate and prosecute cases of trafficking in persons, including through measures aimed at enhancing their skills and knowledge and improving their ability to proactively detect cases of trafficking. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the number of cases of trafficking in persons, for both sexual and labour exploitation, that have been detected and investigated by the competent authorities, along with the number and nature of convictions and penalties imposed under the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2014.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1). Legislation concerning vagrancy. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of certain sections of the Vagrancy Act (Cap. 10:25) and observed that these provisions were worded in such general terms as to lend themselves to application as a means of indirect compulsion to work (sections 2(a) and (b) and 7(1)). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Vagrancy Act will be repealed.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the Vagrancy Act will be repealed or amended, to remove from the national legislation any provisions whose application have the consequence of compelling persons to work or to limit such provisions to situations where the persons concerned disturb public order or tranquillity or engage in unlawful activities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to a number of provisions of the national legislation allowing for the imposition of penal sanctions involving compulsory labour and expressed concern about their continued use as a punishment for the expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Both the Committee and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference, in June 2021, urged the Government to repeal or amend these provisions in order to ensure compliance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. The provisions in question are the following:

- sections 31 and 33 of the Criminal Law (Codification and Reform) Act (Cap. 9:23) (Criminal Law) relating to publishing false statements against the State and insulting the President.
- sections 37 and 41 of the Criminal Law, providing for imprisonment for participating in meetings or gatherings with the intention of disturbing public order, using threatening or abusive language, intending thereby to provoke a breach of peace, and engaging in disorderly conduct for the same purpose.
- sections 7(5) and 8(11) of the Maintenance of Peace and Order Act No. 9 of 2019 (MOPA), providing for imprisonment for failing to notify authorities of public demonstrations or failing to comply with prohibition notices or conditions for public gatherings.

The Committee notes that the Prisons Act, which previously provided for compulsory prison labour for persons convicted to a penalty of imprisonment, has been repealed through the enactment of the Prisons and Correctional Service Act, 2023. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that the principles within the Prisons and Correctional Service Act emphasize that the objective of the work by prisoners is essentially for rehabilitation purposes, aimed at facilitating successful reintegration into society after serving sentences. The Government states that its practice is in line with the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (Mandela Rules), which emphasize the issue of work for the rehabilitation of inmates. The Government adds that sections 7(5) and 8(11) of the MOPA relate to penalties for failing to give notice of a gathering, as required by the law, and have no relation to issues of forced labour. Similarly, the Government considers that sections 31, 33, 37 and 41 of the Criminal Law only apply to persons who engage in the conducts in question with malicious intent. In both cases, the Government contends that the use of labour as part of a sentence is no longer practiced in Zimbabwe given the correctional and rehabilitation thrust currently being implemented in Zimbabwean prisons.

In this regard, the Committee observes that section 124 of the new Prisons and Correctional Service Act reprises the provisions of section 76(1) of the Prisons Act, stipulating that every inmate under sentence of imprisonment "may be kept to work" within or outside the precincts of any prison or correctional facility in any part of the country and in any work or activity that may be approved by the Minister responsible for Prisons and Correctional Service. The Committee also notes that, under section 124 of the Act, unconvicted inmates "may elect" to be given light work. Therefore, the Committee observes that prison labour remains compulsory for convicted persons who receive prison sentences. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, even if designed for rehabilitation purposes, compulsory prison labour has an impact on the application of the Convention when it is imposed with respect to one of the circumstances covered under Article 1 of the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC expressed regret that despite numerous and strong comments on these issues, workers in Zimbabwe still face penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing views opposed to the established political, social or economic system or for having participated in strikes. The ITUC further alleges that the MOPA and the Criminal Law continue to be applied in a manner to limit the civil liberties and fundamental labour rights of workers, leading to the exaction of heavy fines and long-term prison terms with compulsory labour for any infringement. The legal provisions in question, having remained unchanged, create a climate of fear and repression, impeding the full exercise of civil liberties in the country. The ITUC refers to cases of trade unionists and workers who were again victims of violent acts and arbitrary arrests in 2022. In particular, the ITUC refers to the arrests of Obert Masaraure and Robson Chere, president and Secretary-General respectively of the Amalgamated Rural Teachers Union of Zimbabwe (ARTUZ) who faced the same charges related to murder, despite a court inquest that concluded that there had been no foul play. These arrests followed the announcement by the trade union in June 2022 of its intention to organize protest actions. The ITUC further recalls that Obert Masaraure has also been facing charges on three counts in three cases since 2019, including the charge of obstructing justice after tweeting that Robson Chere was innocent (in 2022). The ITUC demands the unconditional release of Robson Chere and a withdrawal of all pending criminal cases against him, Obert Masaraure and all other ARTUZ members arrested in January 2022 over a salary protest.

The ITUC also highlights the newly introduced section 22A of the Criminal Law, which addresses "wilfully injuring the sovereignty and national interest of Zimbabwe". This provision establishes penalties ranging from 20 years to life imprisonment, or even the death penalty, for individuals who participate in meetings involving or convened by foreign government agents to discuss or plan actions such as armed intervention, the subversion or overthrow of Zimbabwe's constitutional Government, or the consideration or implementation of sanctions or trade boycotts against Zimbabwe. The ITUC observes that these new provisions are in violation of the Convention and further interfere with the exercise of fundamental freedoms, including the right to freedom of association, the right to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression and the right to information.

The Committee notes in this regard that, in his report of 26 September 2022 following his visit to Zimbabwe, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, recalling that he had called upon the Government to revise sanctions so as not to dissuade the holding of future peaceful assemblies and demonstrations, noted that the MOPA still imposes penalties on assembly organizers where no harm has occurred, with the apparent intent of dissuading the holding of peaceful assemblies in practice (A/HRC/50/23/Add.3). Additionally, in a press release dated 24 May 2023, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights expressed concern about the ongoing legal proceedings against human rights defender Obert Masaraure and called for the charges against him to be dropped, indicating that she witnessed what appeared to be "a systematic targeting of human rights defenders from ARTUZ" who were working to promote the right to education and the right to an adequate standard of living for educators in rural areas of Zimbabwe.

The Committee must express its deep concern that the practice of arrests, prosecutions and convictions involving the imprisonment of persons exercising their right to peaceful assembly still continues and that the legal basis for imposing labour on a person sentenced to imprisonment still exists, in contravention with Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take necessary measures to review sections 22A, 31, 33, 37 and 41 of the Criminal Law, as well as sections 7(5) and 8(11) of the MOPA, to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour are imposed on anyone for peacefully expressing political views or holding ideological views opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the above-mentioned provisions in practice, including on the number of convictions and penalties imposed, as well as on the facts that led to the imposition of convictions.

Article 1(d). Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. The Committee previously took note of certain provisions of the Labour Act (sections 102(b), 104(2)–(3), 109(1)–(2), and 112(1)) that establish sanctions of imprisonment, which involve compulsory prison labour, for persons engaged in an unlawful collective action.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the newly enacted Labour Amendment Act 11 of 2023 has reduced the notice period of intention to go on strike from 14 to 7 days, under section 104(2) of the Labour Act. Moreover, the Government indicates that sections 109(1) and (2) of the Labour Act have been repealed. The Committee observes that these provisions have been replaced with the new sections 109(1) and (2), which retain the penalty of imprisonment for persons engaged in unlawful collective action. The new provisions make an explicit distinction in the penalties when unlawful collective action relates to an essential service (punishable by a fine and/or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding five years (as was the case previously)), or to any other case (punishable with a fine or, in the case of failure to pay the fine, imprisonment not exceeding one year). The same distinction is made under the provisions of section 109(2) of the new Labour Act.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC underlines that, under new sections 104, 105 and 106 of the Labour Act, as amended in 2023, any strike can be deemed unlawful if the restrictive conditions imposed for its organization are not followed. Violations of orders under sections 104 to 106 result in criminal penalties, as provided for in sections 109, 111 and 112 of the same Act, including a jail term of one to five years and a fine. The ITUC further indicates that, adding to the provisions of the Labour Act, the Health Service Amendment Act No. 9 of 2022 prescribes a fine and or a jail term of six months, at the discretion of the Court, for health workers who engage in strikes or demonstrations (sections 16A(2)–(3)).

The ITUC observes that the above-mentioned laws and regulations have a profound impact on the trade union movement in Zimbabwe. Among other cases, the ITUC refers to Jacob Ngarivhume, leader of Transform Zimbabwe, who was sentenced to four years in prison for alleged incitement of violence after calling for a peaceful demonstration in 2020. The ITUC also recalls that Obert Masaraure, president of ARTUZ, is still facing charges of subverting a constitutionally elected Government (2019 Teachers Strike Action) and, along with 15 others, bigotry, resulting from the Teachers Strike Action in June 2022.

The Committee notes with regret that, despite its reiterated comments, the provisions of the Labour Act, and now of the Health Service Amendment Act No. 9 of 2022, still establish sanctions of imprisonment, which involves compulsory prison labour, for persons engaged in an unlawful collective action. In this respect, the Committee emphasizes that no penal sanctions (including imprisonment involving compulsory labour) should be imposed against a worker for having peacefully carried out a strike and thus for merely exercising an essential right. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed or when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered.

Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to review sections 102(b), 104(2)–(3), 109(1)–(2), and 112(1) of the Labour Act, as amended by the Labour Amendment Act of 2023, and sections 16A(2)–(3) of the Health Service Amendment Act No. 99 of 2022, to ensure that, unless the well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered, no penalties involving compulsory labour be imposed on workers for participating in strikes peacefully.

The Committee refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Direct request

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 29 Barbados, Belize, Burundi, Chad, China, Comoros, Cook Islands, Croatia, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Guyana, Iraq, Libya, Malta, Montenegro, Netherlands (Aruba), Netherlands (Sint Maarten), Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, South Sudan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Türkiye, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (Isle of Man), United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (Jersey), United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe; Convention No. 105 Afghanistan, Barbados, Belize, Burundi, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cook Islands, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Libya, Montenegro, Mozambique, Netherlands (Aruba), Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Russian Federation, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, South Sudan, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan, Yemen.

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 29 France (French Polynesia).

Elimination of child labour and protection of children and young persons

Afghanistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the implementation of the various measures taken by the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled (MoLSAMD) to prevent child labour, including: the National Child Labour Strategy, 2012, followed by a National Action Plan to prevent child labour in brick kilns; a National Strategy for the Protection of Children at Risk; and a National Strategy for Working Street Children, 2011. However, the Committee noted, that children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labour and often in hazardous conditions, including in agriculture, carpet weaving, domestic work, street work, and brick making. Moreover, 27 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years (2.7 million children) are engaged in child labour with a higher proportion of boys (65 per cent). Of this, 46 per cent are children between 5 and 11 years of age. At least half of all child labourers are exposed to hazardous working conditions such as dust, gas, fumes, extreme cold, heat or humidity. Moreover, 56 per cent of brick makers in Afghan kilns are children and the majority of these are 14 years of age and below.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information in this regard. The Committee once again notes with concern that a significant number of children under the age of 14 years are engaged in child labour, of which at least half are working in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities, both in the formal and informal sectors, and requests that the Government provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee noted that according to sections 5 and 13 of the Labour Law, read in conjunction with the definition of a "worker", the Law applies only to labour relations on a contractual basis and, therefore, that the provisions of the Labour Law did not appear to cover the employment of children outside a formal employment relationship, such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard in the Government's report, the Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship. The Committee therefore requests, once again, that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that all children, including children working outside a formal employment relationship such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection laid down by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages, once more, the Government to review the relevant provisions of the Labour Law in order to address these gaps as well as to take measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to the informal economy with a view to ensuring such protection in this sector.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that section 13(2) of the Labour Law sets 15 years as the minimum age for employment in light work in industries and section 31 prescribes a weekly working period of 35 hours for young persons between 15 and 18 years of age. It observed that the minimum age for light work of 15 years is higher than the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years, specified by Afghanistan.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard by the Government, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that Article 7(1) of the Convention is a flexibility clause which provides that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons aged 13– 15 years in light work activities which are not likely to be harmful to their health or development and not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.

The Committee notes the lack of information contained in the Government's report and recalls once again that Article 7(4) permits member States who have specified a general minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years to substitute a minimum age for admission to light work of 12–14 years to that of the usual 13–15 years of age (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 389 and 391). In view of the fact that a high number of children under 14 years of age are engaged in child labour in the country, the Committee once again requests that the Government regulate light work activities for children between 12 and 14 years of age to ensure that children who, in practice, work under the minimum age are better protected. The Committee also requests that the Government take the necessary measures to determine light work activities that children of 12–14 years of age are permitted to undertake and to prescribe the number of hours and conditions of such work, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2017, and the in-depth discussion on the application of the Convention by Afghanistan in the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 106th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2017.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 106th Session, June 2017)

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery and effective and time-bound measures. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Law on prohibiting the recruitment of child soldiers criminalizes the recruitment of children under the age of 18 years into the Afghan Security Forces. The Committee also noted that a total of 116 cases of recruitment and use of children, including one girl, were documented in 2015. Out of these: 13 cases were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security forces; five to the Afghan National Police; five to the Afghan Local Police; and three to the Afghan National Army; while the majority of verified cases were attributed to the Taliban and other armed groups who used children for combat and suicide attacks. The United Nations verified 1,306 incidents resulting in 2,829 child casualties (733 killed and 2,096 injured), an average of 53 children were killed or injured every week. A total of 92 children were abducted in 2015 in 23 incidents.

In this regard, the Committee noted the following measures taken by the Government:

- The Government of Afghanistan signed an Action Plan with the United Nations on 30 January 2011 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Security Forces, including the Afghan National Police, Afghan Local Police and Afghan National Army.
- A roadmap to accelerate the implementation of the Action Plan was endorsed by the Government on 1 August 2014.
- The Government endorsed age-assessment guidelines to prevent the recruitment of minors.
- In 2015 and early 2016, three additional child protection units were established in Mazar e Sharif, Jalalabad and Kabul, bringing the total to seven. These units are embedded in Afghan National Police recruitment centres and are credited with preventing the recruitment of hundreds of children.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended that the Government take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children into armed forces and groups. It further recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in law and practice. Finally, the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are forced to join armed groups.

The Committee notes the IOE's indication that children are engaged in armed conflict in Afghanistan. The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Law on the Prohibition of Children's Recruitment in the Armed Forces (2014), along with other associated instruments, has helped prevent the recruitment of 496 children into national and local police ranks in 2017. Moreover, the Ministry of Interior, in cooperation with relevant government agencies, was effectively implementing Presidential Decree No. 129 which prohibits, among others, the use or recruitment of children in police ranks. Inter-ministerial commissions tasked with the prevention of child recruitment in national and local police have been established in Kabul and the provinces, and child support centres have been set up in 20 provinces, with efforts under way to establish similar centres in the remaining provinces. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Directorate of Security has recently issued Order No. 0555, prohibiting the recruitment of underage persons and that the Order is being implemented in all security institutions and monitored by national and international human rights organizations. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts in taking immediate and effective measures to put a stop, in practice, to the recruitment of children under 18 years by armed groups, the national armed forces and police authorities, as well as measures to ensure the demobilization of children involved in armed conflict. It once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, it requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and armed forces and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Articles 3(b) and 7(2)(b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee previously noted that concerns remained regarding the cultural practice of bacha-bazi (dancing boys), which involves the sexual exploitation of boys by men in power, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces' commanders. It also noted that there are many child victims of bacha bazi, particularly boys between 10 and 18 years of age who have been sexually exploited for long periods of time. The Committee further noted that some families knowingly sell their children into forced prostitution, including for bacha-bazi.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi. It also recommended the Government to take effective and time bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are sexually exploited.

The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Child Protection Law has been submitted to Parliament for adoption and makes the practice of bacha-bazi a criminal offence. The Committee also notes the new Law on Combating Human Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants of 2017 (Law on Human Trafficking of 2017). It notes that section 10(2) of this Law punishes the perpetrator of trafficking to eight years' imprisonment when the victim is a child or when the victim is exploited for the purpose of dancing. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the prohibition contained in section 10(2) of the Law on Human Trafficking of 2017. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved to effectively eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi, to remove children from this worst forms of child labour and to provide assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Child Protection Law, and its effective implementation.

Article 7(2). Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and taking into account the special situation of girls. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that as a result of the past three decades of conflict, insecurity and drought, children and youth are the most affected victims, a majority of whom are deprived of proper education and training. The Committee noted that Afghanistan is among the poorest performers in providing sufficient education to its population. A large number of boys and girls in 16 out of 34 provinces had no access to schools by 2013 due to insurgents' attacks and threats that lead to the closure of schools. In addition to barriers arising from insecurity throughout 2015, anti-government elements deliberately restricted the access of girls to education, including closure of girls' schools and a ban on girls' education. More than 369 schools were closed partially or completely, affecting at least 139,048 students, and more than 35 schools were used for military purposes in 2015. Finally, the Committee noted the low enrolment rate of girls, in particular at the secondary school level, high dropout rates especially in rural areas owing to a lack of security in the journey to and from school, and the increased number of attacks on girls' schools and written threats warning girls to stop going to school by non-state armed groups.

The Committee notes the Government representative's statement at the Conference Committee that many households respond to poverty by taking their children out of school and forcing them into labour. The Government indicates that child labour is not only a law enforcement matter but a fundamental problem which requires a comprehensive understanding and a robust response mechanism. With a view to providing preschool support to children under the age of six, the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled has established over 366 local kindergartens which house over 27,000 children. The Government also indicates it is taking strong action against the exploiters as well as the families who knowingly force their children into prostitution and expects a sharp decline in the practice in the coming years. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that school burnings and the imposition of bans in Taliban-controlled areas prevented girls and children from attending school. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to raise awareness among households that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Additionally, it once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the education system and to ensure access to free basic education, including by taking measures to increase the school enrolment and completion rates, both at the primary and secondary levels, particularly of girls.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report, that the Ministry of Health and Social Protection (MoHSP) continues to design policies and programmes for the rights and protection of children, focusing its work on creating an effective system that guarantees the rights of children and ensures their safety against all forms of violence and exploitation. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the information shared by the Government on the measures taken, such as the inclusion of issues for the protection of children from economic exploitation in the National Agenda for Children's Rights 2021–26. For instance, measures are planned for the establishment and deployment of field teams, with the aim of identifying, referring and managing the cases of economically exploited children.

In this regard, the Committee notes, that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 2023, welcomed the adoption of various policies and strategy plans for the protection of children. However, it recommended that the Government strengthen the legal and policy framework to protect children from economic exploitation, and address child labour in the agricultural, mining, construction and garment and footwear sectors and in the context of domestic labour and begging (CRC/C/ALB/CO/5-6, paragraphs 6 and 41).

While taking note of some measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the National Agenda for Children's Rights 2021–26 in this regard, as well as on any other concrete measures taken and the results achieved. It further requests the Government to provide updated statistical data on the employment and work of children and young persons, disaggregated by age and sex.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Self-employed children and children working in the informal sector. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's detailed information on the efforts it continues to make to strengthen the system of the State Labour Inspectorate and Social Services (SLISS), including in relation to child labour, both in the formal and informal sectors. In particular, the Committee takes note of the information on the three digital platforms with which labour inspectors currently work and which are essential in supporting the quality and efficiency of the inspection process (the "E-Inspection" platform; the Penalty Matrix system (MPS); and the Risk Analysis System (RAS)).

The Committee further notes the Government's information regarding the adoption of Instruction No. 41 of 2022 "On the procedures of employment of children after findings". This Instruction aims to assist labour inspectors in assessing, in situations of employment of children and young persons, whether the work performed is prohibited due to long hours, inappropriate terms and conditions, exaggerated risks or the inappropriate nature of the work, based on the legal acts that regulate the employment of this category of workers. The Instruction also provides guidance for inspectors in reviewing applications from employers seeking to employ young persons pursuant to the form on "Authorization for the Employment of Minors".

In addition, the Committee also notes the Government's information on the enhanced institutional cooperation between the SLISS and other law-enforcement authorities and national or international organizations, aimed to strengthen monitoring mechanisms to increase labour inspection activities in the informal economy. This includes cooperation with the General Tax Directorate (GTD) and the National Registering Centre (NRC) that has led to an expanded coverage of workplaces receiving inspection services for the first time, reaching 22.3 per cent of the planned targets, with 32.4 per cent of the violations detected in the informal economy.

The Committee takes note of the statistics shared by the Government regarding the employment of children. From January to December 2022, 171 children were found by labour inspectors to be employed in various sectors, the most important of which being wholesale and retail trade/hotels, bars and restaurants (134 children), followed by manufacturing and enterprise (34 children). Ten breaches of labour laws relating to child employment were recorded, with most concerning various violations of employment conditions requirements, and two more particularly regarding child labour (one child under the age of 18 was found employed in night work, and one child of 14 was found engaged in work prohibited to children under the age of 16). From January to December 2023, 215 children were found in employment (152 in wholesale and retail trade/hotels, bars, restaurants; 52 in manufacturing/enterprises; 11 in other activities). Violations included the employment of minors under 18 in night work, the employment of minors without authorization, and the employment of children under 15 in cultural, artistic, sports or advertising activities without prior authorization. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors with a view to allowing them to better monitor and identify cases of child labour in both the formal and informal sectors. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures taken or envisaged to strengthen inspections in sectors of the economy where child labour violations have not yet been detected, such as the agricultural and mining sectors; and (ii) how the SLISS identifies the planned targets which shall receive inspection services. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the total number and nature of violations detected by the SLISS in relation to children engaged in child labour, including in the informal economy, as well as on the penalties applied.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that 55 persons were prosecuted for child abuse in 2023 and 4 persons charged with exploitation of children in 2024. The Committee notes, however, that the Government provides no specific information on the number of prosecutions in cases of child trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes that Albania has adopted the 2021–2023 National Action Plan for the Fight against Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP-THB), which aims at coordinating state and non-state actors engaged in the fight against trafficking in persons. The first policy goal of the NAP-THB is to reduce the threat and impact of organized and serious crime, including through combating illegal trafficking. The activities planned in this regard include the training of judicial institutions to specialize in the criminal offences of trafficking in order to proactively investigate cases of trafficking, carry out criminal prosecutions effectively, and train border and migration police and customs officers and asylum staff to increase their capacity to identify victims, especially among children of migrants.

The Committee notes, from a 2023 working document accompanying the European Commission Communication on EU Enlargement Policy-Albania Report, that the Prosecution Office registered 11 new criminal proceedings for trafficking in human beings in 2022, compared with 10 in 2021, and that the number of final convictions of criminal proceedings for human trafficking remains very low, with only seven convictions from two cases in 2022. It is not indicated, however, how many of these proceedings and convictions concerned cases of child trafficking. Moreover, the working document indicates that the implementation of the 2021–2023 National Action Plan on the fight against human trafficking should be supported by adequate funding and better coordination.

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of perpetrators of sale and trafficking of children are carried out. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures of the NAP-THB 2021-2023 in this regard, as well as on the results achieved. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions in child trafficking cases specifically, as well as on the number and nature of convictions and penalties applied.

Article 7, clauses (a) and (c). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their access to free basic education. Children from Roma and Egyptian Communities. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note, from the Government's report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), of the National Action Plan for Equality, Inclusion, and Participation of Roma and Egyptian 2021–2025, which aims to ensure the socio-economic inclusion of the Roma and Egyptian communities, including through access to inclusive education, and to ensure the timely identification and enrolment of Roma and Egyptian children of compulsory education age

The document of the National Action Plan mentions the increased school enrolment and attendance rates among Roma and Egyptian students, noting that in 2019, 4,469 Roma and 9,910 Egyptian children were enrolled in compulsory education, surpassing the target of 4,993. Moreover, the Action Plan outlines the efforts made to reduce school dropouts among Roma and Egyptian students, reports that were 179 dropouts in 2020 and aims to increase the return rate by 35 per cent by 2025. Efforts to that end include forming cross-cutting working groups in 27 municipalities to prevent dropouts and support student returns.

The Committee, however, notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations of 23 May 2024 (CERD/C/ALB/CO/13-14, paragraph 18) remained concerned about the low attendance rates, low levels of achievement and high rate of school dropout among Roma and Egyptian children, despite the measures taken to prevent discrimination against Roma and Egyptian children in schools and to promote their enrolment in preschool and compulsory education. It also remained concerned about reports of discrimination against and de facto segregation of Roma and Egyptian children in some schools.

While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to pursue its efforts to facilitate access to education and reduce school dropout rates for Roma and Egyptian students and address the issue of discrimination against Roma and Egyptian children in school, including through the effective implementation of the National Action Plan for Equality, Inclusion, and Participation of Roma and Egyptian 2021–2025. The Committee requests Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved, as well as updated statistics on attendance, completion, and drop-out rates at primary and lower secondary levels for Roma and Egyptian children.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children living and working in the streets. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a cooperation agreement was signed between the Ministries of Education, Sports and Youth, of Interior and of Health and Social Protection, according to which child protection workers cooperate with schools and local educational units every new school year to identify children who have reached the age of compulsory schooling but who have dropped out or are at risk of dropping out of school, including children in street situations. The Government indicates in this regard that, according to the reports of the child protection workers at the State Agency for Children's Rights and Protection, 228 cases of children exploited for work and begging were thus managed in 2021; 229 cases in 2022; 182 cases in 2023; and 124 cases between January and March 2024. In addition, the Committee notes, from the Government's report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that in line with Decision of the Council of Ministers (DCM) No. 129 "On Procedures for the Identification, Immediate Assistance, and Referral of Economically Exploited Children, including Children in Street Situations", field teams have been established to identify, refer, and manage cases of economically exploited children, those in street situations, and child victims of trafficking. In this regard, child protection structures, through child protection workers, have managed 84 cases of children in street situations in 2023, and 55 cases in the first quarter of 2024, for which an individual protection plan was implemented.

Furthermore, the Government indicates that, in 2023, the State Agency for Children's Rights and Protection has requested municipalities' cooperation to take measures for the identification, prevention, and treatment of children in street situations. In this regard, the Municipality of Tirana has established vital structures for the prevention, protection, empowerment, and reintegration of children in street situations and their families and has carried out concrete interventions, including: (1) the establishment of the Department of the Child Protection Unit under the Directorate of Protection and Social Inclusion; (2) the creation of the Field Community Centre, pursuant to Decision No. 66 of 2020 of the Municipal Council of Tirana, aiming to prevent and reduce the number of street children and providing coordination care, social protection services, proactive identification and counselling; and (3) the adoption of the Joint Plan of Measures, from March 2024, between the Municipality of Tirana and the Local Directorate of the Tirana Police "For the prevention and mitigation of the phenomenon of families in a homeless situation in the territory of the Municipality of Tirana", aiming, among other things, to protect children from all forms of abuse and exploitation in the streets, improve inter-institutional cooperation to prevent street begging, and improve awareness for prevention and effective identification.

The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to protect children living and working in the street from the worst forms of child labour and requests the Government to continue making such efforts. It requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard and on the number of these children who have benefited from such measures and been removed from the streets, rehabilitated and socially integrated.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1984)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report regarding meetings organized in 2022 by the National Body for the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of the Child (ONPPE). These meetings focused on national priorities in child protection, to be realized under the national childhood workplan 2024–29. A multisectoral committee was established to elaborate the plan, which focuses on strengthening mechanisms for the provision of care and promotion of children's rights. The Government also informs that a national childhood plan 2025–30 is under preparation, which will provide those working in the field of childhood protection and promotion with a framework defining the strategic guidelines to, and national priorities for, childcare.

The Committee also notes the launching by the ONPPE in January 2024 of the "Allo Tofola" App. This App makes it possible to report on any child at risk by sending photos, videos and voice recordings. It also contains advice for families and children. The Government adds that the ONPPE is planning to set up a national observation unit to protect children from exploitation using information and communication technologies, while ensuring their secure use.

However, the Committee notes the absence of information in the Government report on the establishment of a system for the collection of statistical data on the nature, extent and evolution of labour by children under 16 years of age. The Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to establish such a data collection system and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to combat child labour under the national childhood workplan 2024–29, as well as on the preparation of the national childhood plan 2025–30 regarding the strategic guidelines to, and national priorities for, childcare.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate is taking steps to combat child labour, including by: (i) intensifying visits in the private sector to ensure respect of the minimum working age; (ii) developing awareness-raising action during the monitoring visits; (iii) the organization of study days and meetings at regional labour inspection level to address questions on child labour and to examine its different forms and to strengthen prevention and protection measures.

The Government also indicates that the general labour inspection services organize an annual General Survey covering the entire national territory on child labour in the formal and informal sectors, including all sectors of activity. It states that over the past four years the labour inspectorate only recorded a child labour rate of between 0.001 and 0.002 per cent.

The Committee notes the disparity between the data recorded by the 2019 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) and those provided by the Government. According to MICS, 4.2 per cent of children from 5 to 17 years of age are engaged in child labour, including in hazardous conditions. The Committee recalls that all child labour, including in the informal economy or in less visible situations, must imperatively be taken into account. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee again requests it to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate in order to detect all cases of child labour, including in the informal economy. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard, and on the number of violations found relating to child labour, including in hazardous conditions, and the penalties imposed.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment: observation

Previous comment: direct request

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee takes due note of the adoption of Act No. 23-04 of 7 May 2023 on preventing and combating trafficking in persons, which includes provisions for: (i) the automatic public prosecution of criminal offences related to trafficking in persons, including those in which the victims are children; (ii) the obligation for service providers or any other person concerned to transmit any information or relevant data stored via information and communication technologies, subject to sanctions in conformity with the legislation in force; (iii) recourse to electronic surveillance to monitor suspected perpetrators of an offence under the present Act; (iv) the use of geolocation of the victim or the suspected perpetrator or any other element relating to the offence; and (v) allowing the reception of online complaints made in respect of offences under the present Act. The Government indicates that section 41 of the Act provides that, where the victim is a child, the sanction incurred shall be between 10 and 20 years of imprisonment.

However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government indicates it has received no reports of trafficking of children under 18 years of age since the creation of the National Committee on Preventing and Combatting Trafficking in Persons. The Committee requests the Government to reinforce its efforts to detect cases of trafficking in children and to identify the victims, in particular by measures taken to train law enforcement officers, the justice department, the labour inspectorate, the health services, and social workers as regards procedures to identify child victims of trafficking. It again requests the Government to ensure that the perpetrators of these acts are identified and prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed. It also requests the Government to provide up-to-date statistics on identified cases of trafficking in children under 18 years of age, the prosecutions brought, the convictions obtained, and the penalties imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the application of sections 342 and 343 of the Penal Code, specifically as regards cases of persons who use, procure or offer children under 18 years of age for prostitution.

The Committee notes the Government's statements that no offences have been reported and consequently no convictions handed down nor penal sanctions imposed for the procurement of children under 18 years of age for prostitution.

In this connection, the Committee refers to the concern raised by the United Nations Human Rights Council in its universal periodic review of November 2022 (A/HRC/WG.6/41/DZA/2, paragraph 43), that there is a persistence in Algeria of trafficking in persons, in particular persons from sub-Saharan countries, for the purposes of exploitation, domestic labour, begging and prostitution. The Committee reminds the Government that an absence of complaints does not equate to an absence of cases of procurement or offering of a child of under 18 years of age for prostitution.

The Committee notes that the new Act No. 23-04 of 7 May 2023 on preventing and combating trafficking in persons, recognizes the prostitution of others and all other forms of sexual exploitation as forms of human trafficking. The Act also provides for preventive measures and penal sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to reinforce its action, in particular concerning the identification of children under 18 years of age that are victims of prostitution. It again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 342 and 343 of the Penal Code, specifically as concerns cases of persons who use, procure or offer children of under 18 years of age for prostitution, including information on the number and nature of the violations reported, the convictions handed down and the penal sanctions applied, disaggregated by age and sex of the victims.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its concern at the absence of legislative provisions explicitly prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, according to which various mechanisms have been put in place to ensure the lightening of sentences applicable to minors under 18 years of age in case of possession, use or trafficking of drugs, including protection and rehabilitation measures. The Government adds that for children over 13 years of age, the judge may give preference to such protection and rehabilitation measures.

The Government further indicates that section 195 bis of the Penal Code thus provides for prison sentences of between six months to two years for any person using a child for begging, sentences which are doubled where the perpetrator is a family member of the minor, or any person having authority over the minor.

The Committee is nevertheless obliged once more to express its concern at the absence of legislative provisions explicitly prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production or trafficking of drugs. The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the national legislation prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. It also requests the Government to ensure that all children exploited for such purposes be treated as victims and not as criminals and are therefore not punished for their involvement in illicit activities. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous types of work. Further to its earlier comments, the Committee requested the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to finalize and adopt the Bill issuing the Labour Code of October 2015, which includes the prohibition for children under 18 years of age to engage in hazardous work, and the regulatory text fixing the list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information regarding the adoption of the list regulating hazardous work. Consequently, the Committee again reminds the Government that under the terms of Article 4(1) of the Convention, the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, shall determine the types of hazardous work. Recalling that it has been raising this issue for over ten years, the Committee again urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to finalize and adopt the Bill issuing the Labour Code, in order to determine, following consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the Labour Code and the regulatory text fixing the list of the types of hazardous work, once adopted.

Article 6. Action programmes and sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the 2019-2021 three-year programme to effectively combat trafficking of children. Noting the absence of a response in this connection, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the 2019–21 three-year programme to effectively combat trafficking in children, and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking of children and child prostitution. The Committee notes the provisions of Act No. 23-04 of 7 May 2023 on preventing and combating trafficking of persons, in particular: (i) the multidisciplinary support of victims, including medical assistance and psychological, social and legal support to facilitate their social reintegration; (ii) the establishment of care centres to lodge victims in conditions guaranteeing their safety. These centres also provide training and education programmes adapted to their specific needs, taking account of their age and gender, with a view to promoting their reintegration in society; (iii) provision of free public health service medical care; and (iv) protection measures for victims and their families. The Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to implement these provisions to remove child victims of trafficking and prostitution and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the number of children below 18 years of age who have been removed from trafficking and prostitution and given appropriate care and assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Antigua and Barbuda

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the unions and employers' federation were consulted regarding the activities and occupations which should be prohibited to persons below 18 years of age. It noted that although a recommendation was made, it was not submitted before the National Labour Board, as it was the Government's aim to revamp the occupational health and safety legislation. Thereafter, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the proposed amendments to the provisions of the Labour Code on occupational health and safety have been circulated to Cabinet, but have not yet been adopted. It further noted the Government's indication that technical assistance was sought in relation to new and separate occupational health and safety legislation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the National Labour Board is currently reviewing the occupational health and safety legislation. The Government states that it has noted the Committee's comments and that it will act accordingly. The Committee notes with regret that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age has still not been adopted. The Committee therefore once again reminds the Government that Article 3(1) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety, or morals of young persons, shall not be less than 18 years. It also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Observing that the Convention was ratified by Antigua and Barbuda more than 30 years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a list of activities and occupations prohibited for persons below 18 years of age is adopted in the near future, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard through amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation, and to provide information on progress made. Lastly, it requests that the Government provide a copy of the amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation once adopted.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Barbados

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2025, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act in 2011, section 8 of which criminalizes the trafficking of persons for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's information in its report that the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act of 2011 was repealed and replaced by the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, which contains comprehensive provisions addressing the issue of trafficking. According to section 4, the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation is punishable by a fine of 2 million Barbadian dollars (BBD) (about US$990,099), life imprisonment or both. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Government's written replies to the list of issues of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of 2017, since 2015, no new arrests and charges have been made in relation to trafficking (CEDAW/C/BRB/Q/5-8/Add.1, paragraph 52). In its concluding observations of 2017, the CEDAW expressed its concern that Barbados remains both a source and a destination country for women and girls, including non-nationals, who are subjected to trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour, as a result of high unemployment, increasing levels of poverty and the weak implementation of anti-trafficking legislation. The CEDAW was also concerned about the lack of information on the number of complaints, investigations, prosecutions and convictions related to the trafficking of women and girls (CEDAW/C/BRB/CO/5-8, paragraph 25). The Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) similarly expressed its concern at the high level of internal trafficking of children, the lack of information on the situation in general and the lack of effective measures to address and prevent the sale and trafficking of children in its concluding observations of 2017 (CRC/C/BRB/CO/2, paragraph 58). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, particularly in relation to the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 4 of the Act in practice, including the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 8(1) of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act prohibits the employment of a young person in any work that by its nature or the circumstances in which it is done is likely to cause injury to his/her health, safety or morals, the national legislation does not contain a determination of these types of work, as required under Article 4(1) of the Convention. The Government indicated that the formulation of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age was being considered. The Committee also noted that the Safety and Health at Work Act 2005 entered into force in January 2013 and that draft regulations under the provisions of this were forwarded for comments to the representative employers' and workers' organizations.

The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age are addressed in specific pieces of legislation, including the Factories Act, the Pesticide Control Regulations, the Protection of Children Act and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act. However, the Committee observes that these provisions together do not constitute a comprehensive determination of the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that none of the draft regulations under the Safety and Health at Work Act deal with this issue. Considering that it has been referring to this issue since 2004, the Committee must express its deep concern at the absence of a comprehensive list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Article 4(1) of this Convention, according to which the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) must be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 is included in national legislation, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Belize

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes with interest the adoption in 2022 of the Belize National Child Labour Policy and Strategy 2022–2025, which was developed with the technical support of the ILO and in consultation with the social partners and other relevant stakeholders. The Policy has four objectives: (1) to address existing legislative and information gaps, providing necessary legal protection for all children who are engaged or potentially engaged in child labour; (2) to increase compliance with labour laws for the benefit of children; (3) to substantially reduce barriers to school access and ensure continuous school attendance throughout the legal age for every child; (4) to ensure adequate support and economic resilience for children and their families as a way to pre-empt engagement in child labour. Key strategies contemplated in the Policy include, among others, building awareness among children, their families and society about the danger of child labour; strengthening data collection on child labour; identification of working undocumented child migrants; strengthening mechanisms to reduce child labour in the tourism industry; and extending the social protection floor.

The Committee notes from the statistical information contained in the Policy that, as of 2013, the child labour rate was 3.2 per cent (equivalent to 3,528 children). It also notes that the Mennonites were found to have the highest child labour rate at 9.5 per cent, two and a half times as high as any other ethnic group.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication in its report that a Child Labour Secretariat and Inspectorate was established in the Labour Department, which shall focus on child labour inspections, education and awareness-raising programs, and information gathering and reporting. Between 2019 and 2021, a total of 30 training sessions on child labour were conducted for different government entities and stakeholders, including the Banana, Sugar and Citrus industries, the tourism industry, the National Garifuna Council, and the Spanish Lookout (Mennonite) in the Cayo district. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including among Mennonite children, under its National Child Labour Policy and Strategy 2022-2025, and the results achieved. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical information on the nature, extent, and trends of child labour, indicating the sectors of economic activity where child labour is more prevalent. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the Child Labour Secretariat and Inspectorate, including on the number of child labour inspections carried out, the infringements detected, and the penalties applied.

With regard to the issues raised under Articles 2(1), 3(2), 7 and 9(3), the Committee requests the Government to see the consolidated comments at the end.

Article 2(1) Scope of application. In response to its previous comments concerning the existence of different minimum ages, the Committee takes due note that the Government indicates that the Legislative Review Committee (LRC) that was established to review the national legislation concerning child labour made recommendations to amend the respective sections of the Shops Act, Chapter 287, and the Labour Act, Chapter 297 to ensure that the minimum age specified applies to all sectors of the employment and not only to industrial undertakings and shops.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended the insertion into the Labour Act of a hazardous work list.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended to raise the minimum age for light work from 12 to 13 years and adopt a list of types of light work.

Article 9(3) Registers of employment. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended deleting section 163 of the Labour Act, which limited the obligation to keep registers of employees under the age of 18 years to public and private industrial undertakings, and to replace it with a general requirement for all employers to prepare and keep one or more registers containing information of each worker available for inspection.

Noting the Government's indication that the review of the legislative proposals made by the LRC and by the Labour Advisory Board was completed, and later forwarded to the Minister of Labour, Local Government and Rural Development for further action, the Committee hopes the proposed amendments will be adopted as soon as possible to ensure that:

(i) the minimum age declared by the Government (14 years) is respected in all type of work undertaken by children, as well as in all sectors of economic activity;

(ii) a list of types of hazardous work is approved, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and incorporated into the labour legislation;

(iii) no child below 12 years of age be authorized to perform light work, and a list of types of light work is adopted;

(iv) all employers keep one or more registers containing information of each worker available for inspection.

It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as a copy of the new legislation once adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received despite its urgent appeal in 2019. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2014, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2019, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 3 of the Convention. Clause (b). 1. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 49 of the Criminal Code, Chapter 101 only prohibited the procurement of female children for prostitution and urged the Government to take measures to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of boys and girls under the age of 18 for prostitution.

While reiterating its concern at the absence of a Government report, the Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013. According to section 6(1) of the Act, a person having the authority or control over a child (defined by section 2 of the Act as a person below the age of 18), who takes advantage of his authority or control over that child or causes another person to sexually exploit that child, commits an offence and is liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term of ten years.

2. Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted the absence of provisions in the Criminal Code establishing offences related to the involvement of a child for the production of child pornography and it urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of specific provisions in this regard. While reiterating its concern at the absence of a Government report, the Committee takes due note that, pursuant to section 7(2) of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013, a person who coerces, induces, encourages, pays for, or exchanges any material benefit for, or otherwise causes any child to pose for any photographic material or to participate in any pornographic video or film or audio, visual or other electronic representation of any child involved in any form of child pornography commits an offence and is liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term of ten years.

The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts to prohibit child prostitution and child pornography, and requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 6(1), and 7(2) of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013, including information on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed on the offenders.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burkina Faso

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee takes due note of the publication of the "National Survey of child labour in Burkina Faso (ENTE) 2022", conducted with support from the ILO and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), a copy of which is attached to the Government's report. According to ENTE data, 33.1 per cent of children between 5 and 12 years of age (37.8 per cent of girls and 28.7 per cent of boys), 29.8 per cent of children between 13 and 15 years of age (32.1 per cent of girls and 27.4 per cent of boys), and 29.1 per cent of children aged 16 or 17 years (31.4 per cent of girls and 26.5 per cent of boys) are victims of child labour. The Committee also notes that, according to the ENTE, child labour occurs more frequently in rural than in urban areas (four out of ten children in rural areas and two out of ten children in urban areas). Over half of these children work in agriculture and 48.6 per cent are in the services sector. In this regard, the ENTE report estimates that in 2022 a total of 1,355,888 children were engaged in hazardous work, accounting for 18.6 per cent of all children between 5 and 17 years of age.

Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's indications that the "National Strategy to combat the worst forms of child labour (SN-PFTE) 2019–23" came to an end in December 2023 and that the strategy is being evaluated with a view to establishing a new reference framework.

While noting the measures taken by the Government and mindful of the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee is bound to express its concern at the number of children subjected to child labour, including hazardous work, in the country. The Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to remedy the situation of children engaging in child labour, and to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities, particularly in agriculture and services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the results of the evaluation of the SN-PFTE 2019–23 and on the measures taken in this respect, particularly with a view to establishing a new reference framework for the SN-PFTE.

Article 3(2) and Article 9(1). Hazardous work and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective implementation and application of Decree No. 2016-504/PRES/PM/MFPTPS/MS/MFSNF of 9 June 2016 (Decree No. 2016-504), relating to persons employing children under 18 years of age in hazardous work, and to ensure that appropriate penalties are imposed.

However, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that the necessary measures to enable the competent services to ensure the effective application of the above-mentioned Decree, particularly as regards convictions handed down and penalties imposed for these violations, have not yet been adopted. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary time-bound measures to ensure the effective implementation and application of Decree No. 2016-504 against persons who employ children under 18 years of age in hazardous work, as well as the imposition of appropriate penalties. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of convictions handed down and penalties imposed for these violations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication, in its report, that, as part of capacity-building for entities responsible for applying the law with regard to the trafficking of children, the "Koglkamba" monitoring application for use by labour inspectors has been set up with ILO support. A total of 72 labour controllers and inspectors have been trained in the use of the application and the data that it produces can also be used by officials in the justice system and persons responsible for providing care for children who are victims. In addition, 79 social workers and 18 members of child protection networks (including six members of regional child protection units and two judges) have received training with regard to the issue of trafficking of children. The Government also indicates that a module relating to trafficking in persons has been incorporated into the academic programme for legal trainees at the National School of Administration and Judiciary.

The Committee also takes due note of the Government's indication that in 2021 and 2022 a total of 63 persons were convicted of the crime of trafficking in persons and were given prison sentences ranging from six months to five years.

However, the Committee notes the information contained in the "National plan of action against trafficking in persons in Burkina Faso 2023–25" (PAN-TP 2023–25), attached to the Government's report, that the number of victims presumed to have been identified is far greater than the number of investigations. The Government indicates that factors limiting action against trafficking in persons include the collection of data, the lack of human, financial and material resources, the inadequacy of care structures for victims, and insufficient regional and international cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure thorough investigations and prosecutions of the perpetrators of offences related to the sale and trafficking of children and to ensure that penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are imposed on them. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the application of the provisions relating to this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number and nature of convictions and criminal penalties imposed.

Article 6. Plan of action and application of the Convention in practice. Sale, trafficking and sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes the publication of the PAN-TP 2023–25, which has five components: the institutional framework; prevention; victim support and protection; the crackdown and prosecution of traffickers; and boosting collaboration in action against trafficking in persons, with the aim of improving coordination at the national and international level. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken and the results achieved, in the context of the PAN-TP 2023–25, to prevent the trafficking of children, and to ensure that child victims of trafficking benefit from the appropriate rehabilitation and integration services.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of the "Emergency national strategy for education 2019–24", which aims to ensure that teaching and learning activities take place in a healthy and protected environment for all children, particularly those in areas at risk and affected by crises.

The Committee also notes the indications of the "National strategy to combat the worst forms of child labour 2019–23" (SN-PFTE)" that 387,778 children have received support in the form of school scholarships, school kits and food parcels. A total of 978 children between 9 and 13 years of age have been removed from child labour and reintegrated in the formal education system under the "Fast-track/bridge education strategy (SSA/P)". The Committee further notes that in the 2022–23 school year a total of 7,815 children, including 3,806 girls, from vulnerable families received school assistance. Among these children, 5,000 also received school scholarships, and 345 children, including 211 girls, were enrolled in vocational training.

However, the Committee notes the information published on the UNICEF website indicating that, at the start of the 2023–24 school year, a total of 6,149 schools (at least one in four schools) remained closed because of violence and insecurity in certain regions of the country. In this regard, UNICEF estimates that 1 million children do not go to school and are exposed to numerous threats. While noting the difficult situation prevailing in the country and the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country by improving the quality of teaching and access to basic education for all children, particularly those affected by the security and health crisis in the country. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the specific steps taken under the SN-PFTE, SSA/P and the "Emergency national strategy for education". It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, particularly with regard to increasing school enrolment and completion rates.

Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour; providing direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that training has been conducted on various subjects, including the handling of trafficking cases and use of the "Child protection information management system (CPIMS+)", supervision of children and professional assistance for them, and psychosocial care for child victims of violence, trafficking and situations of mobility, among others.

The Government mentions with regard to the provision of care for child victims of trafficking and the worst forms of child labour that: (1) a total of 1,759 children without families have been cared for in centres for children in distress and in host families; (2) 809 children and young persons in difficulty have received psychosocial and educational support in boarding schools; (3) 21,073 child victims of violence and abuse have been provided with care; (4) 972 children in situations of mobility or at risk have received scholarships for vocational training; and (5) 6,732 children have been sensitized about child protection, including in emergency situations. Furthermore, awareness-raising sessions have been held on trafficking, mobility and the worst forms of child labour, and coordination meetings have been held involving child protection working groups. In addition, 104 situations reported via the 116 helpline have resulted in action to protect the children concerned. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of trafficking for economic or sexual exploitation and to remove child victims from sale and trafficking and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Children working in small-scale gold mines and quarries. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the PAN-TP 2023–25 that awareness-raising campaigns are planned on trafficking in persons in Burkina Faso, targeting persons engaged in certain sectors of production such as gold mining. Furthermore, inspections followed by the issuing of compliance orders, observations and violation reports in certain sectors including gold mining sites are envisaged under the prevention component of the Plan.

The Committee also notes the Government's information that 413 members of community child protection units have received capacity-building with regard to networking, the issue of child mobility, and child labour on gold mining sites.

The Committee further notes the indication in the second periodic report submitted by Burkina Faso under article 40 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, published in 2024 (CCPR/C/BFA/2, paragraph 167), that 612 children were removed from gold mining sites and returned to their families.

However, the Committee observes that, according to the information contained in the PAN-TP 2023–25, criminals are transporting children, including children without any fixed abode or in situations of mobility, to Côte d'Ivoire, Mali, Senegal and Niger in order to exploit them in activities including small-scale mining.

Furthermore, the Government indicates that girls in the city of Ouagadougou and on gold mining sites are subjected to sexual exploitation and are transported from communities in Burkina Faso and from neighbouring countries such as Nigeria. The Government also refers to estimates by an international organization that some 200,000 to 300,000 children work on small-scale mining sites. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking steps to remove children from work in gold mines and mining sites and to ensure that they are rehabilitated and integrated socially. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken under the PAN-TP 2023–25 and on progress made and results achieved in this regard.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation regarding the sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a total of 26 children received assistance and were repatriated to their countries of origin in 2021, in the context of the implementation of cooperation agreements between Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire, and between Burkina Faso, Togo and Benin.

The Committee also notes from the PAN-TP 2023–25 that, according to the 2019 national report on trafficking in persons, among the 4,684 persons in situations of mobility a total of 2,023 presumed trafficking victims, comprising 1,941 nationals of Burkina Faso and 362 nationals of Côte d'Ivoire, Togo, Nigeria and Benin, were rescued by the defence and security forces. There were more boys than girls among the victims and the 14–18 age group was the most exploited, with 1,097 victims (704 boys and 393 girls). In this respect, 2,131 children were subjected to economic exploitation and 172 to sexual exploitation. While noting the measures taken by the Government and recalling the scale of cross-border trafficking in the country, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the cooperation agreement with Togo and Benin, and also on the agreement with Côte d'Ivoire, and on the funds allocated to these agreements. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved in terms of interception of child victims of sale and trafficking and on their rehabilitation, social reintegration and repatriation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Burundi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 27 August 2024. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 28 August 2021.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the National Plan of Action (NPA) for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour 2010–2015, one of the goals of which is to contribute to the elimination of child labour, in all its forms, by 2025. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the results achieved under the NPA 2010–2015 to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour and on any new national policy formulated in this respect.

The Government indicates in its report that the NPA 2010–2015 enabled awareness-raising among children, parents and professionals on child protection under the Convention. The Government specifies that a national policy to combat child labour and a corresponding action plan will soon be formulated. The Committee notes that, according to UNICEF statistical data, 30.92 per cent of children were engaged in child labour in 2017 in Burundi (32.16 per cent of girls and 29.66 per cent of boys). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in the country, particularly through the adoption of a national policy on the matter, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention. It requests the Government to communicate information on the specific measures taken in this respect as well as on the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 3 and 14 of the Labour Code prohibit work by young persons under 16 years of age in public and private enterprises where such work is carried out on behalf of and under the supervision of an employer. It noted the Government's indication that the question of extending the application of the Convention to the informal economy, where there is evidence of child labour, would be taken into account during the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee further noted the survey on domestic labour, especially child domestic labour, in Burundi carried out in 2013-14, according to which 5.3 per cent of children in the 7–12 age group and over 40 per cent of children in the 13–15 age group are domestic workers. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take the necessary steps to extend the scope of application of the Convention to work done outside a formal employment relationship, particularly in the informal economy and in agriculture.

The Government indicates in its report that child labour in the informal sector has been taken into account in the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the observations of COSYBU that the revised Labour Code, promulgated on 24 November 2020 (Act No. 1/11), has enabled progress to be made in extending the scope of application of the Convention to work done outside a formal employment relationship. The Committee notes in this regard that under Article 2 of the 2020 Labour Code, relations between domestic workers and employers and the informal sector are governed by this Code, to the extent permitted by specific laws applicable to them. The minimum age of admission to employment, set at 16 years, applies to family agricultural, breeding, commercial or industrial activities. Section 3 of the Code specifies that relations between employers and workers, and working conditions in strictly informal sectors are determined by a special law.

The Committee notes that according to UNICEF's 2020 annual report in Burundi, the majority of young people in work occupy jobs in the informal sector, as the economy is heavily dependent on agriculture. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the revised Labour Code of 2020, which extends the scope of application of the Convention to the informal economy. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and requests it to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to ensure in practice the application of the minimum age of admission to employment of 16 years in the informal economy. It also requests the Government to communicate a copy of the Act governing work in the informal economy.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted Act No. 1/19 of 10 September 2013 establishing the structure of primary and secondary education, which had strengthened core education by increasing it from six to nine years of schooling, starting at the age of 6 years. Hence, a child who starts school at six years of age completes compulsory schooling at the age of 15 years. It noted that COSYBU, in its observations, asked the Government to fix the minimum age for the completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure that schooling is compulsory up to the minimum age of admission to employment, namely 16 years, so that the age of completion of compulsory schooling coincides with the minimum age of access to employment or work.

The Committee notes the absence of new information from the Government on this point. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures so that, in accordance with Article 2(3) of the Convention, schooling up to the minimum age of admission to employment, namely 16 years, is compulsory. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 27 August 2024. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Act No. 1/28 of 29 October 2014 concerning the prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons and the protection of victims (Anti-Trafficking Act) established penalties of 15–20 years' imprisonment for persons found guilty of trafficking in children. It noted the Government's information that women and children were victims of trafficking in 2017 to Oman, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, for economic and sexual exploitation. The Government had pointed out that some cases of trafficking escaped the control of the law. The Committee noted the increase in the number of cases of trafficking in persons, including girls, for purposes of domestic servitude and sexual slavery. The Committee therefore requested the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the thorough investigation and effective prosecution of individuals who engaged in the sale and trafficking of children and to ensure that penalties constituting an effective deterrent were applied in practice.

The Government indicates in its report that a mechanism for the identification, repatriation and reintegration of victims of trafficking and for the search and prosecution of perpetrators is being implemented. It further indicates that, according to the National Observatory to Combat Transnational Crime, in 2018, 24 underage girls who were victims of trafficking to Gulf countries were identified. The Government reiterates the indication that some perpetrators of trafficking escaped the control of the law. It also refers to several sections of the revised 2017 Criminal Code (Act No. 1/27). Section 246, which reproduces the definition of trafficking in the Anti-Trafficking Act, provides that trafficking in persons, including children, is punishable with a prison sentence of five to ten years and a fine. Section 245 provides for a prison sentence of up to 20 years for any person who brings in or takes out of the country a child under 18 years of age with the intention of violating the child's freedom, including for the purpose of sexual or domestic exploitation. In addition, the Committee notes that section 255 of the Criminal Code provides that the offence of trafficking in persons is punishable by a prison sentence of 15–20 years and a fine where it is committed against a child.

The Committee also notes that, according to the website of the Independent National Human Rights Commission (CNIDH), the Commission is responsible for the reception and handling of complaints from victims of trafficking in persons. In its 2020 annual report, the CNIDH indicates that in 2020 only one case was referred to it concerning allegations of trafficking of a girl. The CNIDH also indicates that it was informed of networks of trafficking in persons to other countries, and that it envisaged leading in-depth investigations with the cooperation of the competent services. In addition, the Committee notes that a programme to combat trafficking in Burundi has been developed by the Government, in partnership with the International Organization for Migration, for 2019–22, to strengthen the Government's capacity to combat trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts, including by strengthening the capacities of the law enforcement bodies, to ensure that all persons who commit acts of trafficking in children are subject to investigation and prosecution, and that sanctions constituting effective deterrents are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted by the CNIDH and the competent services concerning trafficking in children under 18 years and on the number of proceedings brought. It also requests it to indicate the penalties imposed on the perpetrators of trafficking in children, the facts that formed the basis of the convictions and the provisions under which the sanctions were imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevention of the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of a Sectoral plan for the development of education and training 2012–20. It noted the Government's indications that measures had been taken to improve access to education, including a policy of free schooling, the setting up of schools and school canteens, the abolition of official school fees in primary education and for the poorest pupils of secondary school fees, and the distribution of school kits in some provinces. The Committee also noted information from UNESCO and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) according to which the drop-out rate for girls at secondary level is extremely high. The Committee requested the Government to continue its efforts to improve access to, and the functioning of, the education system in the country, including by increasing the rate of enrolment and the rate of completion in secondary education for girls.

The Government refers to several measures taken to improve access to education, including: (i) the ongoing "Back to School" and "Zero Pregnancies" campaigns; (ii) the establishment of a national school canteens policy; (iii) the establishment of a system for the reintegration of girls who have dropped out of school; and (iv) the launch of the "aunt/school and father/school" project in all schools in Burundi. The Committee highlights, in its observation formulated under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), adopted in 2020, that the "aunt/school and father/school" project was developed to combat school drop-outs and unwanted pregnancies. The Committee notes the Transitional Plan for Education in Burundi 2018–20, the priority pillars of which include access for and retention of children in basic education and improvement of the quality of education.

The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2020 annual report of the CNIDH, although basic education was free, Batwa (indigenous community) households and poor families had difficulty keeping their children in school and children dropped out very early. The Committee also notes the information of the UNICEF Burundi office, in its 2020 annual report, according to which the percentage of children completing basic education has decreased, falling from 62 per cent in 2017/2018 to 53.5 per cent in 2018/2019, mainly owing to disparities in quality education in the country. One in five girls and one in four boys completes secondary education, and one in five women aged 15 to 24 is illiterate. UNICEF reports that 30 percent of adolescents are not in school, 95 percent of whom are girls. In addition, according to UNICEF information, school enrolment of children aged 6–11 has increased sharply in recent years but has declined significantly for children aged 12–14 (63.7 per cent of children aged 12–14 were enrolled in school in 2018), particularly due to household poverty, early pregnancy, school violence, including cases of sexual abuse by teachers, and low-quality education. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern the decline in the rate of completion for children in basic education and the low enrolment rates in junior secondary schools. Recalling that education plays a key role in preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country, through measures aimed, in particular, at increasing the school enrolment rate and reducing the school dropout rate in primary and secondary education, including for girls and the Batwa community. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect, as well as on results achieved.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indications that parties involved in child protection cooperated to promote the socio-economic reintegration of street children. It noted that several centres for the rehabilitation of children were opened in Ruyigi and Rumonge, and in Ngozi, particularly for girls. It noted, however, that these rehabilitation centres were presented as prisons for children, and noted the arrest and detention of minors working or living in the streets. The Committee requested the Government to take specific measures to adequately protect children living in the streets against exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Government indicates that the child protection committees, established at the hill-settlement, communal and provincial levels, coordinate with the police unit for the protection of minors and morals to repatriate street children. The Committee also notes the Government's indication, in its report to CEDAW of 26 August 2019, that part of the mission of the homes managed by Humanitarian Work for the Protection and Development of Children in Difficulty is to reintegrate street children (CEDAW/C/BDI/CO/5-6/Add.1, paragraph 15). The Committee notes that, according to information from UNICEF, the number of street children is rising, and that some of them are arrested by the authorities. In addition, the Committee notes that section 527 of the 2017 revised Criminal Code (Act No. 1/127) provides for a prison sentence of five to ten years and a fine in the case of exploitation of minors for begging. Recalling that street children are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour, and not to treat them like criminals, so as to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard, including on the number of children identified as living or working in the streets and the support measures provided to them.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77) (ratification: 1970)

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1970)

Previous comment on Convention No. 77

Previous comment on Convention No. 78

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on medical examination of young persons, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 77 and 78 together.

Article 1 of Convention No. 78. Scope of application. Children and young persons working on their own account. In its previous comments, the Committee noted: (1) the absence of provisions in the national legislation ensuring the application of the Convention to young persons working on their own account, as opposed to salaried young persons and apprentices who are covered by the provisions of Order No. 17 of 27 May 1969 and the Labour Code; and (2) the Government's indication that the Labour Code, which is under revision, would include a new definition of "worker", so that workers in the formal and informal sectors would benefit from the same protection.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that consultations between the Government and the social partners are ongoing with a view to updating the new draft Labour Code, and that a copy of the Code would be communicated to the Committee following its adoption. The Committee recalls that: (1) young persons who work on their own account are covered by Article 1(1) of the Convention; and (2) it has been raising the need to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention since the Government's first report in 1973. Consequently, it notes with regret that there is no progress in this regard. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) ensure that the draft Labour Code contains provisions allowing children and young persons working on their own account to be covered by the Convention, in particular that they undergo the medical examinations provided by the Convention; and (ii) adopt the revised Labour Code as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in the revision and to communicate a copy of the new Labour Code, once adopted.

Application in practice of Conventions Nos 77 and 78. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) medical examinations concern all workers on recruitment, and that there are no statistics on the precise numbers of young persons that undergo the medical examinations provided under the Conventions; (2) there have been no complaints or inspection reports related to the application of the Conventions; and (3) the application of the Conventions has not given rise to any disputes. With regard to its earlier comments concerning the extension of the intervention of labour inspectors and the points mentioned above, the Committee refers to its comments in respect of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2027.]

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, that in the context of the implementation of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (PANETEC), the Government refers to: (1) a campaign to make the legal instruments promoting and protecting children's rights widely available to 3,700,000 people throughout the country; (2) awareness-raising activities for 30 communities on child labour by district delegates and heads of agricultural stations, more specifically in the locality of Mvangan, in the departments of Méfou-et-Afamba and Lekié. The Committee recalls that it previously noted that a large number of children were engaged in some form of economic activity, including under hazardous conditions, particularly in the informal sector. The Committee therefore requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the effective elimination of child labour, including in hazardous work, including by continuing to take measures to implement the PANETEC. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the activities undertaken and results obtained, including on the impact of the measures taken on the elimination of child labour. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated statistical data on the nature, extent and trends of child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working in the informal economy. The Committee noted previously that: (1) children are essentially engaged in activities in the informal economy; (2) the Labour Code, which was undergoing revision, would include a new definition of "worker" so that workers in the formal and informal economy would be afforded the same protections; (3) the resources allocated to the labour inspectorate were insufficient to conduct effective investigations and the labour inspectorate did not carry out inspections in the informal economy; and (4) the reinforcement of the means of action of labour inspectors and the widening of the scope of their intervention was a priority for action under the PANETEC.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a Child Labour Observation and Monitoring System in Cameroon (SOSTECAM) has been established, with the aim of identifying children involved in child labour, removing them and referring them to rehabilitation services. This system should also enable communities (village heads, community leaders, teachers or spiritual guides) to regularly observe and monitor child labour and report these practices to local Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MINTSS) officials.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that there have been no court decisions concerning the application of the Convention. Considering the large number of children engaged in child labour, particularly in the informal economy, the Committee notes with regret the absence of court decisions and the absence of information on cases detected by the labour inspectorate. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the PANETEC or otherwise, to reinforce the capacities of the labour inspectorate and widen the scope of its intervention to fully and adequately address participation in informal economic activity by children. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the number of violations detected, in both the formal and the informal economy, and extracts from the inspection reports; (ii) the results achieved by the SOSTECAM in identifying children involved in child labour, removing them and referring them to rehabilitation services; and (iii) progress on the revision of the Labour Code, in particular so that children working in the informal economy enjoy the protection provided by the Convention.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling (12 years, pursuant to Act No. 98/004 of 14 April 1998 governing education in Cameroon) to coincide with the minimum age for admission to work or employment (14 years according to the Labour Code). It recalls once again: (1) that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally authorized to work, there may arise a vacuum which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371); and (2) that it is therefore desirable to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to coincide with the minimum age for admission to employment. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to make education compulsory up to the minimum age for admission to employment, namely, 14 years. It requests the Government to provide information on progress achieved in this regard.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a), 7(1) and (2)(b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Effective and time-bound measures. Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, concerning the measures adopted to combat trafficking in children, including: (1) the adoption of Order No. 009/CAB/PM of 10 February 2023 concerning the establishment, organization and functioning of the platform for exchange and consultation between the Cameroonian Government and civil society on combating trafficking in persons and migrant smuggling; (2) in 2024, with support from development partners, the Government organized poster campaigns at Yaoundé and Douala airports to prevent and combat human trafficking, including children; and (3) 23 social welfare services (SASO) and 8 social centres for vulnerable children have been created, and others have been refurbished and had their capacities upgraded, making it possible to provide psychosocial care for 4,805 girls and 4,040 boys who are victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in the second quarter of 2023, 56 cases of child trafficking were detected in the East and South regions, involving 29 boys and 27 girls. It notes, however, that the Government does not indicate whether these cases resulted in investigations and criminal proceedings against the perpetrators. The Committee also notes with regret that the Government does not reply to its previous concerns relating to the low number of investigations and prosecutions in this regard. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to redouble its efforts, including by reinforcing the capacities of law enforcement bodies, to ensure that all persons who engage in the trafficking of children are investigated and prosecuted, and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed on them. In this regard, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted by the competent services in relation to the trafficking of children and the number of prosecutions initiated, as well as on the penalties imposed on persons convicted of trafficking in children and the facts that led to the convictions.

Forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, and penalties. The Committee notes, from the Report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations (UN) on children and armed conflict (A/78/842-S/2024/384, 3 June 2024, paragraphs 245, 246 and 254), that: (1) the Secretary-General welcomed the development by the Government, with UN support, of a handover protocol for children associated with armed groups to civilian child protection actors and urged its swift adoption; (2) the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of three boys by unidentified perpetrators; (3) a total of 29 children were detained by national authorities for their alleged association with armed groups and on national security grounds; and (4) in December 2023, 14 children remained in detention.

The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's report to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the National Committee on Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (CNDDR) was established by Decree No. 2018/719 of 30 November 2018 with a mandate that includes the demobilization and reintegration of children recruited by terrorist and irredentist groups. The CNDDR has three reception centres located at Bamenda (North-West region), Buea (South-West region) and Mora (Far North region), which housed a total of 535 children on 31 December 2021 (CRC/C/CMR/6-7, 26 September 2023, paragraph 192). The Committee notes with deep concern the information that armed groups are using and recruiting children for use in armed conflict. The Committee urges the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to end the forced recruitment of children, including by: (i) ensuring that robust investigations are conducted and prosecutions brought against all those who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict, so that sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed; and (ii) providing comprehensive care for all child victims of forced recruitment by armed groups, ensuring that they are treated as victims and not as criminals. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the investigations and prosecutions undertaken and penalties applied to those responsible for the recruitment and use of children under the age of 18 years in armed conflict; and (ii) the number of child victims who have benefited from CNDDR services for their rehabilitation.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee notes with concern that the Government still does not provide any information on the applicable legal provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children for illicit activities. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 years for illicit activities are prohibited by Cameroonian law without delay and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 4(3). Periodic review and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted: (1) that Order No. 17 of 27 May 1969 concerning child labour (Order No. 17) does not prohibit work under water or work at dangerous heights, as in the case of children employed in fishing or banana harvesting; (2) that the Conference Committee urged the Government to urgently revise the list of hazardous work in order to prevent the engagement of children under 18 years of age in hazardous activities, including work under water and at dangerous heights; and (3) the Government's indication that the revision of the list of hazardous work was due to take place in 2018 and would be undertaken in conjunction with the social partners.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that new and broader consultations with the social partners were entered into with a view to refining and finalizing the draft revised list of hazardous work. The Committee recalls that it has referred to this point for many years and notes with regret the lack of progress in this regard. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay: (i) to ensure the adoption of the revised list of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age; and (ii) to ensure that the list includes a prohibition against the performance by children of work under water or at dangerous heights. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. HIV/AIDS orphans. The Committee previously noted that the number of HIV/AIDS orphans continued to rise, with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) estimating this figure at 390,000 in 2020. It notes the Government's indications that awareness-raising activities are conducted by local authority services and Operational Technical Units (UTOs) and that, in 2023, 709 orphans and vulnerable children benefited from these sessions. While noting this information, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide information on the implementation of the National strategy for the care of orphans and vulnerable children. Recalling that children who are HIV/AIDS orphans are at particular risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again requests the Government to redouble its efforts to protect them from these worst forms of labour, particularly as part of the National strategy for the care of orphans and vulnerable children. Once again, it requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures adopted in this respect; (ii) the results achieved; and (iii) the number of HIV/AIDS orphans received by the reception centres set up for their benefit.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, under the terms of section 4(3) of the Act on the orientation of the Chad Education System (No. 6-016 2006-03-13 PR), the State shall guarantee fundamental education for young persons between six and 16 years of age. It notes the Government's clarification regarding the age of completion of compulsory schooling. However, it notes that there is a gap between the compulsory education age (up to the age of 16) and the minimum age for admission to employment (14 years, in accordance with section 52 of the Labour Code). In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that if the minimum age for admission to employment or work is lower than the school leaving age, children may be encouraged to leave school earlier as they are legally authorized to work (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 370). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the general minimum age for admission to work or employment to bring it into line with the age of completion of compulsory schooling, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication once again that no progress has been made in this regard. It therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including envisaging an amendment to section 7 of the Decree respecting child labour, to ensure that the national legislation only allows young workers over 16 years of age to undertake hazardous work on condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction in the relevant branch of activity, in accordance with Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

Article 6. Apprenticeships. The Committee previously noted a divergence between the age for entry to an apprenticeship set out in section 18 of the Labour Code (13 years) and the age determined by section 1 of the Decree respecting child labour (14 years). It reminded the Government that, under the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, the age of entry to an apprenticeship is 14 years.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that changes have been made. However, it notes with regret that the Government has not specified the content of these changes, and that section 18 of the Labour Code continues to provide for an age for entry to apprenticeship of 13 years. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to harmonize the Labour Code and the Decree respecting child labour and to set the age for entry to apprenticeship at 14 years, in accordance with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that: (1) under the terms of section 2 of the Decree respecting child labour, the age for admission to employment is set at 12 years for certain types of light work; and (2) by virtue of section 3(2) of the Decree, the duration of such work may not exceed four-and-a-half hours per day. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government has not provided any information on this subject. It therefore once again recalls that, in accordance with Article 7(1) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons over 13 years of age (or 12 years where the minimum age for admission to employment or work is 14 years) in light work, on condition that it is not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the regular school attendance of children working four-and-a-half hours a day is ensured. If it is not able to ensure the regular school attendance of these children, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation only authorizes the employment on light work of persons from the age of 12 years in accordance with the conditions set out in Article 7(1) of the Convention.

Labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey carried out in 2019 by the National Institute of Statistics, Economic and Demographic Studies (MICS 6): (1) 39.3 per cent of children between the ages of five and 11 years are involved in an economic activity for at least one hour a week; (2) 23.4 per cent of children between the ages of 12 and 14 years are involved in economic activities for at least 14 hours a week; (3) 6.6 per cent of children between the ages of 15 and 17 years are involved in an economic activity for at least 43 hours a week; (4) many children between the ages of five and 11 years and 12 and 14 years are also involved in the performance of household work for more than 28 hours a week (16.8 and 30.7 per cent, respectively); and (5) in total, 39 per cent of children between the ages of five and 17 years are victims of child labour (38.5 per cent of boys and 39.6 per cent of girls), of whom 44.6 per cent work under hazardous conditions. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's indication that no complaints have been recorded by the labour inspection services in relation to child labour, despite its prevalence in the country. The Committee therefore expresses its deep concern at the situation of children below the age of 14 years in the country who are working, and at the significant number of children under 18 years of age who are working under hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to: (i) ensure the progressive elimination of child labour; and (ii) reinforce the capacities of the labour inspection services to detect cases of child labour in all the sectors of the economy, including the informal economy. In this regard, it requests the Government to: (i) continue providing statistical data disaggregated by sex and age category on the nature, extent and trends in work by children and young persons engaged in child labour; and (ii) provide information on the number of inspections carried out in relation to child labour, the number and nature of the violations detected and the types of penalties imposed.

The Committee reminds the Government that it can avail itself of ILO technical assistance with a view to bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that the Child Protection Code has not been adopted. It recalls that the preliminary draft text of the Child Protection Code, which prohibits the recruitment and use of young persons under 18 years of age in the national security forces and lays down penalties to that effect, also envisages the establishment of transparent, effective and accessible complaint procedures for cases of the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. The Government nevertheless indicates that Act No. 001/PR/2017 of 8 May 2017 issuing the Penal Code has been adopted and that, under the terms of section 370 of the Penal Code, any person who has facilitated the enrolment or use of children in armed forces or groups and their use in wars and armed conflict shall be liable to a sentence of imprisonment of from five to ten years and a fine of 1 million to 10 million CFA francs BEAC.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to the Security Council of 3 June 2024 on children and armed conflict: (1) cross-border conflicts and intercommunal violence have persistently affected children, especially those in the central Sahel and Lake Chad basin regions; (2) the United Nations verified 2,258 grave violations against 1,193 children (505 boys, 677 girls, 11 sex unknown) in the Lake Chad basin region, including 741 children who were victims of multiple violations, such as the recruitment and use of children (720 cases by rebel and foreign forces); (3) in Province du Lac, the United Nations verified 60 grave violations against 59 children by unidentified perpetrators, including 10 cases of the recruitment and use of children; and (4) the Secretary-General welcomed the efforts made by the Government of Chad to comply with its action plan on child recruitment and use, which was completed in 2014, and the 2014 handover protocol. He nevertheless reiterated his call to pursue accountability for violations against children and to ensure that all disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and social rehabilitation programmes consider the specific rights and needs of children who have been associated with armed groups (A/78/842-S/2024/384, 3 June 2024, paragraphs 8, 270, 271 and 272).

While noting that the Government armed forces no longer appear to be recruiting children, the Committee however notes with deep concern the continued use and recruitment of children by armed groups. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure: (i) the elimination in practice of the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and to undertake immediately the full demobilization of all children; (ii) in-depth investigations and the prosecution of any persons who engage in the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age for their use in armed conflict so that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are widely imposed in practice; and (iii) the adoption of the Child Protection Code as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken for this purpose.

Debt bondage, serfdom and forced or compulsory labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although forced labour, including debt bondage and slavery, is prohibited by the national legislation, and particularly by section 5 of the Labour Code, the practice of exploiting boys between the ages of 6 and 15 years to look after cattle (child herders) exists in Chad. This practice involves a contract for the hiring of services concluded between the child's parents or guardians and a stockbreeder who owns the cattle. The boy is paid in kind – one animal after one year's work – but is subject to semi-slavery in which it is difficult to maintain his identity and personality. The Committee notes the Government's general indication that it has established child protection committees in all the regions of the country to combat this practice. However, the Government has not provided information on the specific measures taken, including by child protection committees, to bring an end to the practice of child herders. Moreover, it notes that, according to the Government's report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) that: (1) the eradication of the exploitation of child herders is one of the Government's concerns; (2) the preliminary draft of the Child Protection Code will explicitly prohibit this practice; and (3) measures have been taken to strengthen the capacities of the actors involved in combating this practice, particularly through the management and sharing of information and the organization of awareness-raising campaigns (CRC/C/TCD/3-5, 16 July 2024, paragraph 131).

The Committee notes with concern that the practice of child herders persists. It recalls once again that, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It therefore urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children under 18 years of age against the practice of child herders as a matter of urgency; and (ii) ensure that investigations are carried out and prosecutions initiated against the perpetrators and that effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on persons found guilty of this practice, in accordance with the prohibition of forced labour set out in section 5 of the Labour Code. The Committee also requests the Government to: (i) provide information on this subject; and (ii) furnish a copy of the Child Protection Code once it has been adopted.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee notes that the new Penal Code continues to criminalize pimping (with heavier penalties where the crime is committed against a minor – sections 335 and 336). However, the Committee notes with regret that the Penal Code still does not contain a provision criminalizing the client and therefore the use of young persons under 18 years of age for prostitution. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation contains provisions specifically criminalizing a client who uses a child under 18 years of age for prostitution. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Clause (c). Use procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee notes with regret that the new Penal Code still does not contain any provision prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for illicit activities. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation contains provisions prohibiting and penalizing the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. It once again requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been enlisted and used in armed conflict. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report. However, it notes from the report of the Government to the CRC that: (1) in accordance with the Protocol agreement between the Government of the Republic of Chad and the United Nations System in Chad on the transfer of children associated with armed forces or groups of 10 September 2014, activities are carried out regularly for the identification, transfer and support of minors; (2) in April 2019, 25 children associated with armed forces and groups, of whom one was 15 years of age, thirteen were aged 16 years and eleven aged 17 years, were removed from the Koro Toro high security prison and placed in transit and guidance centres in N'Djaména for their care; (3) in April 2021, 96 minors were identified by the security forces and referred to the Ministry of Women, the Family and Child Protection for transitional care prior to family reunification; (4) the Boko Haram group makes frequent use of children for criminal activities, and as soon as the regular forces recuperate these children, they are transferred to the Ministry of Social Action, in partnership with UNICEF, for care and family reunification, with the Government accordingly reunifying 94 children associated with the Boko Haram group in 2016, including 13 girls, and 9 children in 2017, including 2 girls; and (5) within the context of this partnership, a Transit and Guidance Centre has been established in Bol, Province du Lac, which receives children associated with the Boko Haram group (CRC/TCD/3-5, 16 July 2024, paragraphs 168, 172, 173, 184 and 185). The Committee requests the Government to continue reinforcing its efforts and to pursue its collaboration with the United Nations and UNICEF with a view to preventing the enlistment of children in armed groups. It also requests the Government to continue taking measures to ensure that child soldiers are removed from armed groups and receive the necessary direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including reintegration into the school system or vocational training, as appropriate. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved in this respect, including the number of children who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration measures.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Mouhadjirin (talibés) children. The Committee notes from the report of the Government to the CRC that: (1) the eradication of the exploitation of mouhadjirin children is one of the concerns of the Government; and (2) the preliminary draft text of the Child Protection Code envisages the prohibition of this practice for economic exploitation (CRC/C/TCD/3-5, 16 July 2024, paragraph 131). The Committee recalls that, although seeking alms as an educational tool falls outside the scope of the Committee's mandate, it is clear that the use of children for begging for purely economic ends cannot be accepted under the Convention (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 483). The Committee therefore notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information since 2009 on the specific measures taken to protect mouhadjirin children from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of mouhadjirin children under 18 years of age from being victims of forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to withdraw them and provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken for this purpose, and the results achieved.

Child domestic workers. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government has not provided any information on this subject. It recalls that: (1) the abusive employment of children in domestic work has been observed in practice; and (2) the Government indicated previously that the sector was in the process of being regulated. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary time-bound measures to protect children engaged in domestic work from the worst forms of child labour, to remove them from such work and provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, particularly through the establishment of shelters equipped with the necessary resources. It requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the measures taken in this regard; and (ii) indicate whether regulations have been adopted on domestic work.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict by armed groups. The Committee also expresses its concern at the persistence of the practice of child herders, in which children are subject to semi-slavery, and the absence of information provided by the Government on the measures taken to end this practice. The Committee further notes with regret that, since 2009, the Government has not provided information on the measures taken to protect mouhadjirin (talibés) children from forced or compulsory labour. The Committee also notes with regret the continued absence of legislative provisions to prohibit and penalize the use of a child for prostitution and the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 90 of its General Report to be submitted to the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Hazardous work performed through work–study programmes. The Committee previously noted that: (1) 52.1 per cent of interns worked in conditions that did not meet national minimum standards for labour protection; (2) 14.8 per cent of interns were engaged in involuntary and coercive work; and (3) a significant number of schoolchildren were engaged in hazardous work within the context of work–study programmes.
